[illegible] was not until after the [illegible] was under control that firemen realized the real lure of the cinema Wild West. Instead of going home, the youngsters, both white and colored, stormed the box office, and protested the interruption.

The children, coralled by Board of Health Matron Mary McCord, waited impatiently for nearly an hour. Then they were permitted to return to the theatre, and see Gen. Custer die beneath the Indi[illegible] tomohawks all over again.

FIRE IN FILM THEATRE DOUBLES AUDIENCE

Children Swarm Through Door as No Tickets Are Needed When Show Resumes.

After smoke from a basement fire in the Eagle Theatre, 1,852 Third Avenue, had routed more than 750 persons, including [illegible] children, from the theatre yesterday [illegible] noon, police outside had a small riot on their hands when the children demanded to be readmitted to see the feature, "Custer's Last Stand."

The fire was in a rubbish pile and caused no damage. It was quickly extinguished and the doors were [illegible] the management had no way of telling which of the hundreds of children lining Third Avenue had been patrons half an hour before. Swarms of children converged on the entrance from all directions. A check-up later disclosed that there were 500 more children in the theatre after the fire than before.

KIDS ARE CALM IN MOVIE FIRE

The coolness of Miss Mary McCord, a matron of the Department of Health, aided by police and firemen, averted what might have been a panic among 1,500 spectators, 500 of whom were children, when fire was discovered yesterday in the basement of the Eagle Theatre, at 1852 Third Ave.

She walked down the aisles, calmly announcing there was a fire, and leading the packed audience to the street. From the stage Fireman Michael McCabe, at one time known in the ring as "Mickey McCabe," announced there was no danger. The fire in some waste [illegible] hill pos[illegible] was quickly [illegible] Then David Oberon, assistant manager, ordered the show resumed and every one of the 500 kids piled back to see "Custer's Last Stand."

CHILDREN GET LAUGH ON THEATER MANAGER

Audience, Readmitted Free After Leaving in Fire Scare, Found Strangely Swollen.

About 500 small children are having quite a laugh today at the expense of the manager of the Eagle Theater, at 1,852 Third Ave.

There was a slight fire in the theater yesterday afternoon and the audience of 750, including 500 children, were escorted out. When the blaze was extinguished the audience was readmitted—without tickets. Someone tipped off the neighborhood children that no tickets w[illegible] needed for entry and when the final count was taken it was found that double the number of children were in the theater after the fire.

Oh, yes—the feature was "Custer's Last Stand." The children enjoyed it very much.

1,500 Children Rush Movie After Fire

Fire in the basement of the Eagle Theatre, 1852 Third ave., near 103rd st., yesterday, caused orderly evacuation of 1,500 persons —and proved a boon to the children of the neighborhood.

Many of the 500 children, who paid to see "Custer's Last Stand," broke through a guard of eight policemen and staged a riot at the box office, demanding their money back. Police pushed them back.

An hour later, when announcement was made that fire in a basement storeroom was extinguished and the patrons might return and view the interrupted show, at least 1,500 children rushed in through the open doors.

guerite Churchill—It's not often a sequel becomes as good as its predecessor. But, if anything, this one is better than "Dracula," due largely to the excellent performance of Gloria Holden as Dracula's daughter. Good direction. Average box office value. Played September 2-3.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

EAST OF JAVA: Charles Bickford, Elizabeth Young—A very good animal picture. Double bill this picture to a good weekend business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

FIGHTING YOUTH: Charles Farrell, June Martell—Played late. Good action feature for any theatre at any time. Charlie is still good drawing card. Used to push a mean broom in his Dad's Onset, Massachusetts, theatre in the old days and loved horse opera. One of the few silent stars who made good with the talkies. Running time, 66 minutes. Played August 9-11.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. Downtown patronage.

IVORY HANDLED GUN: Buck Jones—I hope the coming season brings better Buck Jones westerns. This western was fairly good but Jones is capable of better than this.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

NOBODY'S FOOL: Edward Everett Horton, Glenda Farrell—A funny comedy. Especially okay in spots where Horton is liked. Played August 25.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SHOW BOAT: Irene Dunne, Allan Jones—Fine show. Good business. That boy can sing. Played September 3-4.—Kenneth Richardson, Richardson Theatre, Seneca, S. C. Small town patronage.

SILVER SPURS: Buck Jones, Muriel Evans—Fair show. Will pass in small towns. Running time, six reels. Played September 4-5.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

SUNSET OF POWER: Buck Jones—The usual western to the usual attendance. Played August 29.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

Warner Brothers

BIG NOISE, THE: Guy Kibbee, Warren Hull—Good entertainment. Lots of laughs and it will get by.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

COLLEEN: Dick Powell, Joan Blondell, Ruby Keeler—A real smart musical which didn't sell out but did business. Worth playing.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

GREEN PASTURES, THE: Rex Ingram—Was afraid of this picture and disappointed in the reaction of patrons who should have appreciated it, but greatly pleased by the response of the overall trade. It is the most delightfully different picture I have had the privilege of playing. Exhibitors should insist on their patrons seeing it from the start and should try for the kid trade especially. Contact Sunday schools and churches and invite the clergy for a preview showing wherever possible. Running time, 93 minutes. Played August 30-31-September 1.—Mary E. Lind, Ute Theatre, Rifle, Col. Small town patronage.

SATAN MET A LADY: Warren William, Bette Davis—There will be no Academy Award for Bette in this one, and that goes for William, too. It is a misfit as entertainment. It just didn't click. You can mark it down as a wasted date in any man's theatre.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SONS O' GUNS: Joe E. Brown, Joan Blondell—This picture was not so good. It drew just fairly well and the comments on it were not so favorable. Joe needs lots of good support and a good story to keep him in favor.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

SONS O' GUNS: Joe E. Brown, Joan Blondell—Usual Brown comedy that means we made a little money. Played August 24.—Kenneth Richardson, Richardson Theatre, Seneca, S. C. Small town patronage.

Short Features

EDUCATIONAL'S 1935-36 COMEDIES: In summing up our viewpoint on these so called comedies that were forced on us to get a feature contract approved, we must say that on the whole they've been pretty darned poor. Educational must do better than this to merit exhibitor and public approval.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacok, N. H. General patronage.

FARMER AL FALFA'S PRIZE PACKAGE: Paul Terry-Toons—Fair cartoon. Kiko the Kangaroo nothing to rave about unless better than in this one.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

WHERE IS WALL STREET: Tom Howard—Plenty of hokum that is bound to make the audience laugh. OK we say. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

ARBOR DAY: Our Gang—Below average comedy for the "Gang." Running time, 18 minutes.—E. W. Savage, Palace Theatre, Booneville, Ark. Small town and rural patronage.

AUDIOSCOPIKS: Special—Lots of fun in this novelty for your patrons. Something different, at any rate, but we didn't notice any pickup in business due to it although we advertised it well.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacok, N. H. General patronage.

AUDIOSCOPIKS: Special—Money thrown away. Just a repeat from the old silent days seven or eight years ago and the old single was better. Here is one to duck if possible. Running time, eight minutes.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. Downtown patronage.

DIVOT DIGGERS: Our Gang—A very funny Our Gang comedy. The kids sub for a country club's caddy boys and raise things in lively fashion for the players.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

HIT AND RUN DRIVER: Crime Doesn't Pay Series—The best one in this series to date.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

HONOLULU, PARADISE OF THE PACIFIC: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—One of the most beautiful travels I have ever seen. Comment very good. Running time, nine minutes.—E. W. Savage, Palace Theatre, Booneville, Ark. Small town and rural patronage.

MANHATTAN MONKEY BUSINESS: Charley Chase—The title is played up in full as the entire subject is just some monkey business and provides fun for all. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

OLD MILL POND, THE: Harman-Ising—Excellent color cartoon. Frogs do a Cab Calloway. Plenty of hot rhythm to this.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

PAN HANDLERS: Patsy Kelly, Pert Kelton—A good comedy. Pert Kelton would appear to better advantage had they let her be herself instead of trying to make her act and look like Thelma Todd.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

VAMP 'TIL READY: Charley Chase—A pretty good Chase comedy but not so good for kiddie entertainment as it's adult comedy.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

VICTORIA AND VANCOUVER: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—Beautiful color travelogue that is okay any place.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Norton

ALCHEMIST'S HOURGLASS, THE: This commercial stacks up as interesting material. Book it when you have an intelligent audience assured. They'll get the hang of it better and consequently will like it better.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Paramount

NO OTHER ONE: Hal Kemp and Orchestra—Average Screen Song.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

RKO Radio

ALIBI BYE BYE: Clark and McCullough—Old but fairly funny slapstick.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MISMANAGED: Radio Musical Comedies—Good musical numbers make this worth booking.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SALESMANSHIP AHOY: Four Star Comedies—Okay comedy.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SWING IT: Radio Musical Comedies—This is a hotter-than-hot musical offering from Louis Primo and his orchestra. Some liked it; some didn't.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

WINGED PAGEANTRY: Struggle to Live Series—Nice short picturing such birds as the pelican and other sea fowl. Picturesque.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

SHOOTING THE RECORD BREAKERS: Adventure of the Newsreel Cameraman—The usual thing from this series—action! Mostly air stuff this time.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

I'M A BIG SHOT NOW: Merrie Melodies—Very good color cartoon. Running time, seven minutes.—E. W. Savage, Palace Theatre, Booneville, Ark. Small town and rural patronage.

LITTLE JACK LITTLE AND ORCHESTRA: Melody Master Series—Good orchestra short. Good comment. Play this one if you have not already done so. Running time, 10 minutes.—E. W. Savage, Palace Theatre, Booneville, Ark. Small town and rural patronage.

SONG OF AT NATION, THE: Donald Woods, Claire Dodd—A beautiful historical subject in color. Do not think it made much of a hit as it is rather slow and like all educational subjects was appreciated by only a few.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

Serials

Universal

FLASH GORDON: Buster Crabbe, Jean Rogers—Just completed this serial and it certainly was a good one to get business.—Kenneth Richardson, Richardson Theatre, Seneca, S. C. Small town patronage.

EXHIBITOR-DISTRIBUTOR PROJECT IN BRITAIN APPROVED IN PRINCIPLE

$2,000,000 Capital Is Available Now If $100,000 Is Contributed by Theatre Men, Capt. Dixey Tells Gathering

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

At least 150 exhibitors attended a meeting at the Trocadero, London, at which Capt. A. C. N. Dixey explained the plan for a distributing company with exhibitor participation, already given preliminary publicity under the title of the Independent Exhibitors Distributing Company. Capt. Dixey is to explain the plan in six provincial key cities before October 8th.

Many members of the Council of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association were present, among them T. H. Fligelstone, the president, past-presidents R. H. Dooner and Randolph Richards, and the vice-president, C. P. Metcalfe. Sir Gordon Craig, A. J. Gale, J. Alexander, J. F. Prendergast, E. J. Hinge, H. Victor Davis, James Welsh, Ken Nyman and F. W. Morrison were other well known figures.

After a lengthy explanation of the proposal by Capt. Dixey, supplemented by his financial associates, and a considerable amount of questioning and discussion from the body of the hall, a resolution, proposed by F. W. Morrison and seconded by Major Milner, was passed unanimously: "That the proposed scheme be further proceeded with at once and that Capt. A. C. N. Dixey be requested forthwith to complete and circulate a draft prospectus giving all necessary information to the exhibitors who signify that they acquiesce in the scheme."

This result, expressed with a considerable amount of enthusiasm, was reached after a meeting which the promoters are entitled to describe as entirely successful. Capt Dixey, once a director of London Film Productions, and an ex-Member of Parliament, spoke very eloquently, and very candidly in reply to questions.

In essence the IEDC proposition, after his expansion of the preliminary statements, amounts to this:

Flotation of a company with a capital of £100,000 ($500,000), of which £25,000 would be contributed by not less than 300 exhibitors. £300,000 loan capital to be raised.

Four "pivotal" exhibitors to be members of the board, and exhibitors' committees to be appointed to advise on such matters as story selection.

Franchises to be granted to exhibitor shareholders giving them a definite preference on product, with a 10 per cent rejection clause on a full output. Special rejection rights in regard to the first year's estimated output of 15 films.

Rental costs to be less than 33⅓ per cent.

Main interest attached to Capt. Dixey's explanations in regard to product—several producing units named in the original statement having since disavowed any connection with the scheme—and to finance.

"They (producers) will be after you with the best product in England and the States," declared Capt. Dixey.

He said that if he obtained a quarter of his capital from exhibitors the full finance would present no difficulty at all, and this statement later was confirmed very explicitly by C. Austin Potter, director of the London and Western Counties Trust and associated financial syndicates, who said that he and his associates were "perfectly confident and prepared to find the finance, if exhibitors were prepared to support Capt. Dixey." Informally indicated during the proceedings was the fact that at need £1,000,000 would be available.

No organization, he said, could afford to exclude five hundred theatres from its trading. He indicated that the company would have sources of revenue outside its own shareholder-exhibitors, and with particular regard to the American market, added, "If I have five hundred theatres here and American distributors think their business worth having, that is useful if I am selling films to America." The IEDC "circuit," he said later, would be "a potent weapon" in obtaining American release.

No exhibitors were on the platform at the Trocadero meeting, where A. P. Webster, one of Capt. Dixey's financial associates, in the chair, was flanked by Capt. Dixey, Dr. Sternberg, joint author of the plan, G. Mervyn Heap, C. Austin Potter, Dr. Kirkby Green, Major Falgar and W. L. Dobbin. Mr. Heap, it is understood, will be largely concerned with organization of production; the other four are understood to represent financial interests.

Vaudeville Extension

Announcing formation of Jack Payne (Odeon), Ltd., as a subsidiary with the special purpose of providing dance bands and stage acts on a fifty-two weeks a year basis in the theatres controlled by Odeon Theatres, Ltd., Oscar Deutsch of Odeon and Jack Payne, one of the best known British stage and radio dance band leaders, indicated an important extension of the combination program in England.

It is proposed that Mr. Payne, on a long-term contract, visit each Odeon in turn with his own band.

The Odeon circuit will be 175 strong this year and its building plans are such that a total of 200 theatres would be reached very soon. Its adoption of cine-vaudeville is regarded as having been influenced by the plan of the Fred Bernhard Union circuit to feature opera in a combination of color film, stage show and organ.

For some time stage shows have been used consistently in a number of British super-theatres. Gaumont-British has them at the Dominion, Tottenham Court Road, and at various neighborhood and provincial theatres.

Paramount Theatres this week entered into a joint management contract with the Union circuit, primarily designed, it is believed, to give Union the benefit of the Paramount experience in this department.

The John Maxwell A. B. C. circuit also uses stage acts in some of its halls, as do the Hyams brothers, controlling the 4,000 seated Trocadero on the South Side, and Sidney Bernstein.

It is a general opinion that the extension of film-vaudeville finds its immediate inspiration in the product difficulties which face many British theatres.

Dr. Czinner Denies Shaw Charge That Play Was Censored

A definite denial of charges by George Bernard Shaw that the film adaptation of the play "St. Joan" had been censored by "Catholic Action" and the Hays organization in New York has been made in London by Dr. Paul Czinner, producer, who will make the film version of the Shaw drama.

"Never up to the present time has there been any official censorship of Shaw's 'St. Joan' or of any film version or treatment of the life of Joan of Arc," he said. The producer explained that he had attempted to obtain Catholic reactions to the script in order to avoid a "ban or possible objection from the Will Hays organization or the Church" in the United States. Dr. Czinner said that an American Church ban on the film "would have made it impossible to make a production of 'St. Joan' at all."

Accordingly, the producer continued, he sought an opinion on the script in Rome relative to possible objectionable parts. "These people studied the script very carefully and made notes of everything possibly objectionable," he added.

The author became excited on seeing the notes later, Dr. Czinner said, but the negotiations were continued with a view to getting complete, if unofficial, approval before beginning production. "The so-called Catholic censorship whereof Mr. Shaw complains is simply the development of this work of mine," the producer said. "The negotiations have been going on for more than a year and I am sure that as things stand now both sides will be satisfied in a very short time."

In a recent audience granted to George MacDonald, papal marquis of New York, Pope Pius XI said that he was sure his recent Encyclical on films would meet a warm reception in the United States. The Pope declared that he had "faith in the good sense of the American people" in their reaction to pictures.

Mr. MacDonald presented to the Pope a collection of clippings and documents relating the progress of the Legion of Decency campaign in the United States.

In Ontario, Canada, the Legion last week observed the ceremony of renewal of pledges. A circular letter dealing with films was prepared by the diocesan authorities and parish priests were directed to speak against immoral and indecent films. The pledge was read from pulpits and the congregations were asked to stand and, with right hands raised, to repeat the pledge to abstain from attendance at theatres where pictures are shown which have been reported as unworthy through Catholic channels.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CONTACTS INTO PROFITS

In reading over articles to be published shortly as part of the second series of the Showman's Travelogue, it is to be noted that in certain key spots here and abroad managers are found heartily engaged in all manner of community activities while in other centers the theatremen, either by inclination or held down by higher authority, do little to aid any cause that does not immediately reflect in bigger grosses.

It also occurs that while the "joiners" frequently are able to turn into profit the prestige and goodwill gained by participation in community affairs, it cannot be said in every instance that the grosses at the theatres of the "non-joiners" are penalized because of their seeming unwillingness to cooperate in outside activities. All of which again poises the query: How far should a manager go in giving of his time, talents and ofttimes, money, to these same outside activities?

There is no questioning, of course, the value of membership in the chamber of commerce, lunch clubs and similar organizations where close contacts with civic heads, leading merchants and educators are to be had and which contacts generally pay their way. There is wisdom also in bending a courteous ear to the wishes of the more important women's clubs a sthere is in doing a bit of campaigning now and then among fraternal organizations and suchlike.

But withal, these contacts are to be so guided that the demands of outside interests do not encroach unduly upon the manager's time and more important, his grosses. For there is always to be kept in mind that certain movements bearing every earmark of civic purity sometimes conceal personal "axes" that the unsuspecting manager may be the means of grinding.

In the final analysis, the theatreman has only seats to sell and the number of seats sold daily can be said to rise or fall in proportion to the strength of the entertainment he offers. How much these outside contacts can be depended upon to bolster grosses of indifferent programs and how much the lack of these same contacts can hurt the boxoffice on good pictures is something for each man to weigh carefully in his own situation.

BY KNOWING HANDS

It has been said before that a stunt is as good as the man who puts it over and that goes as well for ideas that many men too hastily throw into the discard. The thought is brought to mind by a communication from the Madison, Wis., Clarion Record wherein the paper in its "Ace of the Week" column, lists Manager Ed Benji's invitation extended through the local dailies and accepted by 300 residents to sleep at the air-conditioned Capitol Theatre during a recent heat spell.

Curious, isn't it, that a stunt carrying all earmarks of age and hard usage can in the hands of the lad who knows his way around be given new life and obtain plenty of page one publicity?

There are different ways of saying it and perhaps because he is located in the heart of the wheat country, Simon Meretsky likens the showman's efforts to those of the toiler in the field. Wisely speaks as follows the Winnipeg Famous Players-Canadian executive:

"Putting over shows is like a farmer sowing wheat. If you just scatter seed and the rain comes, perhaps there will be a crop. But if you sow industriously and tend the growing wheat, you may look forward to a full crop and its resultant harvest."

PIGSKIN POSSIBILITIES

The increase in the number of campaigns reported to this department by Round Tablers to avail themselves of 1936 football popularity definitely establishes a wider horizon in pigskin possibilities for profits.

There are two added factors this year that emphasize the boxoffice angles in tying in with the current season. The first is the spread of the professional game and the second is the increase in the number of commercially sponsored radio broadcasts of big time college games.

Smart showmen for many years have done themselves a lot of good by beating on the drum to publicize local contests and on another page, Gus Lampe, who for many years has been close to the Syracuse team, jots down a few observations on the value of the football bally and how to go about it.

From the suggestions in this issue and others to be run next week, aspiring showmen should garner enough ideas to enable them to climb aboard the bandwagon wherever football carries the local headlines.

General Custer Club Started by Stribling

Joe Stribling, Erie Theatre, Hugo, Okla., went after the kids in his town by forming a club in connection with "Custer's Last Stand" with free candy given the juveniles at the first chapter, and ice cream cones to those attending the second.

Scrap books were distributed and each week photos of the leads from the picture were given out; all of these contained a star printed at the bottom. When the star was moistened, 15 of them turned red, and to those kids holding the lucky star, free ticket to next chapter was given. At the end of the series, kid turning in best prepared scrap book received a projector.

All members got a chance at a national prize by writing a letter on "Why I Like," etc., accompanied by 10 coupons that were attached to bottom of each photo awarded weekly members.

Red stencil in form of Indian head was planted on main streets, kiddie parade was held, all of them wearing Indian suits and carrying banners and Indians from local orphanage headed the parade.

Girls' Kiltie Band Marches for "Scotland"

Harry McDonald, Warner Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., ushered in "Mary of Scotland" with a girl's Scotch kiltie band consisting of 22 pieces which paraded the theatre, girls wearing the short skirts and other regulation apparel of the clans. Harry reports the band created such a sensation it was necessary to call out the police reserves.

Window displays were secured in choicest locations, featuring plaids and modern versions of "Mary of Scotland" costumes, announcements were stuffed in boxes of hotels and apartments and six large lobby setpieces were up two weeks ahead.

Theatre Contests Now Running for Prize Campaigns

With the addition of the $1,000 in cash now offered for the best campaigns on the Twentieth Century-Fox "Ramona," there are now three contests current in which managers and publicity men can win cash prizes and automobiles. The "Ramona" money, split into 10 prizes, is offered for the theatremen who are able to most effectively tiein the radio popularity of Don Ameche, star of the "First Nighter" program with his appearance in the picture.

First prize is $350; second, $200; third, $100; fourth, $75; fifth to ninth prizes, $50 each, and $25 to the tenth winner. Contest is open until Dec. 31 of this year.

Another featured money contest which also runs to the end of the year and has been current for some time is on Warner Bros. "Bengal Tiger," which is reported to be gathering lots of momentum from the entries of theatremen in all parts of the country. The best campaigns on "Tiger" will mean $1,000 for seven fast-stepping theatremen, who will divide it, $350, $250, $150, $100, $75, $50 and $25.

The offer of three new model Packard autos for the best campaigns on RKO Radio's "Swingtime" continues to command attention from theatremen.

Of the first 89 bookings, only three theatremen were reported to have missed out on entering the contest. RKO Radio also announces that as the population of New York City places the metropolis in a separate classification, there will be an additional prize of a Packard for the best campaign entered by a New York showman within the contest's time limits.

Theatre "Show Boat" Float Wins Prize in Carnival

The appearance of a "Show Boat" float complete with calliope playing, paddle wheels revolving and with "crew" made up as characters from the picture was entered in the Canterbury Carnival and took down first prize for the Leicester Square Theatre in London, England. Float toured streets and was also stationed on the carnival grounds while its calliope played hit tunes from picture.

Patrons at First Show Invited to 20th Anniversary

At the opening performance of the Capitol Theatre, in Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, Canada, 20 years ago, photos of the audience were taken and the shots utilized in August of this year to celebrate the 20th anniversary in a very unique manner. Manager E. P. Fields struck on the idea of inviting all those who were on hand for the first show to be his guests at the celebration and those eligible were identified from the early photographs. Anniversary's opening day was also plugged with another slant wherein couples married during that period were given a wedding dinner on the house.

These human interest angles were not ignored by the papers which also cooperated otherwise in publicizing the event. Double page of merchants' congratulatory ads was run with theatre streamer across the spread and the dailies too aided in putting across a candle contest which offered a prize of $25 for exact time candle would burn and $10 to the next nearest. Guess coupons were given with admissions. Merchants also advertised anniversary sales and some stores offered wearing apparel for all babies born during the week of celebration, two couples taking advantage of the offer.

Mayor Cuts Birthday Cake

Monster birthday cake weighing nearly 600 pounds and placed in downtown window (see photo) commanded attention especially as the ingredients used in the baking and quantities of each were posted alongside of the giant pastry. On opening day the Mayor cut the cake in the window for entertainment of the crowds gathered for the ceremony. Donated flowers were given to women patrons and cigars to the men.

Fields borrowed large spots from his oil-lighting company to illuminate the building and had a 12-foot replica of the cake built atop the marquee illuminated with colored lights. Further publicity was obtained by Fields with the distribution of 4,000 souvenir booklets, 36 pages in size and carrying outside advertising. Cab tieup was made with offer of return trip free.

Moose Jaw is a city of 18,000 and Fields in reporting this as one of his most successful anniversaries in his 18 years at the theatre suggests that there may be ideas included to aid other members.

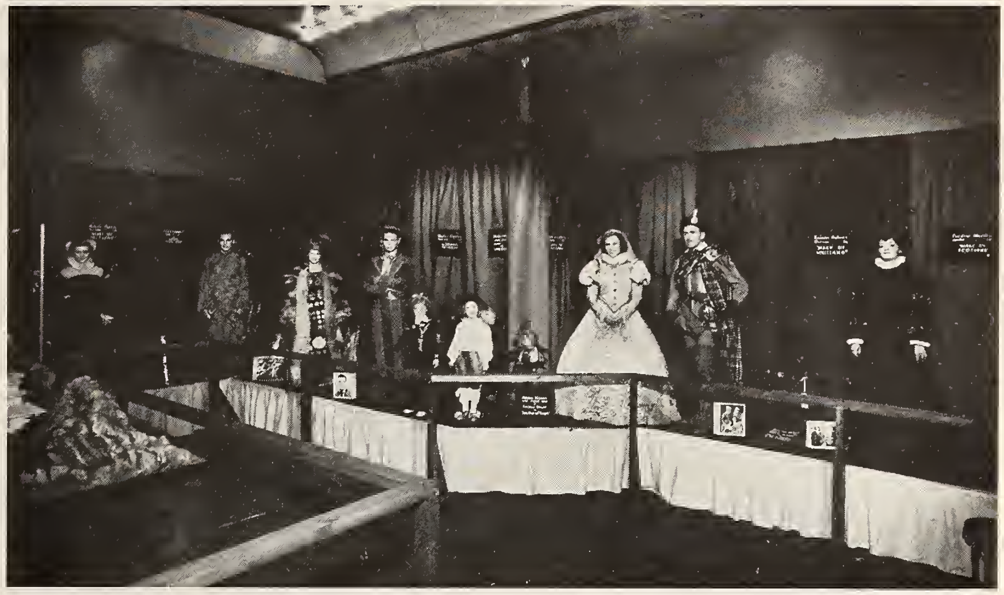
"Gates of Hollywood" Flash Featured At Harris Anniversary Exposition



As part of the recent celebration of the fortieth anniversary of the Harris Amusement Companies, of Pittsburgh, John H. Harris sponsored a three-day exposition at the local Duquesne Gardens where were featured displays of all kinds. Unique among them was the living billboard idea with original costumes used in leading productions worn by characters who impersonated the stars. Explanatory cards informed spectators who was who. Original props were also shown, the entire idea called "Gates of Hollywood" proving one of the highlights of the exposition. Dancing was offered each evening and an automobile given as a door prize.

Comic Strip Contest Planted by Botwick

For a week ahead of opening of "Texas Rangers," Harry Botwick, State Theatre, Portland, Maine, effected a tieup with the Portland Evening Express, running ballot boxes each evening on the comic page, listing the titles of the various strips. Guest tickets, cash and merchandise prizes were awarded to those submitting best 25 word letters on why contestants liked their favorite comics.

Teaser Campaign Sells "Things to Come"

Twelve days ahead of opening of "Things to Come," W. Clyde Smith, Paramount, Hot Springs, Ark., ran a teaser campaign, local papers ran the five chapter serialization comic strip and an eight-inch streamer across top of Sunday's theatrical section with special two-column head editorial and art work.

Boy scout parade was held, boys carrying banners and wearing pasteboard helmets in keeping with nature of picture, theatre employees wore imprinted arm bands in advance and during showing and a whispering campaign was put on by local newspaper carriers.

Indians Pitch Tents For "Mohicans" Date

Outstanding stunt in Fred Perry's "Last of the Mohicans" campaign at the Capitol Theatre in Bingham, N. Y., was the promotion of seven Indians currently playing at the State Fair, to pitch tepees in front of the theatre and stage demonstrations during the showing; the men also exhibited a complete collection of Indian relics.

Department store featured a Mohican red window, five and ten plugged Indian toys and penknives and paper came through with a classified ad contest offering tickets to those rewriting ads on the page as they might have been written during the Mohican days. Superintendent of Schools was induced to urge students to attend picture and furniture store featured a window of colonial furniture, mentioning picture in their ads.

Hinks Enters Truck In Charity Parade

Accompanying photo shows publicity stunt used by W. Hinks, Alex Cinema, Paisley, Scotland, for "It Happened in Hollywood." The tableau was one of a procession of over 50 vehicles which paraded streets of Paisley with a view to raising money for the Royal Alexandria Infirmary.

Those on top of the lorry were dressed in garb of the operating theatre and were about to perform a surgical operation on "Scarface Dawson," public pest No. 1, who was having his face lifted prior to a film engagement. Hinks reports there were many amusing incidents during the parade; a mallet was used instead of chloroform to put the patient to sleep, after which the surgeon's knife could be seen being sharpened on a butcher's steel. Work was started on the patient's stomach, while all sorts of trick gadgets were extracted.

Torrante Promotes Relics For "Last of Mohicans"

A large display of Indian relics was promoted by Harry R. Torrante, Aldine Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa., from the University of Pennsylvania Museum and placed in leading department store window with conspicuous theatre and playdate mention. Effective tieups on Mohican red, jewelry and books were planted in important windows in shopping districts.

Torrante also planted a 13 day radio transcription with spot announcements of the dramatization running each day, commentator reading excerpts from reviews. Special displays were placed on both side walls of the theatre with colored enlargements on background of birch bark composition. Electric lighted letters 60 inches high announced title at the corner of theatre building, while opening date was hung in lights on the marquee.

Quins Arrive at Strand In Form of Five Kittens

Not to be outdone by the Dionnes, Francis J. Faille, Strand Theatre, Pittsfield, Mass., broke local dailies during his "Country Doctor" engagement with photos and stories of the cat that wandered into the theater's check room and had quintuplets for herself. Francis named the kittens, Marie, Yvonne, Cecile, Emelie and Annette, though he does admit to a slight discrepancy, since a couple of them were males.

Jumbo Telegram Sent To Mayor by Fry

A six-foot jumbo telegram addressed to the Mayor (see photo) inviting him to the opening of "Last of the Mohicans" was carried through streets of Nashville by telegraph boys as a street bally put on by B. E. Fry, of Loew's Vendome. Fry also arranged another stunt which grabbed a lot of publicity when he awarded guest tickets to 100 boys who presented petitions bearing a stipulated number of signatures.

Prominent intersections were stenciled in advance and covered by pole tack cards. Special displays, throwaways, blotters, warning cards, etc., were distributed in restaurants and sound truck paraded streets.

WHAT IS GOOD ADVERTISING?

The Proper Points to Observe And What to Avoid Are Covered In Ohio Round Tabler's Article

by MORT GOODMAN
Warner Theatres Publicist, Cleveland

Briefly, good advertising differs from bad advertising in six elements. They are:

Intelligence of plan.
Soundness of copy.
Attractiveness of design.
Significance of illustration.
Quality of printing.
Correctness of circulation.

Intelligence of plan . . . how important that is! Have you ever seen an ad that seemed to be groping in the dark, one that seemed to lack a definite goal? You can be sure that this type of ad was written without any forethought, without any plan. If an ad writer has previously thought out and decided a definite plan of attack, then his finished ad is bound to have a directness of sales force, a certain sincerity, it's bound to hold together. First decide the central thought that you want to get over in your ad, and then make all of the component parts of the ad center toward that one goal.

Is Your Copy Sound?

Soundness of copy . . . how many ads have failed because of the positive absurdity of what the copy writer has said. Remember that you are paying good money for the space that you buy in the newspapers and don't be satisfied to let any old thing get into your ad. Weigh the importance of one piece of copy as against another. Does it sell? That's all important. Does it have tempo? Does it move? Does it have swing? Is it sincere, or does it smack of triteness—something that has been said so many times that the public could recite it by heart? Are you convinced that if you were a layman reading your piece of advertising that it would sell you?

Don't make your ad too involved. Make it simple enough for a little child to understand. Don't use any words that you think your porter wouldn't understand. If the body of your copy contains a series of sentences, make them brief and to the point. Don't ramble. People reading your ad haven't a lot of time to mull over things, trying to figure them out. If you don't make it easy for them they'll pass you by and look at the other fellow's ad.

Attractiveness of design . . . it is well to bear in mind when designing a layout for an ad that your ad will be only one among many on a page when it finally gets into the paper. This will prove to you how important attractiveness of design is. An ad can be perfect in every other respect, but if it fails to hit the reader right in the eye (by its design) then the ad has completely missed its fire. We realize how tough it is to get small town newspapers to cooperate with you in the composition of layouts, but we also know that any ad writer at all interested in creating successful ads can, by the clever use of rules, borders, and originality of layout, conceive ads that a compositor in the smallest town can set up and make look attractive. In a succeeding article in this series we will attempt to give you a few pointers on how you can dominate a page even with a very small ad.

Significance of illustration . . . it has often been said that every picture tells a story—and how true that is in advertising. Powerful illustration can tell 10 times the story that words can. Some of the best ads ever written have carried hardly any copy at all, but have trusted to the tremendous force of an illustration to drive home their point.

Copy and Art Must Jibe

Be sure that copy and illustration sell the same thing. Don't talk about one thing in your text and have an illustration that has nothing at all to do with your subject matter. The writer remembers seeing an ad that was trying to sell heavy machinery and it used an illustration of a woman rocking her baby to sleep. If the text had tied this illustration up with the product being sold, then there would have been some justification for it, but the copy simply disregarded the illustration and as a result lost its value.

Quality of printing . . . this is something over which the average manager has little control, being completely at the mercy of the newspaper or printer in this respect. However, it is well to remember that the finest ad in the world can be spoiled by faulty typography and imperfect printing. If you find that your newspaper is using an inferior grade of ink, if the printed page is hard to read, you certainly have reason to go to the head man and ask for a square break. After all, the success of your ad depends greatly upon its readability.

Correctness of circulation . . . this is all important. Are you sure you are reaching all of your potential patrons? Do you think you have covered the area by simply taking your ads in the daily papers? Might it not be wise in checking the circulation of these papers in small surrounding communities? Does your local paper completely cover these towns or might it be a good idea to spend a little money with the smaller community publications?

The above are things to think about.

Calf Riding Stunt Aids 'Range' Date

Tieing in, first with a model bazooka contest and second with a calf-riding stunt, Raleigh Sharrock found these quite helpful in putting over his "Rhythm on the Range" date at the Palace, Morrilton, Ark. Contests were held at the ball park with prizes of wrist watches and guest tickets. Sharrock named the calf, "Cuddles, Jr."

The riding gag was put over with a lot of attention. Baseball heralds carried notice of the picture, parade of horses, riders and bannered cars covered the city before proceeding to the ball park led by the Morrilton Boys' Band. Stock for the riding was promoted with stockmen aiding as judges.

For his front, Sharrock had a lot of cactus plants brought to the theatre and had the folks curious as the plants are rarely seen in his part of the country. Log slabs were placed around the box-office, saddle rack (see photo) displayed numerous saddles borrowed around the county and spurs, blankets, ropes, bridles, etc., were also used for display. Giant bazooka was hung across the marquee.

Local Reporter Interviews Burns

In advance, Raleigh took local reporter to Little Rock to interview Bobby Burns, visiting there at that time, the story breaking the front page. The mayor of Van Buren, Burns' home town, and relatives of the star were invited to the opening and copies of the special edition of the star's home town paper in honor of his visit were distributed widely.

Tieups included Quaker Oats displays in groceries over the territory, Kraft Cheese window cards, Crosby die-cut heads, and Movie Star streamers placed in prominent windows. Banners were hung across the main street and in ace filling stations, posters and heralds with other publicity distributed in a 25-mile range in the excellent drive that netted Sharrock one of the two First Mentions given in the August Awards.

The other "First" was taken down by Les Pollock, of Loew's, Rochester, N. Y., for his smart campaign on "Last of the Mohicans." Details of the Pollock entry were highlighted in the Round Table, issue of August 29, in which was described the top slants of his work with Indian ballys, newspaper tieups, parades, Indian curio exhibits in the lobby and other angles that commanded deserved attention.

Further Standout Gridiron Slants

As Carter Barron, Loew's eastern division manager, is known to fame as a former All-Southern fullback, for his gridiron skill while at Georgia Tech, it is fitting that football activities in Washington, D. C., where Barron headquarters are tied in during the season with the various Capital college teams. With his publicist, Ray Bell, Barron arranges to have attendance from local schools at Loew's Capitol Theatre on the nights preceding home games with the home teams and the opposition players on hand as guests.

Cheer-leaders are recruited from each school with audiences invited to join the yells. These affairs are plugged on sport pages and on the radio. Bell reports the idea helpful to the grosses as many folks are on hand to get a close-up of their gridiron stars.

In the columns to right, Gus Lampe sets down some valuable stuff on football tieins based on his many years of experience and here are outlined further slants that members have worked last year and in many spots have the call for the coming season. Among them of course is the ever reliable football rally at the theatre which Gus recommends on big pictures. It also has been worked on the eve of an important local game and here is a method that has paid its way.

Usual procedure is to reserve a number of special tickets, limited to no more than 500, to be sold at a discount by the student body only to students and not at the box-office. Special section is reserved and students seated at one time. Theatre is decorated with flags of both schools and an important part of the proceedings includes stage program with participation of coaches, cheer leaders, introduction of players, etc.

Rally usually held at night calls for a parade to theatre. Led by university bands, etc., procession with theatre banners is to be routed round town to cover the main section with students in a body entering theatre while band plays out front.

Other Effective Pigskin Ideas

Special "nights" for different schools is another feature that Lampe endorses and has been found effective in metropolitan sectors where there is more than one school. Theatres are decorated in the usual manner and as many of the rally ideas used as possible. For this space in student papers is advisable and also distribution of advertising literature at different local games.

The score-guessing slant promises to be much bigger this season and on this, prizes are given for those coming nearest to guessin the scores of a certain number of listed games. Idea was used last year in the herald form, current games listed with blanks for the scores, space at bottom for names and addresses with additional copy for the picture. Guesses were left at theatre with passes to those coming nearest to the actual scores.

Dick Wright likes the idea of getting local store or stores with large student and fan patronage to sponsor newsreel shots of important games. Sponsor is credited in the newsreel and in turn is to publicize the shots in newspaper advertising and publicity. Theatre of course builds up the extra attraction at the same time.

THOSE FOOTBALL CONTACTS

Lampe Suggests Effective Ideas Found Successful in Tieing In With High Schools and Colleges

by GUS LAMPE

District Manager, RKO Schine Theatres
Syracuse, N. Y.

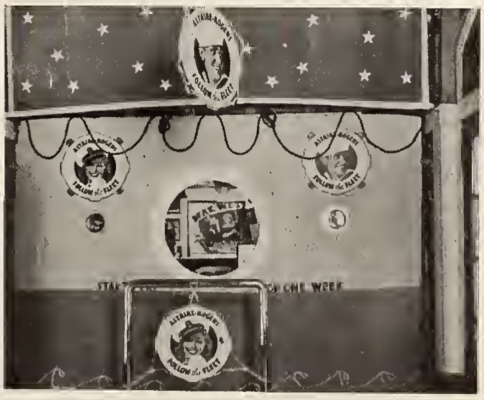
In the running of football stunts in connection with high schools or universities, the manager must remember that it is very important to extend courtesies to the athletic coaches throughout the year. Most managers make the mistake of ignoring these coaches until such time as that particular activity is in full swing. The smart manager will anticipate baseball, football, basketball, track and boxing tie-ups by keeping in close touch with the athletic office with the high school or university throughout the year. It is so much nicer to have this continual 12-month association than to run to the football coach the opening game of the year and expect wonders to be worked in a week.

The foundation to athletic cooperation must be made by the manager with profit as a last thought. The original intent is primarily for good-will. The financial end will then take care of itself as stunts and deals are worked out.

Where a manager is situated in a college town or city, he must realize that they have visiting teams who generally come into a town the day before a game is played, and naturally the visiting coach and players have considerable time on their hands. So, the smart thing to do is when the local university releases their basketball or football schedule to the public is to write the various graduate managers of athletics, and invite the team to your theatre the night they are in your city. Then meet the team at the door and personally escort them to a special section of your theatre, and at the break of your show introduce the coach and captain of the visiting team wishing them good luck, etc.

The next move for the manager is to spend time getting acquainted with the players of his local university. Go up to the practice field, have dinner at the training table occasionally, know them by their first names, and have them get to know you by your first name. The more intimate the contact, the more lasting the tie-up.

"Please forward copies of your house organ"



THE FLEET'S IN. Milton Bishof and Al Poos, Lindell Theatre, St. Louis, Mo., went marine for "Follow the Fleet," planting life savers with cutouts of stars and porthole around boxoffice.

At that point it is very easy to hold football rallies on the outstanding pictures. By football rally I do not mean just have a team parade to the theatre with a banner. We are on our way to the "Blank" Theatre—but what I mean a successful rally is to get the entire school behind it—having it mentioned in the classes, getting it on the fraternity bulletin boards, having the faculty participate, and after they have marched to the theatre, introduce the team individually from the stage, use the university orchestra or band in the pit and use the cheer leaders in their regular regalia from the stage. You would be surprised how your patrons who may have no interest in university activities will fall into the spirit of the occasion and participate in the activities.

Successful university contacts are not accidental, but should be planned over a series of years as you would on a thorough campaign on an outstanding picture, the only difference being the picture campaign would last approximately two or three weeks, and university contact would last indefinitely. This contact can also be further carried through on any outstanding pictures that may warrant a university or high school support that has nothing to do with athletics, but where you could get into the school bulletin board and have your show announced in classes. Where there are no universities, but where there are high schools the same principle can be applied—having special nights for different schools. One may even go so far as to run a single frame trailer on the coming football games telling the people to get behind the team and the school.

Contacts Bring College Business

I have not only found the above ideas to be good business, but have also developed a friendship and acquaintance with these boys and coaches that have become a very important factor in my efforts that have been very beneficial. Syracuse University has 5,600 students, all potential theatre goers, and due to my concentrated efforts in the past seven years the RKO Schine Theatres in Syracuse do 70 per cent of the university business.

This is another angle to think about. Every prominent athlete is more or less hero worshipped on the campus, and the crowds will follow the hero.

In summing up the fundamentals of show business, we have always been taught to build good-will for our theatres which is more essential than an outstanding campaign due to the fact that campaigns come and go, but good-will is permanent.

Do not overlook your high school and university business. It is really educating the younger people to go to theatres, and you are building a permanent foundation for the industry as a whole by cultivating them to the motion picture habit.

I have selected several replies to Section A for publication. C. Rau and S. Evans say:

"The one most important item in sound reproduction is perfect naturalness, which means that the combination of visual effect and sound shall be such as will give the illusion of reality to the performance. Manufacturers of sound equipment strive to put into it those things that will enable the production of exactly the same sound the microphone 'heard.' But to get that from a machine of course requires skill of high order and much tinkering in order to secure exactly the correct adjustments, etc. Because of auditorium acoustics, it may be necessary to attenuate certain frequencies which are close to the fundamental frequencies of the building itself, and to build up others. The equipments are, however, tuned as exactly as possible to give naturalness in tones, but volume level must be closely watched and regulated lest it destroy the effect of naturalness."

D. Danielson says, "The one most important thing with regard to sound is to convey to audiences the illusion of complete naturalness. The impression must be conveyed that the sound comes from the source it would be expected to come from. It must not be mechanical."

Here is another from B. DeVietti: "Realism is the one most important thing in sound projection; realism to the end that the reproduced sound will be the exact counterpart of the original sound 'heard' by the mike in the studio, or other place where it was recorded."

L. Cimikoski puts it this way:

"The one most important thing to achieve in sound reproduction and projection is naturalness, by which is meant a mirror-like reproduction of the original sound. Every conscientious projectionist strives to cause theatre patrons, so far as is possible, to forget they are viewing a motion picture with accompanying sound and to regard the scene as real, with living people and actual objects throughout the scene.

"If this situation be created, it cannot continue to exist if the sound be permitted to become too loud or too low, since then an unnatural situation is set up; or if conversation is hard to understand or is unnatural from any one or more of the possible causes. Even a missed changeover cue will spoil the illusion by breaking the continuity."

Here is another reply to Section A, from William C. Brown: "The one most important item in sound projection is its true, life-like reproduction. Such reproduction builds up the illusion of realism and is far more pleasing to audiences. When, for example, a woman sings it must seem exactly as though the actual, living woman were there. When a person speaks it must be clear and distinct, so that every word is understandable without conscious effort, and not so that it sounds either boomy or tinny."

H. B. Smith replies as follows to Section B: "The width of the rotating shutter blades is in proportion to the speed of the intermittent movement. Since (save for a small space at closing and opening) the lens must be closed while the film is in motion over the aperture, it follows that the more rapid the intermittent movement speed, the shorter the time the lens must remain closed, and therefore the greater the amount of light will reach the screen. At pesent the accepted speed is three to one."

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 42

(A) Is it ever permissible to use a switch for higher voltage or amperage than its rating? And should all circuit switches be inclosed in cabinets?

(B) What is meant by "hunting" and what is its effect? Where would you seek for its cause?

To join the Bluebook School merely send in answers. Place name and question number upon first sheet. Address F. H. Richardson, No. 3 Tudor Lane, Scarsdale, N. Y.

C. Champney replies, "The relation between intermittent movement speed and width of the shutter master blade is that since the lens must be covered, or nearly so, while the intermittent sprocket is in motion, it follows that the faster the movement the less time the lens must be covered—or put another way, the shorter the time the light beam must be broken."

George Artley says, "The question dwindles down to the fact that the shorter the time the intermittent sprocket is in motion, or the faster the intermittent movement, the less width of shutter blades will be required."

D. Pollock answers, "Light costs money. A motion picture is a succession of flashes of light upon the screen, the duration of which is dependent, within limits, upon the time the projection lens is covered by the rotating shutter blades and, again within limits, the width of these blades is dependent upon the rapidity or speed of the intermittent movement of the projector. The relation between speed of movement and width of shutter blades is financial, for a slow speed means wide blades and therefore wasted light, and wasted light means wasted money. Also a slow speed means added flicker tendency, and that hits the box office in its financial eye."

Capitalizations Reduced

The International Projector Corporation and the National Theatre Supply Company have reduced their capital, according to the Delaware secretary of state. International Projector cut to the extent of $2,490,000, or from $3,000,000 to $510,000. Earle G. Hines is president. National Theatre Supply reduced to the extent of $2,747,418.80, or from $3,256,659.93 to $509,241.13.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ended September 19, 1936, from 112 theatres in 18 major cities of the country was $1,299,990, a decrease of $276,944 from the total for the preceding week ended September 12, 1936, when 112 theatres in 18 large cities aggregated $1,576,844.

CHICAGO INDEPENDENTS TALK CLEARANCE SUIT

Saperstein Says Allied Will Go to Court in Effort to Obtain Adjustment; To Fight Duals

by WILLIAM F. CROUCH
in Chicago

"We're going to court," was the comment of Aaron Saperstein, president of Allied Theatres, following a conference with the theatre groups' attorneys, Rosenberg, Toomin and Stein, on Monday. "Just what action we will take has not been decided upon," said Saperstein. "Our attorneys are working out a plan of action that we hope will clarify the clearance situation here."

The granting of an extra weeks' clearance to the Balaban and Katz theatres by the major distributors has been the cause of much dissension this fall in Chicago. This extra seven days clearance is between "C" week and the first week of release, and, according to the managers of first-week and second-week houses, it works upon them an undue hardship by putting their playdates far behind other houses comparatively.

The Allied group weeks ago halted buying of new product when it was learned that the extra clearance had been given to B&K. This has resulted in bringing city film sales to a standstill. The amount of rentals tied up by this action runs into the tens of thousands of dollars and this condition will probably continue until federal authorities have had time to investigate the situation, according to reports from Allied and other independent leaders.

At the same time the threatened protest is made to the U. S. Attorney General regarding the clearance situation a protest against B&K starting double features will be filed, it is asserted. The major circuit is planning to start the twin-bills within the next few weeks and, after being on a single feature basis for four years and finding it very profitable, the independents are much against the dual policy.

As means of fighting the double features, Allied's attorney, it is learned, will use parts of the brief filed in the Pennsylvania Supreme Court by Paramount several years ago when that company was fighting the dual-bill situation there. It will be a sort of "turning the tables" proposition, as the arguments used to stop the independent theatremen from using duals will now be used by the independents in an effort to stop the circuits from doing the same.

Negotiations for the new operators' contract with local theatremen have been sidetracked the last week on account of the activity on the clearance fight. The two factions expect to get at their negotiating during the coming week and see if they can't agree on terms that will prove satisfactory to all concerned. To date the union is still demanding a 20% raise in pay and the theatremen are asking for a 10% decrease in the present salaries.

The entrance of dual bills in this territory will be delayed still further, it is learned, due to the number of big box office pictures which are showing currently. B&K executives feel that these pictures are drawing too well to play them on double bills and for that reason are holding off the starting of the twin features until such a time as it is felt the product will be more suitable to such a plan. With "Anthony Adverse," "The Great Ziegfeld," "My Man Godfrey," "Swing Time" and other films drawing heavy crowds at every theatre where they play, the B&K theatre men feel it is best to wait until they have played the "C" week houses before starting the duals. This will postpone the starting date for this policy until the middle of October or later.

"The Great Ziegfeld," which is now showing at the Apollo is in its 20th week in the loop. The MGM special opened here last spring at the Erlanger at advanced prices on a two-a-day policy. After 13 big weeks the picture was shelved for a time and then put into the United Artists, where it did six weeks at popular prices. Last week it was moved across the street to the Apollo and is continuing its run there. This is the longest engagement any picture has had in the Chicago loop since 1930.

The Paramount News staff here plans to cover three football games for local specials this fall. The games to be shot for local and national consumption are the Notre Dame-Ohio state contest, the Northwestern-Notre Dame game and the Northwestern-Illinois battle.

Stopping over between trains, Adolph Zukor spent a couple of hours visiting with John Balaban. Paramount's plans for the coming season were discussed both from a production and exhibition standpoint.

Jacob Wilk, Warners' story chief, spent part of a day here while enroute to New York from the coast. Mr. Wilk outlined plans for the opening of "White Horse Inn" to the local scribes and told of productions now being finished in the coast studios. He reported that a new production just announced was the "Hollywood Hotel" picture which will be based on the radio program idea of the same name. Mr. Wilk was host to the Chicago critics at a luncheon at the Blackstone while here.

Mr. and Mrs. Wayman Robertson are proud parents of twins, a boy and a girl. Robertson is a soundman with Paramount News.

Ben Eisenburg, branch manager for the B. F. Judell Exchange, has resigned to accept a position with Grand National, according to an announcement made by Earl Silverman, who is in charge of the local Grand National office. F. Harthill succeeds Eisenburg at the Judell exchange.

FROM READERS

URGES FREEDOM TO EXPRESS BELIEF

To the Editor of the Herald:

I am inclined to the belief that your editorial anent the WPA and their prospective production of "It Can't Happen Here" must surely have been written in haste and without forethought. Certainly, no one who has given the matter any attention can be so utterly rash in their statements. I refuse to accept the implication that theatre men could be so money-grubbing, so callous in their desire for gain, that they could entirely disregard the elements that, assembled, form the nucleus of our national creed.

Your diatribe cast a very sad shadow, inneed, on an industry of which, I am proud to say, I am a member—an insignificant member, no doubt, but one not so completely submerged in the entrails of the treasury that vision is obscured. I am not an altruist. I do not conceive a motion picture made solely for the expression of art. I do not ask that any producer flaunt the infallibiltiy of Mr. Hays, and presume to disregard his utterances.

Only this, I say, is essential to American liberty: that any one, any group, governmental or otherwise, be permitted the freedom to express his, or their, beliefs.

You write of the tax-payers' money being spent on such a venture. Is that wise? Are not the tax-payers the industry's only support? Were not the same constituents refused the privilege of seeing the motion picture version of "It Can't Happen Here?" Why? Because they did not want to see it? Nonsense. Because the producers have not the courage to defy their Wall Street gods!

Furthermore, are you so blind that you cannot see the motion picture as an instrument for good, as a contribution to the common behavior of nations? The picturization of Sinclair Lewis' novel would have done more to eradicate Fascism, the greatest factor in universal unrest today, than all the oratory and editorial commentaries of political persuasionists could possibly have accomplished. Granted, that to continue the international aspect which the American film industry now maintains, such a photoplay would have proved disastrous; still, it is not necessary that we close the mouths of those who are free to open them.

Previously, you openly derided a Mr. Samuel Cummins for his extravagant assumption that an American version of "Ecstasy" with Miss Mary Astor in the cast would be an artistic achievement. You humorously intimated that his real motive might have less than a casual concern with art; yet, your own concern with box office receipts is not so casual. This inconsistency is hardly worthy of a medium which proposes to inflict its tenets on exhibitors. Politics should not interfere with reasonable accuracy.—Robert Morgan, Strand Theatre, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Schultz in Ohio Deals

Nate Schultz, president of Selected Pictures, has closed with Maurice Cohn and Edward Halperin for northern Ohio distribution of 20 pictures. Lee Goldberg of Big Feature Rights, Cincinnati, bought the product for the southern Ohio territory.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1935, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parenthesis after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1936-37 season.

J. C. JENKINS—HIS COLYUM

Neligh, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

HURRAH, HURRAH, Someone help us holler. It has cooled off and we can get around now without the heat making us dizzy. We have thrown away both crutches, we threw one at the dog and the other at the cat, and missed 'em both. It is quite evident that we can't throw as accurately as we once did. We used to throw from short stop to first base and you can bet your socks that that guy was out.

We expected to have written you this time from somewhere in South Dakota. Sherm Fitch of Sioux Falls, South Dakota, was to have come this way and taken us up to the Black Hills, but a letter from him advised that he had to go to Minneapolis, Minnesota, this week on business, so here we are, and that's that.

We just received a very nice letter from Mrs. C. G. Lawing, who operates a theatre in Charlotte, North Carolina. Mrs. Lawing has been a HERALD fan for a number of years and has been reading this colyum (when she hadn't anything else to do). She mentions the "Jester's Club" which is made up of people interested in motion pictures, and, from her description of it we surmise that it would be a mighty fine club to belong to. There should be a lot more clubs of this kind all over the country. We wish here to extend our sincere thanks to Mrs. Lawing for her letter.

We went to the Moon theatre last night and saw "China Clipper," a Warner Brothers picture with Pat O'Brien, Beverly Roberts, Ross Alexander, Humphrey Bogart and Henry B. Walthall.

If you want a picture with plenty of action we would advise you to get this one. It shows a flight by an airplane company to secure the airplane trade to South America and to China. Pat O'Brien is the hardboiled manager and he drives things with an iron hand but he succeeds in putting the job over to the satisfaction of his company.

Beverly Roberts looks and acts just like making pictures was custard pie to her. Not only that but we list her as being very handsome and her diction registers very distinctly. It is our belief that Warner Bros. has a very fine actress in Miss Roberts.

It is our understanding that "China Clipper" is the last picture in which the late Mr. Walthall played. From his looks in the picture he was suffering most intensely, but in spite of that he played his part most excellently, and the motion picture industry has suffered a great loss in his passing.

Sometimes we break out into poetry
And sometimes we run into the ditch
But wherever we go
In heat or in snow
We're more apt to break out with the itch.

Just about every paper we pick up we note that some airplane has crashed, with from two to a half dozen people killed, and yet they tell us that traveling by plane is as safe as by any other way. Well, maybe it is, but we are going to keep on walking as long as the walking is good and our shoes hold out.

We have just forgotten whether we told you last week about Margaret E. Hansen of the Star theatre at Callaway, Nebraska, sending us a check to have her subscription to the HERALD renewed. If we did forget it we are telling you right now, and we want to tell you something else too, and that is that when you are in Callaway and will go to the Star theatre you will see a good show. Thanks, Miss Hansen.

Whenever we see the word Kankakee in print or spoken, our curiosity is aroused, for it was along the Kankakee river we spent our boyhood days shooting ducks and geese and catching fish, and you exhibitors back in Indiana who love to go afield with rod and gun certainly have our sympathy, since they have straightened the river and made of it nothing but a dredge ditch, and have ruined the finest game and fish country in the world.

We are not going into politics, for politics is a nasty mess, and we don't like nasty messes, but if it weren't a violation of law to bet we'd bet fifty dollars that only one of 'em would be elected.

Say Elmer, when you haven't anything to do but sit around and nurse a sore toe and wonder when you will be able to wear a shoe, what do you do? This is what we do, and it's a pretty good way to do, too. We think of the thousands of exhibitor friends all over the country, and it helps a lot, too, such as Bob Smith of Mission and "Shine" Mason of McAllen, Texas, C. J. Hartman of Carnegie and Ray Stuttman of Chandler, Oklahoma, George Moore of Plainwell and Mr. and Mrs. Musselman of Lincoln, Kansas, Joe Hewitt of Robinson, Illinois, W. H. Brenner of Winchester, Indiana, Bert Silver of Greenville, and Roy Adams of Mason, Michigan, that Swede at Shullburg and Mr. Roob at Port Washington, Wisconsin, Mr. and Mrs. Miller of Cloquet and a lot more in Minnesota, Sherm Fitch of Sioux Falls and Mr. and Mrs. G. S. Abbott of Arlington, South Dakota, not to mention "Chic" Sale and Louise Fazenda, Joe E. Brown and Mildred Early, and a lot more out in Hollywood, besides all those in Nebraska. But then, gee whiz, what's the use, we can't mention all of 'em. And besides that, what's the use of having toenails anyhow, why not have hoofs like a mule? There now, our housekeeper just hollered at us, "I am going to wash tomorrow, so be sure to change your socks. There's no darn sense changing socks every six or eight weeks, but . . .

We change our socks when'er they say.
(In case we should remember);
We change in March, also in May,
And sometimes in December.

We saw Charlie Chan in a picture the other night ferreting out the crooks at the race track, but his sleuthing was too deep for us, we couldn't understand it. "Pardon, please."

Since they have gone to putting pictures in the P.W.A., the X.Y.Z. and B.V.D. camps, we are wondering what effect that will have on the exhibitors of the country. We hope they don't require us to take a bath every thirty days.

For the satisfaction of the readers, maybe we should stop right now, and then again, maybe we shouldn't. Anyhow, we are going to place the burden of proof on you guys.

Wherever you wander . . . from Brown Derby to the Troc they're talking M-G-M . . . and they're saying "You've gotta hand it to that outfit . . . they've got what it takes!"

Soon the industry will see "LIBELED LADY" four-starring William Powell, Jean Harlow, Myrna Loy and Spencer Tracy. Hollywood is wild about it. They say it's simply terrific!

And after the sneak showing of Clark Gable and Joan Crawford in "LOVE ON THE RUN" the town is buzzing with superlatives. The 'inside' is that it's their best yet and they made "Dancing Lady" among others!

And imagine this! The prediction from those who have seen it with their own eyes is that "BORN TO DANCE" starring Eleanor Powell and Gang is positively another "Ziegfeld". Wow!

And that's just part of the story! Take a tip from those who know! Even competing producers are saying it! M-G-M in 1936-37 will positively astound the industry with its hit delivery. They're on the way . . . one knockout after another . . . and oh boy what fun to be an M-G-M showman!

"TO BE FORGOTTEN"

"THE fundamental defect of the movies is that they are made to be forgotten. . . . The movies are at about the level of the detective story, which, with a few exceptions, is also made to be forgotten. . . ."

This is the opinion of Mr. Gilbert Seldes, writing in the Atlantic Monthly. Mr. Seldes is commonly to be found more thoroughly informed than most external commentators on the art, but in this instance it must be contended that what he calls a "fundamental defect of the movies" is in fact merely the product's reflection of the attributes of the customers.

The motion picture is "consumer goods," not "durable goods." Motion pictures are made to be consumed, like motor cars, hot dogs and silk stockings, like stage shows, Sunday newspapers, trips to Bermuda, romance, playmates and pretzels.

Mr. Seldes may lament as he will but he cannot successfully demand of the motion picture's flowing shadows that they should assume any of the institutional functions of the printed book, another art for another people, another market.

It is not to be forgotten, either, that thus far the art of picture making has been evolving so fast that the works of yesterday become museum pieces, not classics.

SCHOOL COMPETITION

THE motion picture industry must regard with an especial equanimity the implications of the endeavor of the United States, in pursuit of taxes, to place college football on the same basis as other amusement enterprises.

The issue rises in the action of the State of Georgia seeking in Federal court in Atlanta to enjoin the Collector of Internal Revenue from retaining taxes collected on 1934 games.

"Football players are paid the same as actors to put on a show," Mr. M. H. Eustace, special assistant attorney general, argued.

Testimony of college officials, not too intentionally, admitted that football revenues supported a number of other college activities.

College football is not only a revenue seeking enterprise in many if not most instances, but it is a purposeful focus of publicity ballyhoo, besides, an advertising device. It is an amusement business, thriving seasonably off of free advertising from the press and screen. In both news and entertainment value it is really trivial. If it were ignored by the newsreel screen the audience would never notice it.

"ONLY ONE"

LET us share with you a precious bit of naivete from that blithe and merry journal of the people, the Daily News of New York, which, in a discussion of Mr. Samuel Goldwyn's picture labours, remarks:

"'The Children's Hour' was changed in only one particular, and that change was made in order to pass the Hays regulations and the various censor boards."

The "only one particular" in the making of "These Three" was the mere elimination of discussion and incident of a little matter known as lesbianism. A trifle, perchance, in the view of The News, but none the less aromatic.

SO VERY ASTRAL

BIG news has devious paths. Just for instance the mail brings us by way of Mr. Sylvan Harris of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers a piece from the "Bombay Radio News," quoting in turn "The Cinema" which quotes Mr. John Arnold, president of the American Society of Cinematographers, that researches have verified the Einstein contention of gravitational effect on light.

Among these effects is an alleged bending of various wave lengths, which in turn means colors, of light in varying degrees. So, says Mr. Arnold, "the time will not be far off when cameramen will have a complete table of the various positions of stars and planets in distances and possibly effective gravitational pull as it affects light, for handling our supersensitive equipment."

It all sounds like a superb new inspiration for a line of cosmic alibis.

WORDS

THE cables bring a quotation from Dr. Frank C. Laubach, traveling in the Far East, observing that more than half of the people of the world are illiterate now and that the majority will still be, at the present rate of progress, a thousand years from now. The future of radio and canned conversation is thereby substantially assured. Meanwhile, when a practitioner of the written word can achieve the high degree of misinformation just demonstrated by Mr. George Bernard Shaw, the basic importance and merit of literacy is left open to question.

This Week

School Projectors

Establishing the fact that the nation's school system and its 17,000,000 students now have at their disposal but 10,097 motion picture projectors—only 335 for 35mm sound—the United States Government and the American Council on Education have concluded that "motion pictures are sorely needed in classrooms if the country's schools are to keep pace with the other agencies of society.

Details of the first report definitely establishing the status of the film in America's schools start on page 13.

Suits Settled

Settlement by Paramount of a $23,000,000 anti-trust suit in New England this week was the principal development in dispute between the major interests and independent owners over trade practices, which also was was the subject of the MPTOA's renewed efforts to effect a ten-point program for adjusting differences. In Chicago, Allied decided to fight the distributors on clearance, while in Washington Representative Wright Patman indicated that at the next Congress he would seek control or elimination of producer-circuits in exhibition.

The trade practice developments are reported on page 29.

MPTOA Convention

With the national Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America starting to consider a town in which to hold its next annual convention, with indications of ultimate selection of Miami, Fla., as the meeting place since the board of directors meeting there last winter was so successful, four other exhibitor units are also getting ready to meet and have set dates for the gatherings. The Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana will meet in Indianapolis on October 27. The M.P.T.O. of Western Pennsylvania have chosen Pittsburgh, the date October 19-20 and Allied Theatres of Michigan will meet in Detroit on November 4-5.

For full details, see the story on page 39.

Back to the Exhibitors

The question of redundancy (overseating) has been gently but firmly returned to the lap of the exhibitors by the Kinematograph Renters Society in London. Complete agreement by the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association is a necessary preliminary to any joint action, wrote the Society's secretary, Frank Hill, after five meetings of the CEA committee had failed to evolve a working plan.

Other developments in the British field are recorded on page 62.

Radio Supervision

Close scrutiny of the material to be broadcast and active supervision of the Hollywood stars' appearances on radio programs is proposed in the current bulletin of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, issued over the signature of Edward Kuykendall, president. The proposal is advanced as the only logical response to the protests of exhibitors that the broadcasts are injuring box office receipts, and the bulletin points out that to try to keep the stars out of the radio studios entirely is not practical.

Ramifications of the proposal and reactions to it are explained on page 39.

Chance Game Setback

Chance games again this week received another setback when they were withdrawn from the theatres in New York, Oklahoma, North and South Carolina and Virginia. The games were withdrawn on the most part by the exhibitors as a voluntary act, "out of deference" to grand juries and city councils. In New York, the powerful RKO and Loew's circuits, particularly in Westchester County, withdrew the games following rulings by authorities that hindered their operation to quite an extent.

For full details of the various situations in the states named above, see the story on page 55.

Musicians Picketing

The members of Local 802, American Federation of Musicians, in New York this week are still picketing Broadway theatres urging people not to patronize the houses until "live" musicians and in some cases stage shows as well, are returned by the operators in place of "canned" music. Arrests were made in front of the Loew's Capitol but the pickets were discharged by the court.

All of New York's prominent musicians are behind the movement to return the stage and pit bands. For details of this week's activities, see page 30.

Commission Plan

Film distribution in India operates principally on the commission plan, although there are three general types of distributors, and six general territorial divisions of the area which they serve. Each type of distributor, and each territory, is subject to distinctive gradations as to percentage, control and other factors, but interest rates are low at the present time and the industry is getting along quite nicely.

A concise statement of the Indian situation is presented on page 66.

Hoyt's—General

While stories from various sources give this and that indication as to the probable future status of General Theatres corporation, trade opinion in Australia is evenly divided, with distributors eyeing developments interestedly in view of possible advantage to be gained in case Hoyt's and Greater Union Theatres dissolve their affiliation and resume their former relationship as sharply competitive circuits.

Writing from Melbourne, Cliff Holt gives a word picture of the situation as seen by the Australian trade. Mr. Holt's story is on page 64.

Halt Assets Shift

Chemical Bank and Trust Company in New York, as trustee for the holders of RKO's secured gold notes, moved this week in the federal district court to bar the proposed transfer of the RKO assets securing the notes until it has been compensated for its services as trustee. The bank's petition for compensation will be heard concurrently with the petition of Irving Trust Company as trustee in reorganization of RKO for authority to retire the last $850,000 of the company's notes outstanding.

For details, see the story on page 28.

On Paramount Board

In a series of moves affecting the corporate and production structure of Paramount Pictures, Y. Frank Freeman, vice-president in charge of theatre operations, was elected to the company board of directors and Eugene Zukor was given an executive post in the Hollywood production department, where he will act in an advisory capacity on foreign department requirements.

Details of these and other personnel changes are on page 58.

Television

Television for the home is now completely practicable as demonstrated by companies which have been experimenting in the field in the United States and foreign countries. But commercial television is still uncertain with the obstacles of distance and a life-size screen image still to be overcome. Financing, material for programs and wave length assignment are minor but important difficulties. The United States, England and Germany are the leading countries in the field at present, with test programs having been conducted in all three countries during the summer. Regular broadcasts are contemplated or have been announced for the near future.

An account of the most recent demonstrations in this country and in Europe, reports of technical problems met and solved by the engineers, and other phases of the television field today are published on page 51.

Philco Trial Ends

Final summaries were made this week in the trial of the injunction suit brought in the chancery court of Wilmington, Del., by the Philadelphia Storage Battery Company, parent company of Philco Radio and Television Corporation, against Radio Corporation of America seeking to enjoin RCA from terminating a license agreement whereby Philadelphia has the right to use basic patents in radio and television assigned to RCA. No decision has been rendered as yet by Chancellor Josiah O. Wolcott.

A letter to Mr. F. H. Richardson, technical editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD:

Dear Mr. Richardson:

By this time I take it for granted that "Richardson Week" is no secret to you and it now becomes my very pleasant duty to invite you to be the guest of the International Projector Corporation and the National Theatre Supply Company at a luncheon to be tendered in your honor, to be held at the Hotel Pennsylvania, 12:30 noon, Tuesday, October 27, 1936.

I will not at this time make any attempt to express my full approval of what is being done to give you the recognition you so well deserve, as I intend doing this at the luncheon which is being given by our companies. Cordially yours,

(Signed) EARLE G. HINES,
President,
International Projector Corporation.

Mexican Restrictions

Now comes Mexico into the parade of governments having or planning restrictions on American film product for the purpose of building the local industry. The ministry of Mexico City has presented to a special committee a program calling for a limitation of imports to 20 pictures a company, no new distributors to be registered, no distributor to represent more than one producer, and finally a requirement that each distributor handle at least one Mexican production to each five or six foreign made.

The Mexican situation is detailed on page 30.

Price Rise Continues

The trend toward higher admission prices, surveyed in the MOTION PICTURE HERALD two weeks ago, is continuing, according to reports from scattered sections of the country.

Latest reports on price level increases and new records are included in the story on page 76.

Production at Peak

Hollywood gave a demonstration of its ability to function efficiently at high speed, placing fourteen new pictures before the cameras and moving a like number of completed works to the cutting rooms.

Titles and principal personnel are reported on page 27.

Ask Regulation

That control of America's motion picture industry be taken away from Hollywood and that "a restraining hand" be placed upon the producers were advocated by speakers at a meeting this week of the Motion Picture Research Council in San Francisco. The speakers were Dr. Claude H. Shull of San Francisco Junior College; Kathleen Norris and Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur, president of Leland Stanford, Jr., University.

Excepts from the addresses appear on page 24.

Deny UA Sale

Although denials were quickly forthcoming from President A. H. Giannini and owner-member Samuel Goldwyn, reports were current in New York this week that Captain E. Beddington Behrens of Myers and Company, London financial house, but presumably on behalf of Prudential Life Insurance Company, had made offers to convert control of United Artists Distributing Corporation into British hands.

Details are found in the story on page 28.

British Production

Marlene Dietrich, the glamorous, has just had her first experience in British production with the starting of the shooting of exteriors for London Films' "Knight without Armour" at Denham. The event called for a rearrangement of schedule, however, when asthma prevented Robert Donat from sharing the limelight.

Other production data from the British studios is on page 60.

Maxwell Deal

John Maxwell's deal for Gaumont British, set on Sunday, collapsed two days later on Tuesday, according to London reports, and the result is a deadlocked situation precipitated further by the stand of Joseph M. Schenck that the Ostrer brothers could not dispose of their holdings in Metropolis and Bradford Trust without Mr. Schenck's consent. It is also learned that Mr. Maxwell had a representative in America seeking to purchase shares in Twentieth Century-Fox for him in an effort to break the control of Mr. Schenck.

The development is found on page 28.

Studio "Closed Shop"

Hollywood is hearing "war" talk over the new movements in actors' and writers' ranks for a "closed shop" in all studios. American Federation of Labor support, necessary to press the issue, has been gained.

The anticipated conflict between worker and producer is described on page 18.

This Week in Pictures

HONORED. Members of the Cincinnati Variety Club, Tent Number 3, gave a testimonial dinner for Ralph Kinsler in celebration of his appointment as manager of the new Grand National exchange in that city, more than fifty members and guests attending the function at the Netherlands-Plaza hotel.

ON BUSINESS. Jack Cohn, vice-president of Columbia, and Mrs. Cohn are seen aboard the Queen Mary on eve of departure for Europe, where Mr. Cohn will inspect his company's interests abroad.

STARRED. Gladys George of the stage (left) plays the difficult principal role of "Valiant Is the Word for Carrie," produced for Paramount release.

CONSIDERING. Ernst Lubitsch and Mrs. Lubitsch are spending several weeks in New York while the producer studies scripts with the starring requirements of Marlene Dietrich in mind. The star is scheduled to return to America from Europe late in November.

IMPORTED. Fernand Gravet, French star, has been placed on contract by Warner Brothers and will arrive in America in a few weeks to commence work upon "The King and the Chorus Girl," a Mervyn LeRoy production. This will be Mr. LeRoy's first production for Warners under his recently consummated affiliation as producer.

ADVENTURE. Walter Blunt, camera man, and Paul Hoefler are en route to Africa to film "Black Empire" for Warner Brothers. They will also produce a number of shorts during their stay.

BALL GAME TONIGHT. Theatre managers and attaches of the RKO-Radio division offices in Cincinnati make up the membership of the RKO Sparks, softball team, playing three times weekly, at midnight, in Deer Creek Park, for fun, publicity and a ten cent gate.

IN FILMS. Whitney Bourne (right) is the New York society girl seen as the other woman in "Head Over Heels," the G-B production starring Jessie Matthews.

PREMIERE. Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and Marlene Dietrich attended the world premiere in London of "Accused," the Criterion production, in which Mr. Fairbanks is co-starred with Dolores Del Rio. The initial performance, attended by a distinguished gathering, was dedicated to benefit of the Journalists Pension Fund.

PIRATES AHOY. The gentle bucanneers are among those active in the more or less mad goings-on that make up the story of "Our Relations," Hal Roach production with Laurel and Hardy, in which appear also the comedians' "twins."

TO DUTY. Anita Colby, RKO-Radio contract player, left New York September 26th for Hollywood following a vacation. Miss Colby appeared in "Mary of Scotland" and "Walking on Air."

MODERN. Edmund H. Hanson, manager of the Twentieth Century-Fox sound department, and C. W. Faulkner, his assistant, inspect a new and streamlined sound truck, constructed along modern lines and designed for efficiency.

INFORMAL. The candid camera catches Warner Baxter (left) and Mrs. Baxter in an informal pose. Mr. Baxter is under contract to Twentieth Century-Fox.

AT HOME. Fred Stone, RKO-Radio star, returned to New York from a personal appearance tour accompanied by Mrs. Stone, and (background) Dorothy, Charles Collins, Paula and Carol, renewing Broadway acquaintanceships of long standing. Mr. Stone's next film is "By the Dawn's Early Light."

ROMANTIC. Marion Davies enjoys a gondola ride in one of the sequences of her forthcoming Cosmopolitan production for Warner Brothers release, "Cain and Mabel," in which Clark Gable portrays the male lead. The film was recently the subject of a pictorial review in this publication prepared by Gus McCarthy.

10,097 PROJECTORS FOR 17 MILLION STUDENTS

Films "Sorely Needed" in Classrooms, Government Bureau and American Council of Education Find in Survey

Motion pictures are "sorely needed" in classrooms if the nation's schools are to keep pace with other agencies of society. Such is the conclusion arrived at this week by the United States Government and the American Council on Education, supreme authority in this country on national educational matters, after discovering that only 10,097 projectors are now serving 17,000,000 pupils.

Both the Government and the Council are giving attention to the manner and method by which America's schools may purchase and use motion picture equipment, possibly on a federal grant.

Prompted by the confusion existing in the motion picture teaching phase of the school systems, the Office of Education, John W. Studebaker, Commissioner, of the United States Department of the Interior, undertook, last January, a complete investigation to determine the exact status of films in schools and their future. The study had the cooperation of the American Council on Education, of which George F. Zook is president.

A questionnaire was sent to all city and county superintendents of schools in every city having a population exceeding 5,000. The basic purposes were cited as: (1) Establishment of the frequency of use of the various audio-visual aids in each school or school system, (2) Compilation of a list of all audio-visual equipment owned; (3) Determining the problems met in the administration of a program of audio-visual education.

Nine thousand reports were received, covering nearly 17,000,000 pupils in 83,000 grade, elementary and second or high schools, in 95 per cent of all cities with a population of 5,000 or more. The following equipment was listed as owned and used by the schools, giving for the first time, a definite and official record of the status of the motion picture in America's classrooms:

Type of Equipment	Number of Equipments	Number of Pupils Per Piece of Equipment
Lantern slide projectors	17,040	1,000
Stillfilm attachments	3,007	5,653
Filmstrip projectors (stillfilm)	2,733	6,224
Micro-slide projectors	2,073	8,200
Opaque projectors	2,720	6,222
16mm silent projectors	6,074	2,799
16mm sound projectors	458	37,119
35mm silent projectors	3,230	5,260
35mm sound projectors	335	50,746
Radio receiving sets	11,501	1,479
Centralized radio-sound systems	841	20,214

AN UNKNOWN QUANTITY

The value in potentialities of the future motion picture market in the nation's schools is unknown.

"No one in the country is in a position to make anything except a very wild guess," according to George F. Zook, president of the American Council on Education.

At any rate, it has been estimated variously as running into many millions, much of which could be gained by the motion picture industry in the sale of equipment and films.

The table shows that the motion picture has only scratched the surface of the country's school system as a teaching instrument, only unimportantly supplanting the many different forms of antiquated still-film and stereopticon processes in use for years.

That the radio has passed the motion picture in attention as an educational arm, on the basis of number of pupils per piece of equipment, is indicated in the following comparison of apparatus for three competitive groups:

Equipment Groups	Number of Equipments	Number of Pupils Per Piece of Equipment
Slides, stillfilms	27,573	620
Motion picture projectors	10,097	1,683
Radios	12,342	1,277

By far the greatest interest in needed services cited by America's school authorities in reporting to the Government was centered upon some plan being formulated whereby film equipment could be purchased with the assistance of some federal agency. The schoolmen not only expressed the hope of receiving reduced prices and time payment arrangements, but assurance that the equipment so purchased would be standard as to quality and size.

Inspection by U. S. Proposed

"With the development of a federal purchase plan, such as the Government is now planning, it will be possible to have the equipment inspected and certified by the United States Bureau of Standards," observed the Government and American Council, adding, "and this will do much to offset some of the prejudice expressed."

Only 335 Sound Projectors of 35mm. in 83,000 Schools, 50,000 Pupils to Each Apparatus Available

"The motion picture in education has for some years been considered a potential force in American education," says the report. "With the development of various visual and auditory aids, such as the film strip, the sound film and the radio, a completely new source of materials of instruction has been made available to educators throughout the world. The realization has been growing upon progressive educators that such aids can become complementary devices to textbooks, the blackboards and the maps of the past. "Studies have proved that these new visual and auditory aids present learning matter so forcibly that educators can no longer deny them their proper place in a dynamic curriculum."

The last two years both the Government's Office of Education and the American Council on Education have devoted considerable attention to the project. "This interest," the report continues, "represents a belief that through the Council certain activities can be coordinated which would give to this new medium increased usefulness in the schools and colleges of this country."

Index of Films Compiled

Already the Council has compiled an index of all available educational films, embracing thousands of films now being distributed in this country and emanating both from educational-film and regular theatrical film sources.

The Council and the Government now will study extensively the problems related to production and distribution of educational films.

Many of the industry's leaders and of the motion picture interests of American Telephone and Telegraph (Western Electric and Electrical Research Products) have long held that the film business has a great potential market in the educational films field.

The possibilities here are brought out forcefully in the Government-American Council survey, which reports that already 4,500,000 American students are daily being encouraged by their school authorities and teachers to see selected motion pictures and use the information thus acquired in school, in English courses, history, current events or other related subjects.

The Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America are constantly working to bring home this fact to the theatre when an outstanding selected picture is available locally, concentrating at present on such productions as "Anthony Adverse," "Romeo and Juliet," "Midsummer Night's Dream," "Last of the Mohicans."

The survey of the motion picture and other visual and auditory media is advanced by the Government and the American Council as "presenting the most comprehensive survey yet made of the mechanical facilities for the use of visual aids in the educative process." "Heretofore," it is explained, "no one has been able to say definitely how many projectors, how many slides, how many films, etc., are actually available in the United States. This lack of knowledge has served as a brake on the production and utilization of worthwhile educational films. Upon the basis of the data presented, it should be possible for American educators to look forward to progressive development in this field."

EDUCATORS SEEK FEDERAL FUNDS

The survey brought to light "a rapid rate of growth in the school consumption of both radio programs and motion pictures," and established the following general subjects in which motion pictures are used:

Subject	Number of Schools Reporting Use	Percentage
Science	3,820	22
Travel and geography	3,013	17.4
History	2,600	15
Social science	1,505	8.7
Health	1,402	8
English	1,393	8
Nature study	909	5.2
Commerce and industry	724	4.2
All others	1,862	11.5

The industry at once can determine the adaptability of their outstanding "selected" releases to the schools from the foregoing, or the adaptability of certain parts of their productions for the same purpose. In many instances schools now take sequences of important feature pictures for study.

Used Most in Teaching Science

"The data secured in the survey dealt with the most frequent use of films rather than the only use," the survey explains. "For several reasons, more films are used in teaching science than any other subject. Firstly, more films are available on this subject than any other with the exception of travel and geographical films. For years various laboratories and educational-film studios have been making films on scientific subjects, as the film has long been recognized as an excellent aid in science. The next thing in favor of this heavier use is the fact that most science instructors are mechanically inclined, and a certain amount of skill is required to operate any type of projector. Much equipment has been purchased with laboratory fees and remains the property of the science department. Another reason for the greater use of films in science work is the fact that many science teachers sponsor visual work in the absence of an official director of visual education. It is logical to assume that such a sponsor would favor his own subjects to some extent."

"Next in use are the films on travel and geography," the report continues. "These are readily available from film supply houses making use of major studio stock shots and travelogues, various travel bureaus, chambers of commerce and amateurs everywhere.

Historical Films

"Trailing travel and geography only slightly are the historical films. These are available from several sources, including universities and memorial associations, as well as the major studios, which have sold or distributed reprints on many of the classics that have historical value.

"Coming next in frequency is the use of films in social science classes. While there are relatively few films produced primarily for use in social studies, many films on travel and geography are used for this purpose to illustrate living conditions and show the reciprocal effect of geographical conditions upon life and industry. There seems to be a tendency to teach geography as the study of the relationship of environment to living conditions and economics rather than, as formerly taught, the mere description of the world, its physical characteristics and boundaries.

"The use of films dealing with health is reported next in order. The availability of these films can be attributed to the various child health organizations, the local and state boards of health, and the public health divisions of several of the better known life insurance companies."

"It is apparent," the report continues, "that if suitable films are available, they will be used. The content of the film is of utmost importance. There are many films available free of cost dealing with commerce and industry, yet many administrators and directors of visual education reported that they were not using these, due to the fact that there was too much advertising matter or propaganda in them."

Other subjects in which the use of motion pictures was reported included agriculture, mathematics, music, religion.

From all reports received as representing the visual and audio trends among the 17,000,000 students, it was disclosed that only one-third of the 9,000 schools and school systems with an enrollment of 750 pupils each, or less, were operating under a course of study that specifies the use of visual aids. As the size of the school systems increased, the affirmative response did likewise, and in the systems of 10,000 pupils or more, 82 affirmattive and 72 negative answers were recorded on this question.

Encouraged to See Films

In the lower-size schools, a five-to-one average in the affirmative was recorded on the question, "Are pupils encouraged to see selected motion pictures and use the information thus acquired in school?" In the group above 10,000 pupils, the average was four-to-one in the affirmative. This deals with the students attending theatres directly, as paying customers, to view the film and report later in study periods on its educational aspects.

Motion picture theatres were listed with libraries, museums and the like as representing a "community resource" used by schools for enlightenment of pupils.

Convincing the School Board

One of the greatest handicaps reported for the general progress of motion pictures in education was the lack of information of sources of desirable films, another was the lack of understanding of the value of films in the school. Many school superintendents reported that they were personally in favor of the use of visual aids, that their teachers were reasonably trained in the proper use thereof, but that they were unable to convince the school board of the merits to be found in the use of visual aids.

The need for additional motion pictures produced for instructional purposes received a heavy vote.

The next development desired by those in the field was the establishment of some group or groups to give expert evaluation of educational films and other visual aids. Many school superintendents and directors of visual education reported that they were too frequently disappointed in the content of the film and that the descriptions supplied in advance were inadequate and often misleading.

The Government and the American Council found that in furthering the progress of the film in schools a great problem is presented in training the present staffs, and from the reports there are indications of a difference of opinion as to the most expedient manner of accomplishing this end. Apparently, three courses are open. First, that the teacher be required to attend a college or university and obtain this training. A few states already require this of new teachers, but the main problem lies in training those who have completed the requirements imposed prior to this time and are now teaching. The second method requires the teacher to take a course in the use of visual aids from an extension division of one of the many universities offering such courses. The third means of training the present staff is the employment of

HOLLYWOOD HEARS 'WAR' TALK OVER TALENT'S DEMAND FOR 'CLOSED SHOP'

Screen Actors' and Writers' Have New Weapon in Affiliation with American Federation of Labor

Hollywood's labor pot is boiling over again, reacting this time to the movements by writers and players for a "closed shop" throughout all studios. Both sides, the workers and producers, are out in the open for a fight to the finish.

The ambition is not new, having been nurtured down through the years by one or another of the independent talent groups. But now the writers and players appear to have gained the required strength in the anticipated support of the American Federation of Labor and the California State Labor Federation, both of which, in a "sympathetic" strike, could call out their various studio craft affiliates to help the writers and the actors force the issue on the producers.

The Screen Actors' Guild in Hollywood, representing the players' group advocating unionization, has finally accomplished affiliation with the American Federation of Labor. Also, Kenneth Thomson, the Guild's executive secretary, has been elected one of the 15 vice-presidents of the California Labor Federation.

This recognition in both quarters resulted immediately in a new show of strength in Guild quarters, bringing a war "powwow" of the board of directors, last Monday night, to outline the strategy of attack.

The Guild is talking of effecting a drive similar to that conducted last spring by the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes and Moving Picture Machine Operators.

The IATSE had demanded that the major companies having theatres and studios give its union jurisdiction over certain studio union crafts, forcing such jurisdiction when it called out on strike some of its projectionist members in theatres operated by the producer-circuit companies involved.

The Screen Actors' Guild would demand that all players in Hollywood become members or suffer the penalty of having American Federation of Labor members refuse to work with them—AFL electricians, stage hands, carpenters and the like. The Guild this week refused official comment on this possibility, but admitted that such a drastic move is being considered.

Producers Meet

The threatening conflict is already receiving attention in national headlines, the Associated Press reporting from Hollywood that members of the Motion Picture Producers' Association, representing the so-called "Big Eight," and others, are priming for a "fight to the finish" with the Guild.

The producers met in a long and secret session last Wednesday night, in Hollywood, and although they declined to discuss the topic of the meeting, the Associated Press heard reports on Hollywood Boulevard that it was concerned with the labor situation, principally as it involves the actors.

First tangible move of the Guild, in its new role as a member of the American Federation of Labor, to gain the sympathy and outward support of AFL crafts in studios and other AFL branches throughout California, came late in the week when Mr. Thomson, spokesman for the Guild, publicly said that 17 wellknown Hollywood actors had contributed $1,000 to the strikers' fund in the strike of lettuce pickers at Salinas, California. Mr. Thomson mentioned, as contributors, Gary Cooper, Eddie Cantor, Fredric March, Boris Karloff, Robert Montgomery, Herbert Marshall and James Cagney.

Increase Strike Contributions

Subsequently came reports that the Guild had moved even further to gain the aid of all organized labor in the state in case of a "showdown" with the producers, by raising their contributions to the lettuce strikers' fund to $5,000. The contributions are being made directly to the State Federation of Labor. In the later group were mentioned as donors such Hollywood personalities as James and Lucille Gleason, Brian Aherne, Humphrey Bogart, Jean Muir, Lionel Stander, Fred Keating, J. Edward Bromberg and Edward Arnold.

Hollywood also heard that the Guild is considerating prohibiting any players but Guild members from going on location trips, and in the event that such an edict is ignored by the producers, the Guild would effect concerted labor action to prevent other union workers of the AFL from aiding companies shooting away from their studios.

Producers, however, appear to have in their favor the fact that most of the important name actors are under contract and any violation of the contract would probably bring the actor into court as the defendant in a suit instituted by the aggrieved studio.

Equity Supports Guild

Regardless, the Actors' Guild is proceeding to chart its battle lines, extending them this week to include the open support of Actors' Equity Association in New York.

Equity has failed in its various attempts to "unionize" Hollywood directly, but undertook new strategy last year when it effected an agreement with the Guild which provides that all members of Equity must join the Guild when they are both stage and screen performers. Penalties by Equity on the actor's stage work are promised in cases of violations. Now Equity is moving, apparently with the Guild, toward the "closed shop," notifying 25 of its members in Hollywood that they would be expelled from Equity unless they join the Screen Actors' Guild. Given notice of four weeks to comply were Walter Kelly, Dorothy Lee, De Witt Jennings, Arthur Hoyt, Eric Linden, Roy D'Arcy, Lloyd Nolan, William Mong, Lucien Littlefield, James McDonald, Nat Pendleton, Robert Warwick, Frank Scully, Marion Schilling, Alice Brady, John Barrymore, Lionel Barrymore, Jack Oakie, J. Farrell MacDonald and others.

Actors Consider Demanding That Players Join or Face Refusal of Other AFL Members to Work with Them

Independents First Target

Indicating their determination to use their new relationship with the AFL to have the other studio unions aid them in obtaining studio recognition, the Guild is further reported to be considering directing their first attack at the independents in Hollywood.

The California Federation of Labor is understood to have passed a resolution demanding a "closed shop" at the studios, which now appears to include screen writers as well as the Guild actors.

The Screen Playwrights, an outgrowth of the more militant Screen Writers' Guild, is declared to be set against any amalgamation with organized labor, and, accordingly, at a meeting in Hollywood last week completed a "code" to strengthen screen writers' conditions independently of any union or organized labor affiliations. The producers will receive the code for study soon.

Regardless, the Screen Writers' Guild, which, like the Actors' Guild, is now "armed" with a brand new scroll signifying membership in the American Federation of Labor, is seriously thinking of acting similarly by moving for a "closed shop" in all studios for writers.

Guild, Wary, Guards Plans

by GUS McCARTHY

in Hollywood

Again the Guild question is arousing speculation in Hollywood. Election of Kenneth Thomson, Screen Actors' Guild secretary, as AFL vice-president, is interpreted by many to mean the Guild is girding for action. If any fireworks are coming, however, the Guild is carefully guarding its plans. With its membership increasing, the Guild is confident of growing strength but is making no official statement.

Unofficial spokesmen said there is a tendency to see in the Thomson position a key contact that eventually will command the cooperation of union labor. There is no known agreement between the Guild and organized labor, but the Guild is aiming at friendly alliance with the studio labor group, similar to that which enabled that group to put over its "closed shop."

Local newspapers affect to see a definite bid for labor friendship in the action of individual members of the Guild in sending contributions for relief of the Salinas strikers, but Guild officers say these contributions are personal gestures and of no organizational significance.

The unofficial spokesmen are not hesitant in saying they want the Guild to be a regular union. Mr. Thomson's position, seems to be that he is not so much in favor of a "closed shop" as of a "Guild shop," always open to compliance with the agreement with Equity.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

The neatest free advertising trick of the day was turned by James E. Sayre, advertising-minded member of the statistical department of David Sarnoff's publicity-minded Radio Corporation of America.

The symbol for stock of the Radio Corporation on the New York Stock Exchange has always been "R," meaning, of course, "Radio Corporation," but interpreted by many as just "radio." Mr. Sayre worried about this, and decided that it gave too much advertising to the radio industry in general, and too little to RCA in particular. So he pulled some wires and inveigled the Stock Exchange powers to substitute "RCA" in place of "R" as the symbol for the corporation's stock on the "Big Board."

This runs into figures from a "monogram advertising" standpoint. The New York Stock Exchange quotations are directed to 2,450 ticker outlets in 330 domestic and foreign cities. Assuming that an average of seven persons at the ticker—in a large broker's office this might be 50 or more, and taking an average tabbing of 200 lots of stock per business day, the RCA monogram will be read over one billion times per year, to say nothing of readings in stock exchange sales in the newspapers. All of this vast audience has strong purchasing power for RCA radios and radio tubes.

The plays have just reached the rehearsal stage, and self-appointed spies, interested in the duel, are busy relating to each producer news of the other's activities. Mr. Ullman, therefore, was told: 'Grisman has a father and mother in his play.' 'Really?" he answered. 'Then I'll have a father and mother in my show, too.'

"Rival spies reported to Grisman: 'Ullman has a father and mother in his show.' 'Really?' he replied. 'Then we'll yank ours!'"

Wonder why no motion picture producer ever picked up Robert L. Ripley's "Believe It Or Not" material for a short subject continuation after he made a series for Warners some half-dozen years ago? "Rip" stands today unrecognized by the motion picture, yet he is accredited the cartoon world's biggest money maker, the only one to reach the financial status of a millionaire.

Odd McIntyre brought up the Ripley subject the other day, reminding that "Bob" could easily retire, although still in his early forties. Not to see the world, for he has poked about its oddest corners. But to play squashball, his favorite diversion, and to do a little painting, for which he also shows talent. But Rip is at his drawing board every day, as enthusiastic and hard working as in the days he occupied a cubbyhole on the old New York Globe trying to convince indifferent editors that "Believe It Or Not" was a feature that could run indefinitely. They thought Ripley might be able to string out his idea in the Globe for a year, with difficulty. He now has material on hand, aside from what he has presented all these years, to last another century.

Joseph M. Schenck, of Fox and Gaumont British, has gone into the meat market business on the side.

Mr. Schenck, down through a quarter of a century, or more, has purveyed entertainment to the public in many and different forms. Now he's adapting showmanship methods to the grocery business, putting on a big "gala premiere" for the opening the other day of his new Imperial Market in Hollywood.

A big display page of advertising in the Hollywood Advertiser announced that a "Trio of Movie Starlets—Lights—Music and Values Mark the Opening of the New $350,000 Mart." In one way or another the market was successful in inducing the Fox studio to loan them Shirley Deane to head the "beauteous aggregation" of the "galaxy of lovely motion picture starlets on hand to honor the market's illustrous head, Joseph M. Schenck."

The big feature of the opening sale was "Genuine 1936 Spring Lamb Legs—all sizes—They're tender, delicious and an unusual bargain at 18½ cents the pound."

"A Mickey Mouse program would be the only one to which the warring factions in Spain—Communists, Anarchists, Royalists and Fascists—could possibly be reconciled, reports James M. Hepbron, American authority on criminal justice, who recently returned from Madrid, where he witnessed the outbreak of the revolution.

"Writing for the Washington Post, Mr. Hepbron declared, according to United Artists:

"'Communists, Royalists, rebels and Fascists alike adore Mickey. He is about the only thing on which Spain is united. His likeness is found in most Government offices, in cells of most prisoners, and the fine nursery in the women's prison of Madrid is beautifully and artistically decorated with all of Walt Disney's characters.'

"During the fighting in the main streets of Madrid, reports Mr. Hepbron, a huge electric sign advertising Mickey Mouse, situated between the opposing forces, was untouched—whether out of sentiment or bad marksmanship Mr. Hepbron could not say, but he believed the former," again, according to United Artists.

Records of honking horns, squeaking brakes, police whistles and other familiar urban noises were made on chromium-plated copper discs, coated with an imperishable tarry compound, and locked in a copper box. Included also were a phonograph and instructions for removing the tarry compound and playing the records.

The selection of noises, however, strikes us as being only half complete. No cross section of American noises could possibly be representative without a motion picture trailer, a radio crooner, at least one real of a film serial and a full display of American newsreels bellowing with the campaign speeches of the Presidential politicians.

DEMAND REGULATION OF FILM PRODUCERS

Educators and Novelist Urge "Restraining Hand" at Meeting of Research Council

by WALTER BARUSCH

in San Francisco

A demand that control of America's "two billion dollar motion picture industry" be "taken out of the hands of Hollywood" was voiced here this week by Dr. Claude H. Shull, dean of San Francisco Junior College. The pedagogue would substitute "the community" as the controlling element, he said.

Mr. Shull was one of three speakers addressing the Motion Picture Research Council meeting Monday in the Women's City Club. The other speakers were Kathleen Norris, novelist, and Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur, president of Leland Stafford, Jr., University.

Mrs. Norris has sold many stories for film production, among them "My Best Girl" and "The Callahans and Murphys," both produced under the same titles; "Flaming Passion," produced as "Lucretia Lombard"; "Manhattan Love Song," produced as "Change of Heart," and "Navy Wife," produced as "Beauty's Daughter."

Ask "Restraining Hand"

All three speakers used the phrase "a restraining hand" on the producers in calling for regulations which would raise the cultural standards of the motion picture. Dr. Shull called for "two or three million members" to work actively for passage of the Neely-Pettengill bill to bar block booking and establish federal regulation of the industry. He insinuated the possibility of corrupt lobbying against the bill.

"What we need to safeguard our children is women who are watching the movies constantly," Mrs. Norris told the meeting, attended by 250, most of them women.

"The talking picture," said Dr. Wulbuy, "offers a double attack on the nervous system—through the eye and the ear. We must prepare pictures from the standpoint of educators, and show them in schools, churches and club halls."

Commend Carewe Project

The Stanford president praised the efforts of Edwin Carewe, onetime ace director of silent picture days, to establish a studio in Palo Alto to produce educational short product for schools and clubs. So far, according to a recent report by Mr. Carewe to the State Corporation department, he has not succeeded in selling sufficient stock to start construction, although he still holds an option on several acres of land near the university. Ownership of the land never has been made public.

Mrs. Norris accused American films of creating false impressions of American life in the minds of foreign people, describing the plot of a C. B. DeMille production of silent days as an example. She said she had witnessed the picture and an unnamed "gangster film" in China in company with several cultured Chinese acquaintances.

Compared with Typhus

The novelist compared the menace of "false motion pictures" with typhus, and called for a federal committee of "very few individuals" with power to say of an "offending" picture: "That shall not be released outside America."

On the theme of young love, basis of the majority of her own fiction productions, Mrs. Norris declared the motion pictures were responsible because young wives "could not stand honest, normal living."

Dr. Wilbur defined the majority of modern films as "shabby, careless and often harmful," and attacked Radio's recent "Mary of Scotland" and "Sutter's Gold" as examples of inaccuracy in handling historical fact. "The Rocky Mountain Mystery," independent "thriller," was attacked by name with Mr. Shull quoting a letter of complaint from a mother whose children had suffered nightmares for several weeks after seeing it.

"We must eliminate this evil of blockbooking from society," Mr. Shull said.

Propaganda Distributed

Campaign literature for the Pettengill bill, a reprint of an attack on "The Morals of the Movies" by Walter Lippmann, New York columnist and onetime editor of the New York World, and Motion Picture Research Council membership cards were distributed after the talks. Some thirty per cent of the women present accepted cards, although many pointedly refused them.

The Research Council, with national headquarters in San Francisco, has a local membership of some 300, with approximately the same number in smaller communities. Organization plans apparently call for national expansion.

PRIVATE FINANCING BY FILM INDIVIDUALS

Although motion picture companies officially have declined to continue their policy of the past few seasons in financing of Broadway plays this year, there is considerable private financing by individual members of the film industry, according to legitimate producers, most of whom refuse to reveal sources or the methods by which this is being brought about.

So far as it can be discovered, MGM is the only film company whose commitments from last year in play financing have carried over into the present season. It is reported that MGM had contracted with Max Gordon to finance "St. Helena" and it has been announced that the company also will finance "Spring Tide," a comedy by George Billiam and Peter Goldsmith, which will be produced later in the season.

a supervising teacher of visual instruction whose duty is to work with the teachers and show them how to make the best use of the various visual aids, and plan and assist in the selection of films and slides to be used by the entire school or school system. Several school systems reported that the last-named course seemed the most expedient and flexible, and successful.

"All of these factors have been considered as part of the future work of the educational motion picture project of the American Council of Education," the report advises, in view of the fact that "the survey disclosed that development along these lines is sorely needed if we are to have an adequate system of visual education throughout the nation."

Anent the completion of the survey, C. M. Koon, of the Department of the Interior at Washington, under whose auspices the investigation was conducted, expressed the opinion that "close collaboration of educators, motion picture producers, and Government officials is needed if the vast potentialities of the educational film are to be developed."

The organized motion picture industry's efforts of a year to arouse wholesale interest at the box office of educational and outside forces in the outstanding production appear now to be crystalizing. This is evidenced by the receipt in recent weeks of some 1,800 requests at the New York headquarters of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America for pictorial displays and printed material for study in classrooms after viewing the picture at the local theatre.

Teachers' Council Active

The National Council of English Teachers for many months has exerted its influence over hundreds of thousands of students on behalf of the outstanding photoplay, through its urgings of attendance at the theatre and subsequent use of especially prepared study guides. Such guides already have appeared—distributed to schools by the thousands—on "Mary of Scotland," "Romeo and Juliet," "Mutiny on the Bounty," "A Tale of Two Cities," "The Last Days of Pompeii," "The Three Musketeers," "Little Lord Fauntleroy," "Les Miserables," "Scrooge," "A Midsummer Night's Dream," "Fang and Claw," "Seven Keys to Baldpate," "The Prisoner of Shark Island" and "Things to Come."

The guides, issued in pamphlet form in cooperation with the MPPDA, cover such topics as biographical background, topics for discussion, a study of the photoplay versus the play or novel and a suggested reading list for the student.

Pictorial Displays Issued

Having entrenched the study guide as a form of establishing strong contacts between the school and the film, in a manner benefiting the exhibitor at his box office, the MPPDA has now undertaken widespread circulation of pictorial displays from which the student may gather material for study and discussion of the historical aspects, economic and other conditions of subjects covered in new "selected" pictures. Invitations were extended by the MPPDA to school systems, YMCA's, church groups and others to use these displays, supplied, in the form of a set of stills, by the MPPDA. To the MPPDA's invitation on the "Romeo and Juliet" release, 1,800 acceptances were received in a few weeks, all resulting in considerable publicity attention for the showing at the local theatre. Already some 50 "Romeo and Juliet" pictorial displays are in use in schools, libraries, auditoriums. The New York City libraries alone are using nine displays. All outstanding productions henceforth will be similarly treated.

AUDIENCES RESPOND TO ROXY STAGE NEWS

The Roxy theatre on Broadway reports an appreciative audience reaction to its recently inaugurated program feature of a three-minute announcement from the stage of news highlights of the day, immediately following the showing of the newsreel.

The review of the day's news is recited from the stage each evening at about 7:30 by Russ Brown, while a rotating globe presents a screen pictorial background. The material is compiled with the cooperation of the World-Telegram and the United Press, which are given credit.

Schools and parents frequently are in cooperation with local theatres in tying in motion pictures with the classroom for mutual benefit. Typical of a condition existing in dozens of communities is the School Motion Picture Committee in New York, representing parents and teachers in 75 public and private schools of the Metropolitan area, which, on Friday, will resume its publication of recommended lists of weekend film fare for boys and girls of school age. The list this fall will start with the programs of 34 theatres; it began a year ago with only four.

Theatres Cooperate

Mrs. Alonzo Klaw, chairman, said theatre managers have eliminated, whenever possible, from their newsreels, trailers, shorts, or stage shows any episodes the committee considered of questionable taste.

However, she said, the committee had been unable in many instances to recommend even such pictures as "Little Lord Fauntleroy," "Gentle Julia" and "Modern Times," because they had been coupled with films considered unsuitable.

Mrs. William Barclay Parsons, Jr., president of the Parents League, is vice-chairman of the committee, and Mrs. Irving Heyman, of the United Parents Association, secretary.

Exhibit at Columbia "U"

Probably the most outstanding motion picture publicity still display effected to date, addressed to 11,000 school teachers who have in their charge some 500,000 students, was a feature of the summer session at Teachers College, Columbia University. A motion picture exhibit placed in the college library under the sponsorship of Prof. Fannie Dunn, who taught a graduate course on the Use of Motion Pictures in Education, and Miss Eleanor Dye, library assistant in charge of visual aids, was on view from July 20th to August 1st.

The materials of the exhibit were organized in three sections:

I. "The School of the Movies"—an illustrated study prepared under the direction of Mrs. Allan Abbott. These materials show the results of a study of preferences of high school students at East Orange, N. J., Greenwich, Conn., and Weequahic High School, Newark, N. J. Stills of the ranking films were shown in the exhibit with placards indicating differences of opinion, particularly between age levels and between boys and girls. "Mutiny on the Bounty" received top rating by the boys in all grades of all schools and by all grades of girls in all three schools except the youngest group in one school. Following in order were "The Lives of a Bengal Lancer," "The Crusades," "Les Miserables," "Tale of Two Cities" and "The Scarlet Pimpernel."

II. The second section of the exhibit displayed an exhaustive file of motion picture literature of interest to educational leaders. This included study courses for motion picture appreciation groups, film estimates, and film publications.

III. The third section of the exhibit was a set of research photographs prepared on the MGM picture, "Romeo and Juliet," for distribution among libraries and educational institutions during the coming fall and winter. These 14 panels were mounted in sequence, each panel accompanied by the descriptive outline prepared by Professor William Strunk, Jr., of Cornell University, who was Shakespearean advisor in production.

MGM has launched a nationwide illustrated essay competition on "Romeo and Juliet," in all elementary and high schools and for adults, clubs, drama study groups, film study groups, musical clubs and Shakespearean societies and the like.

New Study Guide Series

The Scholastic, a national weekly magazine with a circulation of 350,000 in elementary and secondary schools, also has started a series of motion picture guides, the first of which covers Warner Brothers' "The Charge of the Light Brigade" and appears in the issue for September 19th. The guide is prepared by Charles Swain Thomas, professor of English at Harvard University.

The guide for "The Charge of the Light Brigade," which runs eight pages and is illustrated with stills from the picture, relates the historical background of Tennyson's poem, tells of the development of a suitable fiction story for the picture, and describes some of the technical difficulties encountered in filming the battle scenes.

National Decency Legion Reviews 17 New Pictures

The National Legion of Decency reviewed and classified 17 new pictures during the past week. Of these, nine were noted as unobjectionable for general patronage, seven were classed as unobjectionable for adults and one was termed as objectionable in part. The new pictures and their classification follow.

Class A-1, "Unobjectionable for General Patronage": "An All-American Chump," "End of the Trail," "Le Barbier de Seville," "Thank You, Jeeves," "The Girl on the Front Page," "Three Mesquiteers," "The Unknown Ranger," "Trouble Ahead," "Wedding Present." Class A-2, "Unobjectionable for Adults": "Craig's Wife," "East Meets West, "In His Steps," "La Kermesse Heroique," "Sitting on the Moon," "Valiant Is the Word for Carrie," "Weiberregiment." Class B, "Objectionable in Part": "Dodsworth."

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Production at Peak

Production progressed at top speed last week with fourteen pictures going into work and the same number of completed films passing into the editing stage. Participation in the activity was general.

Three films went into work at Radio. "Riddle Of The Dangling Pearl" features James Gleason with Zasu Pitts supported by Louise Latimer, Owen Davis, Jr., and a large cast which includes Arthur Aylesworth, Barbara Barondess, Paul Fix, Spencer Charters, Richard Tucker, George Sorel, Oscar Apfel Bodil Rosing, John Milter and many others. Ben Holmes is directing. "All Scarlet," a race track story, will present Ann Dvorak, Harry Carey, Smith Ballew, Frank M. Thomas, Berton Churchill, Ray Mayer, Harry Janes, Hattis McDaniels and Willie Best. Wallace Fox is the director. The third feature, "Quality Street," adapted from a famous novel and play, has Katherine Hepburn, Franchot Tone and Fay Bainter in the leads supported by Eric Blore, Florence Lake and Estelle Winwood. George Stevens is directing.

Republic also started three. The cast for "The Country Gentleman" lists the veteran stage players, Olsen and Johnson, together with Joyce Compton, Ivan Miller, Wade Boteler, Olin Howard and Ray Corrigan. Ralph Staub directs. "The Big Show," which Joseph Kane is directing, has Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette and Kay Hughes for its leads. "The Mask of Zorro" will feature Robert Livingston, Heather Angel, Emily Fitzroy, Ian Wolfe and Walter Long. Wells Root is directing.

Two pictures were started at Twentieth Century-Fox. Claire Trevor, Isabel Jewell, Gene and Kathleen Lockhart, Victor Kilian, Ed Brophy and Guinn Williams are included in the "Career Woman" cast. Lewis Seiler is the director. "One In A Million" will serve as the screen debut of the famous ice skating star, Sonja Heine. Principal supporting players are Don Ameche and the newcomers, Leah Ray and Borrah Minevitch. Sidney Lanfield is directing.

"College Holiday" was started at Paramount. The cast contains a long list of well known names, such as Jack Benny, Mary Boland, Burns and Allen, Martha Raye, Benny Baker, Elinore Whitney, Johnny Downs, Marsha Hunt, Ben Blue and Sam Hearn. Frank Tuttle is directing.

Sol Lesser started his second picture starring the youthful Bobby Breen. Titled "Rainbow on the River," the supporting cast lists May Robson, Charles Butterworth, Benita Hume, Alan Mowbray, Louise Beavers, Marilyn Knowlton and the Hal Johnson Choir. Kurt Neumann is directing.

With Patsy Kelly, Lyda Roberti and Robert Armstrong as principals, Roach Studio started "Nobody's Baby." Gus Meins is the director.

VAN BUREN BOY MAKES GOOD

Not bad would be the Van Buren, Ark., phrase for the performance of its abruptly famous son, Bob Burns, who has run a ten dollar bill into quite a tidy sum in eighteen months by means of radio, films, an instrument called a bazooka that croaks like a bull frog and an oral delivery neither too like nor unlike that of the late Will Rogers.

The tidy sum is made up, according to report, of $180,000 from Paramount and $75,000 from RKO-Radio, $100,000 from radio and personal appearances, $20,000 for writing the balloons in a syndicated comic strip and an undetermined amount in royalties from sale of a toy model bazooka.

The ten dollar bill was the bazooka virtuoso's net proceeds from an extended and attenuated career in vaudeville as of the date when he appeared as a guest artist on a Rudy Vallee broadcast. Bing Crosby added him to his radio program and took him with him into "Rhythm Rides the Range."

Under David Howard's direction "The Showdown" started at Universal. The cast lists John Wayne, Jean Rogers, Bryant Washburn, Lloyd Ingraham, Margaret Mann, Frank Sheridan and Tommy Bupp.

Grand National gave "Hats Off" the starting gun. It features Mae Clark, John Payne and Helen Lynd with Richard Gallagher, Luis Alberni, Franklyn Pangborn, the Radio Rogues, Val and Ernie Stanton, George Irving and Charles Wilson. Boris Petroff is directing.

MGM's contribution to the new work is "After The Thin Man." Headed by the original stars, William Powell and Myrna Loy, the support includes Elissa Landi and James Stewart with many more names to be added. W. S. Van Dyke is directing.

Completed pictures came in sets of three. Four companies checked in that number. Radio finished "Smartest Girl In Town." Gene Raymond, Ann Southern and Helen Broderick are featured with Eric Blore, Erik Rhodes, Harry Jans and Frank Jenks also listed. Joseph Santley directed. "Winterset," adapted from a popular stage play, also came off the line. The cast is headed by Burgess Meredith, Margo and Eduardo Ciannelli, starred in the original stage version, with Edward Ellis, Paul Guilfoyle, Maurice Moscovitch, Stanley Ridges, John Carradine, Helen Jerome Eddy, Murray Kinnell, Myron McCormack, Bobby Caldwell, Sidney Toler, Mischa Auer and Fernanda Eliscu in support. Alfred Santell directed. The third film, "General Delivery," presents Lee Tracy, Gloria Stuart, Paul Guilfoyle, Barbara Pepper, Judith Blake, John McGuire, Pierre Watkins, George Lloyd, Matty Fain, Frank Conroy, Bryant Washburn and Paul Fix. Edward Killy directed.

MGM's trio look impressive. Joan Crawford, Clark Gable and Franchot Tone head the "Love On The Run" cast, which also lists Reginald Owen, Mona Barrie, Ivan Lebedeff, Charles Judels and William Demarest. W. S. Van Dyke directed. In "The White Dragon" Edmund Lowe, Elissa Landi, Zasu Pitts, E. E. Clive, Ted Healy, Edmund Gwenn, Rafaela Ottiano, Raymond Hatton, Theodore von Seyffertitz, Herbert Rawlinson, Hobart Cavanaugh and Edgar Kennedy will be seen. George B. Seitz directed. "Born To Dance" is the second starring film for Eleanor Powell, in which she is supported by James Stewart, Virginia Bruce, Una Merkel, Sid Silvers, Frances Langford, Buddy Ebsen, Raymond Walburn, Juanita Quigley and Allan Dinehart. Roy Del Ruth directed.

Paramount completed "Jungle Princess." The cast lists Sir Guy Standing, Dorothy Lamour, Ray Milland, Akim Tamiroff, Wendy Barrie, Lynne Overman and Mala. Williame Thiele directed. Long in production, "Champagne Waltz" also moved to the editing repartment. The cast features Gladys Swarthout, Fred MacMurray, Jack Oakie, Veloz and Yolanda, Herman Bing, Fritz Leiber, Vivienne Osborne, Frank Forest, Benny Baker, Ernest Cossart, James Burke, Maude Eburne, Maurice Cass and Guy Bates Post. A. Edward Sutherland directed. The third feature, "Easy To Take," will present Marsha Hunt, John Howard, Eugene Pallette, Richard Carle, Douglas Scott, Robert Greig, Jan Duggan, Marilyn Knowlden, Josephine Whitell, Carl Switzer, Charles Levinson and Billy Lee. Glenn Tryon directed.

First of the three completed for Twentieth Century-Fox is "Wild Brian Kent," a Sol Lesser production. Ralph Bellamy, Mae Clarke, Helen Lowell, Stanley Andrews, Lew Kelley, Eddie Chandler, Richard Alexander and Jack Duffy are the players. Howard Bretherton directed. "Under Your Spell" stars Lawrence Tibbett, and the support lists Wendy Barry, Gregory Ratoff, Arthur Treacher, Gregory Gaye, Berton Churchill, Jed Prouty, Claudia Coleman and Charles Richman. Otto Preminger directed. In "Glory" Jane Darwell, Delmar Byron, Allan Lane, Sara Haden, Margaret Hamilton, James Burke, Russell Hopton, Russell Hicks, William Benedict, Eddie Acuff and John Carradine will be seen. Frank Strayer directed.

Warners' one winds up the list of completed films. "Once a Doctor," directed by William Clemens, will present Donald Woods, Jean Muir, Gordon Oliver, Henry Kolker and Cy Kendall.

ASCAP Charges Radio "Killed" Popular Music

That "excessive use and repetitious public performance by radio, dance halls and sound trucks" has "destroyed" popular music was charged this week by E. C. Mills, general manager of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

"The popular songs of 1934 depreciated 80 per cent in the second year of their life," Mr. Mills said. "There is no such decline in the standard of classical works, the depreciation in their year being but 19 per cent. Eighty-seven leading popular songs were broadcast 1,255,669 times during 1934 by the two major networks, the ASCAP analysis reveals; these same songs received only 252,025 performances on the same networks in 1935. Over 30,000 programs were studied.

"These songs melted like the 'snows of yesteryear' and ASCAP's living songwriters must create new tunes to replace them."

"The older songs survive this musicide better than the new hits," Mr. Mills said. "Such songs as 'Tea for Two,' 'I Got Rhythm,' 'Smoke Gets in Your Eyes,' 'Sweet Sue—Just You,' 'Limehouse Blues,' 'Speak to Me of Love,' 'I'll See You Again,' and 'Woodland Echoes,' which were played more than 10,000 times in 1934, again made the hit list in 1935, our program digest shows.

"This year we are to analyze 100,000 programs."

Would Halt Shift Of RKO's Assets

Chemical Bank and Trust Company, as trustee for the holders of RKO's secured gold notes, moved in the federal district court of New York Tuesday to bar the proposed transfer of the RKO assets securing the notes until it has been compensated for its services as trustee. The bank's petition for compensation will be heard concurrently with the petition of Irving Trust Company as trustee in reorganization of RKO, for authority to retire the last $850,000 of the notes outstanding. The RKO trustee asks that the collateral which will be released as a result be turned over to it.

Federal Judge William Bondy, who has supervision over RKO's reorganization proceedings, is expected back from a European vacation next week, at which time definite hearing dates for the petitions will be set.

The RKO gold notes are held by the Bank of America National Association and are secured by virtually all of the working assets of RKO, including the studio and investments of the parent company in other going subsidiaries. RKO debentures have a second lien on the collateral securing the gold notes while those notes remain unpaid. In the event the court authorizes the payment of the notes, debenture holders are expected to intervene to maintain their status of secured creditors of RKO.

RKO to Retain Spanish Offices, Says Reisman

RKO has no intention of giving up its offices in Spain, Phil Reisman, head of the foreign department for the company, said upon his arrival this week in New York on the Normandie after more than two months abroad, during which he studied the Spanish situation, although he did not visit the country.

There are no changes in the RKO offices abroad, both regarding production and distribution, he said. Mr. Reisman added that business was better in the countries he visited than last year.

Deny Plan to Shift UA Control to London Interests

An internationally conceived plan carried to Hollywood by Captain E. Beddington Behrens of Myers and Company, London financial house, but presumably on behalf of Prudential Life Insurance Company, to convert United Artists Distributing Corporation into a British-controlled company, has been brought to an abrupt end at its beginning, according to Motion Picture Daily. In Hollywood, Dr. A. H. Giannini said: "There is nothing to the Behrens report. It is unfounded. Nothing whatsoever was said about United Artists going under British control." Samuel Goldwyn made a similar statement.

It was said that Captain Behrens, who spent five days on the coast prior to his departure for England on the last eastward trip of the Queen Mary, made that trip for the express purpose of placing before United Artists owner-members the proposal originating in London. It is understood they listened, but that they also rejected the proposition which, London advises, would have been tied up with a public flotation on the other side.

United Artists Distributing is one-sixth British as currently constituted through Alexander Korda and London Films. The remaining owner-members, their holdings on a parity basis, are Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Charles Chaplin and Mr. Goldwyn.

Captain Behrens steadfastly refused to talk about the purposes of his quick visit. As a matter of fact and prior to his departure, he had insisted he had not come over for business.

Lewin, Goulding Quit MGM Posts

Exercising his right under a clause in his contract permitting him to cancel the agreement if Irving Thalberg were no longer available, Albert Lewin, associate producer at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, has tendered his resignation to the studio heads, to be effective upon the completion of "Good Earth," which he is supervising. At the same time, Edmund Goulding has quit the direction of "Maytime," declaring another director should handle the picture since he worked so closely with the late Mr. Thalberg.

Maxwell Deal For G.B. Off, London Hears

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

John Maxwell's deal for Gaumont British, set on Sunday, fell through two days later on Tuesday, according to reports circulated in London and believed in many sources to be authentic.

The result is a deadlocked situation precipitated further by the stand of Joseph M. Schenck that the Ostrer brothers could not dispose of their holdings in Metropolis and Bradford Trust without the former's express consent. He is said to have informed the Ostrers that he views any contemplated sale on their part as illegal and a cause for legal action as a method of compelling Isidore Ostrer to go through on the terms of the deal originally struck in New York in July.

It is learned that the Schenck deal, made jointly on behalf of Twentieth Century-Fox and Loew's, provided for approximately $2,000,000 in cash and $1,000,000 in new shares; that Isidore and Mark Ostrer accepted but Maurice Ostrer raised objections on the premise that control of Gaumont British would pass from London to New York. Another report insists that the Ostrers then traded with Mr. Schenck on the basis of a cash turnover of approximately $4,000,000, but that Mr. Schenck flatly refused to consent to any rewriting of the terms.

Captain E. Beddington Behrens, who returned to London from New York this week, is believed to have been acting for Mr. Maxwell in an effort to purchase Twentieth Century-Fox and Loew's stock in M. and B. Joseph M. Schenck is on record with having admitted a recent offer had been made by Mr. Maxwell, but his company, he added, would not sell.

President S. R. Kent of Twentieth-Century-Fox sailed for London on Wednesday.

The Leeds and district branch of the Cinematic Exhibitors' Association has passed a resolution: "that this meeting views with alarm the possibility of more British cinema screens coming under foreign control and urges the General Council to use all its influence to prevent anything of the sort, either now or in the future."

Conrow Now Operating Manager for Erpi in East

L. W. Conrow, former general manager of Electrical Research Products, Inc., eastern division, has been made general operating manager, reporting to Whitford Drake. He will be in full charge of all installation and service east of the Rocky Mountains. This will include the headquarters operating division department. He will also have charge of the merchandise departments.

Awaits Davis Hearing

Jack L. Warner has deferred his departure from London for New York pending a hearing on the action against Bette Davis, who has been signed by Toeplitz Productions to star in two pictures.

PARAMOUNT SETTLES E. M. LOEW'S SUIT; MORE TRADE PRACTICE ISSUES

Company Pays Independent Circuit Owner $70,000 in New England Product Monopoly Suit for $5,000,000

Paramount in New England this week settled the E. M. Loew anti-trust action charging monopolization of product, while trade practices were the subject of developments in three other directions:

Renewed efforts are to be made by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to obtain distributor action on the ten-point program of fair practice.

Allied States of Illinois determined to fight distributors on clearance.

Representative Wright Patman, it was learned, plans to seek elimination of producer-circuit theatres through Congressional action, a proposal heard at Allied States Association's convention in Cleveland last spring.

Five-year-old anti-trust actions, charging product monopoly, against Paramount and affiliated circuits in New England, were withdrawn by E. M. Loew, independent circuit owner, on the payment by Paramount of $70,000 to Herman A. Mintz, who had represented Mr. Loew in the negotiations.

Mr. Loew, in 1931, had asked for triple damages of more than $5,000,000, on alleged grievances growing out of his operations as a Boston circuit owner. Some ten suits involved had progressed to the point where a special master, following hearings in Boston, recommended payment by Paramount to the plaintiff of $300,000. In 1933, Paramount-Publix went into receivership and Mr. Loew then filed claims for $6,000,000, based on his original and then pending anti-trust actions. Publix Theatres Corporation and Olympia Theatres Corporation, circuit subsidiaries of Paramount, both solvent at the time, were also named defendants in additional suits in which Mr. Loew claimed damages of another $6,000,000. Then when Olympia went into receivership the plaintiff filed further suits against that subsidiary for another $6,000,000 and also filed claims of $5,099,000 against certain solvent subsidiaries of Olympia.

Reorganization of Paramount in 1934 brought consolidation of all the claims at a total of $5,215,000.

Paramount's trustees variously conducted negotiations for a settlement during the corporation's reorganization. This week's settlement was concluded by Root, Clark, Buckner and Ballantine, counsel for Chares D. Hilles, who continues as trustee for Paramount Publix on unfinished business started by the trustee triumvirate before reorganization was effected last year. Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe, in New York, approved the settlement.

Mr. Loew is the defendant in a pending action taken during the summer by George Ryan, his attorney in early settlement negotiations in the case, who, after resigning, sued Mr. Loew for compensation for his services.

Mr. Loew's plaintiff corporations in the several actions were the Dorchester (Mass.) Theatre Company, of Boston; Capital Amusement Company, of Lynn, Mass.; E. M. Loew's Pawtucket (R. I.) Theatre, Inc., and E. M. Loew, Inc., of Boston.

Reports heard along Broadway indicated that

16 SCREEN STARS TAKE STAGE ROLES

Sixteen motion picture players are scheduled for appearances this season in plays on Broadway. The actors and actresses and their vehicles are:

Tallulah Bankhead, "Reflected Glory"; Arthur Byron, "Hamlet"; Kitty Carlisle, "White Horse Inn"; Ina Claire, "End of Summer"; Jimmie Durante, "Red, Hot and Blue"; Lillian Gish, "Hamlet"; John Halliday, "Tovarich"; Helen Hayes, "Victoria Regina"; Katharine Hepburn, "Jane Eyre"; Leslie Howard, "Hamlet"; Henry Hull, a Sophie Treadwell play; Walter Huston, "Othello"; Ethel Merman, "Red, Hot and Blue"; Osgood Perkins, "End of Summer"; Margaret Sullavan, "Stage Door"; Clifton Webb, "And Stars Remain."

MPTOA Renews Demands; Illinois Allied To Fight B & K Clearance; Patman Would Bar Producer Theatres

Edward L. Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, is due in New York from his home in Columbus, Miss., to demand a "showdown" on the MPTOA's program for the adoption by distributors and exhibitors of ten "fair" trade practices through which, the association hopes, much of the anti-trust and trade practice controversy between buyer and seller would be ended, and, instead, a court of adjustment be established to settle differences within the industry.

Mr. Kuykendall was to start north on Tuesday, stopping for exhibitor conferences in Philadelphia, and arriving in New York armed with the organization's demand of acceptance or rejection of the program by the distributors. Several distributors, as already reported, have agreed to a number of the proposals, but none has been adopted. The distributors have variously been charged with procrastinating.

But now, Mr. Kuykendall reports, "We are told that steady progress is being made by at least some of the companies towards working out in their own companies the ten proposals to remedy specific abuses in commercial practices. We hope this is true."

"The whole proposition is squarely up to the distributors," he continued. "The responsibility is entirely theirs to make the next move."

Mr. Kuykendall, in an official bulletin from MPTOA headquarters in New York, declared, "Very soon we shall know whether they intend to keep their promises of sympathetic cooperation with the reputable exhibitors who endorsed and presented these proposals, or take a defiant and indifferent attitude towards our complaints and requests for the cooperation essential to self-regulation within the industry."

Chicago Owners in Threatening Mood

Allied States Association of Illinois, following a series of meetings, has decided to push its fight against major interests over allegedly unfair extra clearance time granted the Balaban and Katz circuit in Chicago. Rosenberg, Toomin and Stein, attorneys for the independents, declare that a suit, embracing 100 individual theatre owners' complaints, will be filed in federal court next week under anti-trust laws charging that B & K and distributors are in contempt of court and punishable by jail sentence under the code as interpreted.

Independents assert that they are barred from moving up to C, B or A week even upon payment of larger rentals.

Independents are expectant that this suit will be a forerunner of federal action to break up trust combinations.

Move Seen in Congress

Possibilities of a new drive against the motion picture industry at the next session of Congress were seen this week in Washington in a bill now being drafted by Representative Wright Patman, of Texas, prohibiting manufacturers or producers from engaging in retail trade and carrying a provision that the exhibition of motion pictures shall be considered retailing. The effect would be to prohibit producer-circuit theatres, for which Allied States Association has been campaigning since its annual convention in Cleveland last spring. Allied contends that such elimination would remove much of the controversy between the majors and independents over trade practices.

Although Mr. Patman's bill is said to be intended to further the campaign against mail order houses and chain stores, the first step in which was the enactment last session of the Robinson-Patman anti-price discrimination act, which has been held informally by the Federal Trade Commission not to involve films, the new bill is much broader in scope and will affect many concerns in various lines which operate their own retail outlets.

Inclusion now in the Patman proposals of a specific reference to motion pictures is seen in Washington as evidence that an independent exhibition minority has joined the independent grocers and other tradesmen who have been the backbone of the support for the fight on chain stores.

There is considerable doubt whether Congressman Patman's new proposal will be as favorably received. For one thing, constitutionality is questioned.

F. R. Ayer Passes

Fred Rollins Ayer, sales manager of the Bright Water Paper Company at Adams, Mass. and father of Fred Ayer, former member of MOTION PICTURE HERALD editorial staff, and now a partner of the play producing firm of Ayer and Minis, Inc., died unexpectedly last weekend at St. Luke's Hospital in New York following an operation. Surviving are his widow, five children and two sisters. The next day, Fred Wellington Ayer, grandfather of Fred Ayer, died at Bangor, Me., at the age of 81. He was noted as a philatelist.

A. H. Whittendale Dies

Ansley H. Whittendale, 52, one time personal representative for many prominent players, died late last week in New York in his Piccadilly Hotel room of a heart attack.

Balaban & Katz Dividend

Balaban & Katz in Chicago has declared a quarterly dividend of $1.75 on the seven per cent preferred stock, payable October 1.

MEXICAN MINISTRY DEMANDS QUOTA RESTRICTION OF IMPORTED FILMS

Proposes to Committee That Number of Distributors Be Limited, Each to Represent One Producer

by JAMES LOCKHART

in Mexico City

Curbing film imports, demanding that distributors of foreign pictures give Mexican productions a one to five exhibition ratio, and ending monopolies of distribution are figured by the Mexican ministry of finance to be sure fire methods of procedure to grant the domestic industry further state aid and to save it from being swamped deep in the red by overwhelming competition from abroad. To attain all these ends, the ministry has presented to a special committee for report a proposition which features the following demands:

Restriction of the footage of films Mexican and foreign distributors may import to the equivalent of 20 pictures a year for each company.

No additional foreign distributors will be registered; No company may represent several producers under a single permit; A form of interexchange should be established whereby distributors of foreign pictures must handle at least one Mexican made film for every five or six pictures they import; Exhibition of the native film on a basis identical with that of the imports shall be required.

As soon as the committee acts, the ministry will ask congress to make the proposition a law. Action of the committee is looked for early next month.

Another form of state aid, with a big brother spirit rather than czarism, has engaged the active interest of the government. The plan, suggested by Manuel Reachi, who has had considerable Hollywood experience, calls for establishment of an advisory council of three: one who knows film financing up and down and across; another who is a recognized production authority at home and abroad, and the third an ace at distribution. The proposition has been given in charge of the ministry of national economy for examination and early report.

Mr. Reachi told the government that the slow progress of this country's film industry is due primarily to lack of professional and technical means for making commercially good pictures, a dearth of truly competent directors who have had wide experience, little if any knowledge of how to attain cash and artistic profits from films, and primitiveness with regard to skilled contacts for international distribution on a large scale.

"If these things are accomplished soon, then Mexico will have made a real start toward having a really important cinematographic industry," he said. "Apart from these principal points of the program, it is urgent that more and greater attention be given picture plots and technique that will command public interest. The Mexican picture industry requires government technical as well as financial assistance."

The government has accorded native producers exemption from income tax on proceeds of their film ventures and has promised further monetary assistance to the industry. President Lazaro Cardenas has assigned various government departments to develop a program for additional official aid.

Not a "Fine Art"

Pictures are not to be shown, at least for commercial pictures, in the Palace of Fine Arts (National Theatre), the $6,000,000 marble hall which the Mexican government took 30 years to build here for the exposition of fine arts, announces the ministry of public education, the edifice's custodian. Films are not included in the ministry's definition of "fine arts."

Non-commercial films, such as those depicting Mexico's social advancement, industrial and agricultural expansion, public works and scenic beauties may be shown in the Palace, the ministry says, but it prefers to keep the hall as non-cinematographic as possible.

Seek Court Test

Mexican operators of a Mexico City cinema are seeking a court test of the presidential decree enacted last year which exempts from ground taxes theatres that give shows of a cultural nature. The suit is in connection with the exhibitors' fight against paying some $3,600 the Mexico City civic government demands as ground taxes on their house. The plaintiffs assert that their place is covered by the presidential decree. The city argues that such is not the case, as the decree applies only to stage theatres and the exhibitors' establishment is used purely as a cinema.

Czechoslovakian Deal

Made-in-Mexico pictures, feature dramas and comedies as well as such tourist enticers as scenics and folklores, are to be exhibited in Czechoslovakia as a result of a deal made in Prague by the Cinematografica Latino Americano, S. A. (CLASA), one of the larger Mexican producers. The deal was aided by the Mexican and Prague governments, which have become pretty thick on the proposition of a mutual stimulation of commercial and friendly relations.

Some large American producers propose to establish studios in Lower California for the making of pictures in Spanish for the Mexican and other Latin-American markets, according to reports reaching Mexico City from Tiajuana.

Rites for J. P. Taylor

Funeral services were held last Saturday in Hollywood for J. P. Taylor, 73, superintendent of Warners' Sunset Studio since 1917. He died last Wednesday at his home. He is survived by one son, James E. Taylor, a member of the Los Angeles Board of Education.

Court Dismisses Music Picketers

Two members of Local 802 of the American Federation of Musicians were arrested in New York last Saturday night while picketing in front of the Capitol on Broadway in the union's drive for the reemployment of musicians at film houses. They were dismissed at the West Side court, however, when brought up on disorderly conduct charges.

Three girls arrested while picketing in front of the same house last Thursday night were also dismissed in night court. The union has placed pickets at the RKO Jefferson and the Academy of Music on 14th St., bringing the total of houses to 23 in Manhattan, Bronx and Brooklyn. No decision has been made as yet relative to the extension of the campaign in other cities.

Meanwhile, exhibitors elsewhere were confronted with other problems of unionism. In Lincoln, Nebr., resolutions favoring two men in a booth and the return of orchestras to theatres were passed at the sessions of the Nebraska Federation of Labor. The two-man bill has appeared regularly in the state legislature for years.

In Los Angeles, Projectionists' Local 150, I.A.T.S.E., has served notice on Grover Smith, operator of the Roxie and Casino, Glendale, that unless the IATSE terms are met the union will resume its picketing the house. The union has granted a nine-day grace period during the period of negotiation, although an early setlement seems unlikely.

Negotiations between the Independent Theatre Owners and the IATSE in Los Angeles are still under way.

George H. Westley, Playwright, Is Dead

George Hippisley, better known as George Hembert Westley, who, after serving anonymously for 26 years as humor editor of The Boston Transcript, came into fame two years ago by writing "The House of Rothschild," produced by Darryl F. Zanuck for his Twentieth Century company, died in Boston Monday. He was 71 years old.

His plays include "The Scarlet Pimpernel," "The Intruder," "Dr. Presto" and "The Belle of Baltimore." He was a special writer on The Boston Transcript from 1906 to 1929.

Distributors Busy On Sales Tax Appeal

Distributors are preparing in New York their appeal from an appellate court decision that film rentals within the city are subject to the municipal sales tax and arguments are expected to be set for hearing by the court of appeals at Albany about October 25.

The White Hunter

(20th Century-Fox)

Drama

The locales of this production are the jungles and plains of Africa. The story told is powerful drama. A white hunter leads a big game hunt. In the safari are a man and woman who, years previous, in England, caused shame and disgrace to the hunter. With them is the man's daughter by a previous marriage. Beset with the dangers of the jungle, wild animals and a tropical storm, the hunter is faced with two dynamic problems. Shall he revenge himself upon the pair who caused his ruin in civilization? Or shall he permit his love for the girl to temper his wrath? How the dual questions are answered promises to be vivid, action packed dramatic entertainment.

Beside story quality, the picture has other values automatically recommending it to the attention of showmen and audiences. The story is by Gene Markey, author of "King of Burlesque" and "Private Number" and collaborator on "Girl's Dormitory." Direction is by Irving Cummings.

Warner Baxter and June Lang, featured in "The Road to Glory," again are starred. Second important characters are Wilfred Lawson, and Gail Patrick. Lawson is a favorably appearing newcomer who has had considerable New York and European stage experience. He also is in "Ladies In Love," a 20th-Fox picture that probably will be released before "The White Hunter."

The supporting cast does not seem to lack in name value; there are Alison Skipworth, George Hassell, Forrester Harvey, Willie Fung, Ernest Whitman, Olaf Hytton, Ralph Cooper and Will Stanton.

Champagne Waltz

(Paramount)

Comedy-Romance with Music

In relation to the character of the story told in this production the title has more than usual significance. The cast looks to be of better than average caliber. The story is fresh and rather unusual as current screen vehicles go. An American swing band invades Vienna and causes the classic music lovers to forget all about Straus waltzes. With a light dramatic and romantic touch to the story, and a tinge of comedy, the film gets underway. The band leader, mainly because of the havoc he has wrought in the lives of the old orchestra leader and his appealing daughter, returns to the States. His manager imports the Straus "Blue Danube"—playing orchestra to New York, where it delivers a knockout blow to the jazz-swing vogue.

Name values approach the important classification as Gladys Swarthout is teamed with the stars of "Texas Rangers," Fred MacMurray and Jack Oakie, in the leads. ·Fritz Leiber portrays the role of the elderly orchestra leader. The famous dancing team of Veloz and Yolanda are in for a spectacular number. Others prominent in the cast are Herman Bing, Vivienne Osborne, presently outstanding in "Wives Never Know," Frank Forest, Benny Baker, Ernest Cossart, James Burke, Maude Eburne and Guy Bates Post.

Of the many musical numbers, lyrics and music for four of them were contributed by Burton Lane and Ralph Fried, Sam Coslow and Frederick Hollender and Leo Robin and William Daly. Three of them, in addition to the big girl glamour feature, are sung by Miss Swarthout. MacMurray sings the fourth. They combine hit tunes with classics.

The story is by Billy Wilder and H. S. Kraft, with screen play by Don Hartman and Frank Butler. Leroy Prinz staged the dances and A. Edward Sutherland is the director in charge.

Luckiest Girl in the World

(Universal)

Comedy-Romance

This story appears to be built of popular elements. Essentially it's comedy and romance. The first seems to be the dominating element. It's about a girl who, wanting to get married, makes a bet with her father that she can live in New York on $150 a month. Trailed by a flatfoot detective, whose ministrations, once discovered, are accepted with good grace, she finds it necessary to share a walkup flat kitchen and bathroom with a man. By hook or crook, mainly through the windfall of a bank night prize, she wins her bet. But the boy she wanted to marry so far forgot himself as to marry another girl and thus cause her to dash back to her community tenant. For a running gag throughout the story, the girl and her guardian become warm admirers of a one punch fighter, that is, it takes only one punch for his opponent to knock him out.

The story is by Anne Jordan, with screen play by Herbert Fields and Henry Myers. Edward Buzzell, whose flair for comedy is well known, is the director.

Two younger players are featured in the leading roles. Jane Wyatt, seen in minor parts in other Universal productions and a star with Ronald Colman in the forthcoming "The Lost Horizon," is the girl. Louis Hayward, currently in "Anthony Adverse," is the kitchen sharing man. Eugene Pallette, in a harassed father role similar to that he occupies in "My Man Godfrey," and Catherine Doucet, are the girl's parents. Her watchdog detective and boon companion of the fight arenas is Nat Pendleton. Phillip Reed is the boy whom Miss Wyatt originally wanted to marry, and the seventh important character is Viola Callahan, landlady of the walkup apartment.

The Making of O'Malley

(Warner)

Character Drama and Romance

The yarn spun in this production is of the regeneration of a hard-boiled, petty-minded cop. It tells about a policeman who lived by the rule book and not the head or heart. Modernly timed, localed in a metropolitan city tenement district, it details the activities of a cop who is ever present when there is a minor infraction to be checked up and who makes an important arrest by mistake, thereby bringing trouble to many and establishing the medium through which he caused his own regeneration as a human being. The production promises to be a combination of drama, romance, comedy, melodrama and near tragedy with considerable human interest content.

The production is based on a Gerald Beaumont story. To insure the full quality of all elements included in the original, William Dieterle, who served similarly on "The Story of Louis Pasteur" and "The White Angel," was assigned as director.

Pat O'Brien, now in "China Clipper," fills the title role. The story seems to serve him with the kind of part in which he does his best work. He is supported by Sybil Jason, currently in "The Captain's Kid," Humphrey Bogart, remembered for his dramatic part in "Petrified Forest" and also with O'Brien in "China Clipper," and Frieda Inescort, who was important in "Give Me Your Heart."

Additional players listed in the cast are Ann Sheridan, affection for whom is the first step in O'Brien's working out of his regeneration, Donald Crisp, Hobart Cavanaugh, a newspaperman desiring the hero, Mary Gordon, Mabel Colcord, Frank Sheridan, Lillian Harmer, Frank Reicher, Henry O'Neill and Craig Reynolds.

All Scarlet (RACING LADY)

(RKO Radio)

Race Track Drama

A race horse story, this picture is adapted from an unpublished Damon Runyon yarn. The screen play is by Dorothy Yost. Generally, following the accepted race formula with all the related excitement, it makes one noticeable departure. The central figure is a girl, a successful trainer, who finds it much easier to understand and handle horses than men.

Locales are Southern California, the Santa Anita Track and a neighboring fair ground oval. Promising to be full of all the action common to track pictures, yet at the same time comparatively free from most of the melodramatic skullduggery that is part of most of them, the first part devotes itself to a picturization of how the girl became a famous trainer. This leads her into partnership and romance with a wealthy owner.

Ann Dvorak, last in "We Who Are About to Die," Smith Ballew, popular radio entertainer who made his film debut in "Palm Springs," and Harry Carey are the principals. The supporting cast, made up of a small group of well-known character actors, includes Frank M. Thomas, Berton Churchill, Ray Mayer, Harry Jans, Hattie McDaniels and Willie Best.

Direction is by Wallace Fox, credited with the handling of "Yellow Dust," "Powdersmoke Range" and "Red Morning."

Theodora Goes Wild

(Columbia)

Comedy

Audiences as well as exhibitors undoubtedly will be pleased to discover that this is a radically different picture for Irene Dunne. With the possible exception of a few sequences in "Showboat," it is, in story character, as different from anything Miss Dunne recently has done as day is from night. Literally, and lending added significance to title meaning, the part she essays is that of a girl who literally and actually goes wild. From first to last the story is comedy; much of it, as a matter of fact, is of the harum scarum crackpot variety.

It concerns a prim, reserved New England miss who accidentally writes a sexy best selling novel. Through certain circumstances, which include an invasion of gaudy flamboyant New York high life spots, she is compelled to live in the manner of one of the characters she created. Relieved of her rigid moralistic inhibitions, she meets romance, and to the tune of situations describable as "wild" comedy ensues a denouement which is as surprising as it is humorous.

The story is an original by Mary McCarthy, Adapting it to screen purposes took the attention of Sidney Buchman for several months. It is being directed by Richard Boleslawski, whose contributions to the screen need no repetition.

Naturally modernly timed and geared, the primary appeal of the story does not seem to threaten to be confined to sophisticates, even though, in certain phases, it has a rather intimate character. Generally it seems to consist of popular stuff.

With Miss Dunne the central figure, Melvyn Douglas, currently in "Gorgeous Hussy," is the man in the case. The supporting cast is rounded out by Rosalind Keith, Mary MacLaren, Thomas Mitchell, Elizabeth Risdon, Margaret McWade, Thurston Hall and Nana Bryant.

Love on the Run

Comedy-Romance

A glance at the more important credits in this production should prove an eyeful to exhibitors and theatre goers. The title should be provocative of some unique exploitation that assumes more importance when considered in association with the story. That story has a running start, as it appeared serially in a popular magazine not so long ago. It's about an American heiress who ran away from her own wedding; a reporter in search of a big story; another reporter who can catch up with neither the romance nor the story. As it carries them all over Europe and up into the stratosphere, it involves the trio with a group of international spies and pursues an exciting course, full of fun and danger, prior to its surprising climax.

From a mere name standpoint, it again teams two of the industry's top names, Clark Gable and Joan Crawford. First together in "Possessed," they also have been co-starred in "Chained," "Dancing Lady" and "Forsaking All Others." In the third important role, Franchot Tone is featured. The supporting cast is not to be taken lightly, as it includes Reginald Owen, Mona Barrie, Ivan Lebedeff, Charles Judels and William Demarest.

Though naturally and logically, stars and story content and swank production effects are the elements given primary consideration, the prestige of the director, in this case, assumes an unusual importance. W. S. Van Dyke's record is sprinkled with any number of outstanding successes. He is one of the few directors whose name appears to have a certain box office value.

While Gable and Miss Crawford are characteristic in the story, Tone's role is something rather new for him. He is cast as a whimsical comedian. The assignment is not being considered as an experiment; it is Van Dyke's conviction that in this type of role Tone will definitely come into his own.

Topical Romance-Drama

The work of postal inspectors and operations of the Post Office Department in protecting the mails, preventing their illegal use and the apprehension of criminals, is the background for this comedy tinged dramatic romance. Production features, actual locales having been used, should provide a comprehensive insight into the operations of a modern metropolitan post office. To counterbalance the educational and entertainment worths of such a background, a topical uptodate story has been prepared.

That story, with fiction blending with fact, is based on actual occurrences. As murder follows a mail truck holdup, the sleuths of the Post Office department go to work and get their man. Woven into the drama is a love story in which the hero also gets the girl. As such, the material is a vivid combination of drama, romance, mystery and comedy.

The film again will team Lee Tracy and Gloria Stuart, who have been seen together in "Private Jones" and "I'll Tell the World." Tracy's last picture was "Sutter's Gold"; Miss Stuart's most recent appearances were "The Crime of Doctor Forbes" and "36 Hours To Kill." A noted stage and radio personality, Judith Blake, makes her screen debut, and another comparatively new player, Paul Guilfoyle, also has an important role. Many known names are listed in the support, such as Barbara Pepper, John McGuire, Pierre Watkin, Matty Fain, Frank Conroy, Bryant Washburn, Paul Fix and Robert Warwick.

John Twist, Edmund L. Hartman and Julius Klein are credited with having collaborated on the screen play, and William Killy, maker of "Second Wife" and "Bunker Bean," is the director.

Easy to Take

(Paramount)

Comedy

A comedy gag that is the fundamental premise of this production should be provocative of unique showmanship. A radio personality who specializes in being the big brother, actually the Uncle Roddy of millions of kid listeners-in, is unexpectedly made trustee of an enormous fund which carries the provision that he must become the guardian of her spoiled little nephew. Uncle Roddy's hatred of brats knows no limit, and it becomes more adamant when the fund turns out to be mythical. Yet because his manager has boasted to the skies about his kindlinesses, the program headliner has to go through with the stunt even though it is necessary to support the boy, his grownup sister, himself and his manager on $40 a week. Pestered by his charge, not knowing what to do about the girl, he gets all the mothers in America down on him when he broadcasts a spanking episode. He finally convinces all, however, that something besides all sweetness and light is necessary to train the younger generation.

John Howard, currently in "Valiant Is the Word for Carrie," is the unwilling guardian. Eugene Pallette is his avid, publicity seeking manager. Douglas Scott is the youngster he must take under his wing, and Marsha Hunt is the girl. The supporting cast includes Richard Carle, Jan Duggan, Robert Greig, Marilyn Knowlden, Josephine Whittell and Billy Lee.

The screen play by Virginia Van Upp is based on a story written by Wayne Kilbourne. Direction is by Glenn Tryon.

The Riddle of the Dangling Pearl

(RKO Radio)

Mystery Drama with Comedy

In this fifth Stuart Palmer story adaptation, Zasu Pitts succeeds Edna Mae Oliver as the redoubtable and resourceful teacher sleuth, Hildegarde Withers. James Gleason again plays Inspector Oscar Piper, as he did in the four previous productions.

The story, while of course entirely different from any of its predecessors, follows the familiar Palmer style. Comedy vies with mystery and there is the necessary romantic content. The exciting and hilarious events entailed, including a pair of murders, revolve about the plot of a gang of international jewel thieves to rob a New York museum of its most prized possession, the famous Cellini Cup. As mystery is logically complicated and full swing given to drama, the two young lovers become involved. Piper stumbles around and Hildegarde, as usual, displays the acumen that clears everything.

The cast supporting Gleason and Miss Pitts is lengthy. Louise Latimer and Owen Davis, Jr., the young lovers of "Murder on the Bridle Path" and "Grand Jury," are together again. The remaining players, while new to Palmer stories, have practically all appeared in recent Radio pictures. Among the better known are Arthur Aylesworth, Barbara Barondess, Paul Fix, Spencer Charters, Richard Tucker, George Sorel, Oscar Apfel, Bodil Rosing and John Miltern.

Production is in the hands of William Sistrom, who was associated with "Murder on the Bridle Path," and Ben Holmes is directing.

Murder with Pictures

(Paramount)

Comedy-Mystery-Drama

The title cues the first exploitation character of this production. Yet, rather than follow the hackneyed formula, the film, while planning to retain all of that stuff that is worthy, will essay to make comedy the outstanding motivating quality. The yarn concerns a newspaper photographer who, while a matrimony seeking bubble dancer is running him in circles, also has an eye on a girl suspected of murder. To solve the murder, divert suspicion from the girl he loves and at the same time get the money with which to pay off the bubble dancer are his problems. He solves them all with a swoop that promises to be acceptable fun and, simultaneously, deep dyed in the wool mystery melodrama.

Based on an original by George H. Doxe, the screen play is by John C. Moffitt, onetime Kansas City newspaper man, and Sidney Salkow. Direction is by Charles Barton.

Lew Ayers, currently in "Lady, Be Careful," is the young man who serves himself with a peck of trouble. Joyce Compton, prominent in "The Holy Lie," is the glamorous dancing girl. Gail Patrick is the girl whom Ayers has to get out of a jam, partly because he's in love with her and partly because he wants to see justice done.

Further name requirements are taken care of by Paul Kelly, Benny Baker, Ernest Cossart, Onslow Stevens, Antony Nace, Joseph Sawyer, Frank Sheridan, Irving Bacon, Purnell Pratt and Christian Rub.

At this time, the production looks like one that can be handled from two angles; either as a uniquely contrived and differently presented mystery drama or as a romantic comedy.

Four Exhibitor Units to Meet

With the national Motion Picture Theatre Owners starting to give consideration to its next annual convention, and with Miami, Fla., now being discussed as the meeting place, four state theatre organizations—affiliated with the MPTOA, and otherwise—this week set dates for their meetings.

The Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana will hold their annual convention in Indianapolis on October 27 with business sessions in the morning and afternoon, a luncheon and a banquet and a program for women guests. Election of officers will be held. Completed details are to be worked out shortly, R. R. Blair, president, said.

Convention Chairman M. A. Rosenberg revealed this week that the Hotel Schenley has been chosen as the gathering place for the annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania on October 19-20 in Pittsburgh. At the same time, Allied Theatres of Michigan revealed its members will gather at the Hotel Statler in Detroit November 4-5. The annual outing of Western Massachusetts Theatres has been set for October 6 at President Nathan Goldstein's camp at Spofford Lake, N. H.

Other exhibitor activities centered around Philadelphia where Lewen Pizor, head of the United M.P.T.O. of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, has named Charles Segall, Ben Amsterdam, Mike Lessey, Milton Rogasner, Norman Lewis and Abe Sablotsky to his grievance committee. At the same time, Mr. Pizor said: "The U.M.P.O.E. of Pennsylvania will be an organization void of all political, personal and antagonistic feelings."

Conclude Trial in Philco-RCA Suit

The trial of the injunction suit brought in the chancery court of Wilmington, Del., against Radio Corporation of America by the Philadelphia Storage Battery Company, parent company of Philco Radio and Television Corporation, ended before Chancellor Josiah O. Wolcott last Friday as the defense rested without calling a witness.

No date was set by the court for argument. The counsel for the plaintiff was given four weeks in which to file briefs, while RCA counsel was given an additional two weeks for filing. John W. Davis, chief counsel for RCA, rested the defendant's case immediately after the court opened Friday morning. Technically the defense opened the day before when Mr. Davis recalled to the stand two of the complainant's witnesses, Charles F. Steinruck, P.S.B. accountant, and Reynolds D. Brown, Jr., engineer, to identify several documents.

Philadelphia Storage Battery is seeking to enjoin RCA from terminating a license agreement whereby Philadelphia has the right to use basic patents in radio and television assigned to RCA.

SUPERVISION OF STAR BROADCASTS ASKED

Close Scrutiny of Material and Appearances Proposed for Exhibitors by Kuykendall

Several hundred motion picture theatre owners, members of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, have concluded that a close scrutiny of the material broadcast and active supervision of the Hollywood stars' appearances on radio programs is the only solution to nationwide complaints of exhibitors that such appearances constitute unfair competition for theatres, according to Edward Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA.

At the same time fanciful reports were current along Broadway that the motion picture industry is considering the appointment of a supervisor of stars' radio activities, in order to alleviate the pressure being brought to bear by exhibitors on producers whose players are active on the air. Although these reports included rumors that such appointment would be made through the office of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America and that Will H. Hays is now conferring with executives of the motion picture and radio industries on selection of the proper man, no confirmation was obtainable. It was said at the MPPDA office that no such proposal is under consideration.

However, it was learned Wednesday that establishment of a radio advisory council to supervise broadcasting activities is under discussion in home offices and may be formally urged for consideration by studies. It was said that should the proposals for regulation of star broadcasts win home office support they would be urged upon the studios immediately.

Aylesworth to Explain

The attitude of the radio industry on the problem is expected to be disclosed by Merlin Hall Aylesworth, chairman of the RKO Radio board, who has just resigned as vice-president of the National Broadcasting Company, when he addresses the Society of Motion Picture Engineers at its semi-annual banquet on October 14th in Rochester. His topic will be "The Relationship of Radio Broadcasting to Motion Pictures and the Theatre."

Added to the dozens of protests coming from exhibitor organizations against the practice of allowing stars to appear indiscriminately on radio programs is one made by the Independent Theatre Owners of America at a meeting in New York this week. Business at New York theatres was reported to be lowered despite surveys from other parts of the country indicating better grosses.

Probably realizing that they cannot keep motion picture stars off the air, the personal publicity and lucrative compensation being too inviting to refuse, the exhibitors seem to agree generally that a close scrutiny and supervision of material designed for the program in order to lessen the injurious effect of the broadcasting on both the industry and individuals participating in the programs, is necessary. Such a plan is urged by the MPTOA in its current bulletin issued over the signature of Mr. Kuykendall.

Says Ban Talk Is "Stupid"

In discussing the radio problem the bulletin observes that "to try to bar any and all motion picture stars from radio broadcasting is stupid and impossible. Movements to bring this about are a waste of time and merely place the exhibitors participating in a foolish position." However, the bulletin suggests:

"It may be necessary to consider each separate proposal for radio appearance on its merits, exercising reasonable judgment and at least a grain of sense as to the adaptability of the stars' talents to radio broadcasting, the frequency of their appearance, what sort of radio program they are to appear on, what staging, material, rehearsal, direction, musical setting, supporting cast and publicity will be provided, and what possible interference with the release of the stars' current pictures is involved."

Sees Name Value Safeguarded

"It has been rather well demonstrated," the bulletin continues, "that any good judgment in these matters on the part of the star or the sponsor is completely lacking; unless the studios who have valuable property rights involved wake up and exercise reasonable control in the situation, they will inevitably find that the public, speaking unmistakably through the box office and film rentals, will show them their mistake."

The article emphasizes the possibly injurious effect of the broadcasts on the star name value which may be reduced by continual appearances and on story values which may be lessened by repetition over the radio in shortened form rather than direct competition with box offices during the hours of the broadcasts. Adequate supervision, the bulletin claims, would be sufficient to offset these.

Photophone Executives Attend Sarnoff Dinner

RCA Photophone executives from the Camden and New York offices were present at the testimonial dinner given David Sarnoff, president of the Radio Corporation of America, in honor of his 30 years of service and leadership in the radio field, Wednesday at the Ritz Carlton Hotel in New York. Among the executives were Edwin M. Hartley, Ralph B. Austrian, Edward Auger, Bernard Sholtz, Barton Kreuzer and David J. Finn.

THESE are among the hundred and one interesting facts about the status of the theatre and conditions as affect showbusiness in many of the world's key cities as detailed by Motion Picture Herald correspondents in the second series of the Showman's Travelogue.

- The Regal Theatre in Bombay, India, has an underground parking space for autos.
- Every Berlin exhibitor must pass an examination on projection.
- Double features are prohibited in Vienna. Theatres there must give one show a week for children at reduced prices.
- Tokyo theatremen plant waiting lines at the box-office before opening to attract trade.
- Budapest de luxe theatres cannot issue cheaper tickets than the prices fixed by the Hungarian Home Office.
- Australian circuits accept the policy of allowing managers to operate "on their own."
- London as a theatre center is considered as 20 cities in one.
- All Cleveland theatres are utilized as community centers.
- Newspapers in Warsaw, Poland, do not regularly publish motion picture news.
- Motion picture newspaper reviews in Columbus, Ohio, are written by the editors themselves.
- Indianapolis theatres receive their sharpest competition from an event that lasts 30 hours.

Comedy-Romance

Once this gets under way it's wild, woozy comedy. Quite a bit of fiddling around, mainly to identify characters and give a hint as to what is to follow, is done in the early reels. After this is over the laughs come thick and fast. For motivation it's somewhat of a comedy romance told against a newspaper background. From a commercial or entertainment standpoint, the story itself doesn't amount to much. What is done while it is being told, and how, is the thing that counts. Generally it follows the idea of a few convivial souls sitting down and recounting hilarious, bizarre events and incidents.

Gagging newspaperman Charlie, given to taking everything that happens with a grain of salt and quite humorously, is thrust into a responsible editorial position. His scatter-brained antics drive all his erstwhile pals to distraction. As some sort of hysterical racketeer twist, just as comic as everything else, is rung in, he finally commits the act that causes girl friend Rusty to announce her marriage to stodgy Dodacker. The news drives Charlie to some real drinking. Not so much bothered about losing the girl, his only aim is to send her a suitable wedding present. He does by getting on the phone and sending fire engines, police squad cars, hearses, in fact anything that rolls and screams, around to the house where the wedding is to take place. Driving up in an ambulance himself, he kidnaps the amazed bride and they ride off in a wagon blazoned "Insane Asylum."

Once the farcical foolishness starts, nothing stops it. Any kind of gag that looks as if it would bring further laughter is yanked in. From that viewpoint, the results are vividly pleasing. To any extent one may care to go, it justifies exhibitors in informing patrons that they have an all-laughfest in store for them.

The President's Mystery

(Republic)

Drama

Not very often is it possible for showmen to adapt the president of the United States as an exploitation adjunct to picture ballyhoo. In connection with this picture, it is not only permissible but probably expected, inasmuch as F. D. Roosevelt is credited with having conceived the idea of the story told in the film. Quite a group of name authors wrote it for the popular magazine in which it appeared. Regular screen writers adapted the combined work of all to the screen.

The show is dramatic mystery, into which an exposition of modern economic-social-political philosophy has been woven. Primarily it is entertainment and one must depend upon his knowledge of local conditions to determine whether he should call patron attention to that quality by using the evident propaganda as a substantiating commercial feature.

Blake, lobbying corporation lawyer, sickens of his career and decides to get away from it. Arranging an auto crash so that it will appear that he has been incinerated, he disappears as Blake and proceeds to a depression wracked locale. Simultaneously his wife, Ilka, is accidently killed, and police suspect Blake. During the investigation, Blake reorganizes the workers, putting their affairs on a living-making basis, and makes them serious competition to the business of one of his former clients, Sartos. Sartos, disturbed by the manner in which the cooperative has been cutting into his receipts, comes to find out why and how. Recognizing Blake, he feels that he can kill two birds with one stone. By turning him over to the police, he believes he can revenge himself upon the erstwhile ally who he thinks has double-crossed him. Also by removing him as the cooperative's inspirational source he can defeat the threat to vested interests. Momentarily prevented from doing so by the enraged packers, Sartos' scheme falls flat when Blake's former butler, Roger, explains how Ilka met her death. As the cooperative visions a vigorous new life under Blake's guidance, he also sees a future happiness with Charlotte, a girl he has grown to love.

Ein Walzer Fuer Dich

(Casino)

German Musical Comedy

The title translates as "A Waltz for You" and if this suggests that attempt has been made to produce a successor to "Two Hearts in Waltz Time" the picture itself indicates that the attempt was largely successful, whether or not the film catches, as that one did, a quirk of popular fancy in the United States. The story is set in the sort of mythical kingdom Lubitsch used to create for Chevalier and the principals are the sleek, sophisticated (in a nice way) kind of people supposed to live in that sort of place. The king is a tenor, his aide a comedian, the duchess a beauty and lady in waiting a dancer. All the usual things happen and there's graceful, polished dialogue between musical numbers. It's never serious.

Production quality is distinctly in the Lubitsch register, which is about tops for this type of material. Mountings are splendid, photography superb, and sequences merge, one into another, with scarcely discernible line of demarcation. Dialogue, according to the reaction of a German audience, is excellent; the English titles with which the picture is supplied are adequate for narrative purposes, although, inevitably, they cannot convey the finer nuances of the repartee.

The story is about the king of Palamo, assumed dead, who is discovered masquerading as a singer and brought to his throne by his country's ministers, who depose the reigning duchess to restore him. A comedian who is his friend goes with him to act as aide-de-camp. Humorous episodes mark the course of events leading to a romantically satisfactory settlement of the struggle for the throne.

Reviewed at the Casino theatre, located in the heart of a German neighborhood, where a largely German audience gave hearty evidence of complete satisfaction.

The Big Game

(RKO Radio)

Gridiron Drama

Presence of a batch of premier football players in the lineup is not the only thing that gives this picture the potentialities of worthwhile entertainment. It's a football story, all right, and there is a big game for a climax. But before that exciting point is reached a well grounded dramatic story is told.

The picture hero, of course, is a football player, working his way through college, meanwhile supporting several relatives on the "legitimate" side money that somehow accrues to a gridiron warrior. While he is performing football feats that win him fame and glory and also an injured leg, his brother does a little bit of gambling on the team. The inevitable scandal breaks and as the story, with a romantic thread woven in, proceeds there is something mysterious about the star's injury. To make sure that they are not going to take a financial beating, the gambling ring hedges bets, and to make doubly sure nothing will go wrong, they kidnap the football hero.

Suspense takes on a comedy contrast as an oldtime star and friend of the kidnaped boy starts a riot in the stadium to give the girl, the coach and all the rest time to dig up the player who can turn defeat into victory. Then comes the big game with its pigskin greats performing in the approved fashion that permits the actor hero to be an athletic hero. The good folk are happy and the bad ones get their deserts.

A topical feature, probably the first of the current series that will reach theatres, the film naturally lends itself to that type of exploitation that has characterized all its similar predecessors.

The Case of the Black Cat

(Warner)

Mystery-Comedy-Romance

Although there is comedy and romance, straightaway mystery dominates this latest adaptation of an Erle Stanley Gardner story. A crime, committed under really baffling circumstances, premises the story. Many become suspect, and a black cat is drawn in to divert suspicion as well as ease dramatic tension. Then redoubtable Perry Mason, this time more distinctly a detective than he is a romantic philanderer, unearths the clues, establishes the reason, finds the culprit and of course wins the girl.

The whole thing is skillfully and shrewdly put together. While holding close to the mystery appeal of its premise, the film is bold enough to step out and be a little different. Consistently keeping its prospective audiences in the dark as to exactly what to expect and just when to expect it, it shuns the formula complications. Nevertheless, with the unforeseen events which take place when a wealthy man is supposedly murdered and close and remote kin start squabbling about the manner in which estate shall be divided, it has a theatrical dramatic quality that gives promises of being acceptable entertainment for the crime mystery addicts and for run of the mill audiences.

In the Perry Mason role, Ricardo Cortez creates a different character. Atmospherically flippant and not without an eye to a pretty miss, he is, however, a detective, first determined to solve a crime and then take his fun when and where he can find it. New faces also are seen. Thus, in connection with talking about an almost trademarked title, exhibitors are given the opportunity of talking about new personalities.

The Magnificent Brute

(Universal)

Comedy-Drama

Recognizing the values tending to establish "The Magnificent Brute" as desirable mass entertainment is not difficult. The story is robust, flamboyant comedy drama. In it the elements of hokum humor, drama, romance and conflict, all pitched to a very definite keynote of mob psychology and human interest, all intelligently blended. It is well produced. Players assigned to the principal and supporting roles are unusually characteristic. Production details and effects, especially those reproducing the inside workings of a steel mill, are high grade. The story, always carrying an evident vein of excitement and one in which there is an air of never knowing just what is going to happen next, flows smoothly. Drama is contrasted with he-man comedy. Suspense has been deftly applied. There's not very much love interest, yet what there is has considerable strength.

Modernly timed and so produced that auditors come under the illusion that they are living with the characters, the story is amplified by all necessary elements. Rowdy, confident, Steve (just call me "Big") Andrews moves into a steel town. Immediately he's at war with another cocky big hulk of a steel puddler, Bill Morgan. Triumphant over his sneered at competitor in a metal producing contest, Steve takes Morgan's girl, Della, away from him. An incident in which one of Steve's gang accidentally dies presages the ensuing drama. Steve takes up a big collection for the widow. Egged on by his pals and particularly by Della, Steve essays a test of athletic strength with a carnival wrestler. Bested, he's in wrong with the hands who have bet their money on him. Morgan, in the meantime, being a true villain, has put his money, and that of the collection which Della has been guarding, on the professional wrestler. With a lot of loot and not caring what may happen to Steve or the widow, he tries to get Della to run out with him. But Blossom Finney, Steve's landlady, who all through the picture has treated him as a brainless child, gets wind of the plot. She sends her hero-worshiping son, Pete, to notify Steve. The ensuing sequences, in which Pete's life is menaced, are packed with suspense. Nevertheless they lead to the climaxing situation in which Steve, after giving Morgan a very thorough lambasting, forces him to confess his plot.

The show seems to have the stuff that registers well with the masses. There's nothing pretty about it. Dealing with rough, tough individuals—just as hard and, when one comes down to it, as reliable as the steel they make, the film avoids any lavender and old lace.

Previewed in the Ritz Theatre, Los Angeles. The audience reacted favorably. It was noticeable that women in the house were getting just as much fun out of the show as were men.

La Kermesse Heroique

(American Tobis)

French Heroic Comedy

Few importations from Continental Europe stand comparison with this newest arrival from France for the universal thoroughness of its humor. It is adult entertainment, handsomely mounted, and while the dialogue is in French the story is one easily followed, besides, adequate English titles are superimposed. The production has been awarded the Grand Prix Du Cinema Francaise and the Gold Medal of the Venice International Exposition of Cinematography.

The title translated, with reservations, is "Carnival in Flanders," and refers, ironically, to the antipathy of the Flemish people for the Spaniards when Philip of Spain was all-conquering. A very fine job has been accomplished by Jacques Feyder in his directorial treatment of the picture. The acting is uniformly good with excellent characterizations by several of the principals, notably Francoise Rosay as Madame Burgomaster, Jean Murat as the Duke, Alerme as the Burgomaster and Louis Jouvet as the Chaplain.

The story is laid in the Flemish village of Boom in September of the year 1616. The opening sequences show Boom in the throes of preparation for the annual "kermesse," or carnival. The Burgomaster and his aldermen are sitting for a portrait, the village militia is receiving instruction in the use of firearms, the women golk are cleaning house and the Burgomaster's daughter is sad because her father desires that she marry the butcher instead of the young artist.

A courier arrives with the news that a Spanish Duke with a military escort will spend the night at Boom. The village citizenry become panic-stricken, expecting the complete devastation of the town. The Burgomaster proposes to play dead, hoping the Spaniards will go on to another town. The male population is all for hiding. But the Madame Burgomaster has other ideas. Acting on her plea the women receive the Duke and his retinue with true Flemish hospitality. Hearty comedy, from the time of their arrival to the dawn of the next day when they depart peacefully, marks the soldiers' stay in Boom.

At the behest of the Madame Burgomaster the Duke orders the marriage of the daughter and the artist, and exempts the village from taxes for a year. The Burgomaster, arising from his supposed deathbed, takes credit for maneuvering the tax relief.

The Devil on Horseback

(Grand National)

Musical Comedy

This is a musical comedy in color, the action somewhat more outdoor than indoor, the music alternately robust and romantic, the time today and the place a mythical mountain republic in South America, where customs and costumes indicate Spanish, Mexican and, as to dancing, Cuban influence. The leading characters (played by Del Campo) is a crooning gaucho with the repute of a Villa and the habits of a Robin Hood. The object of his yearning is a motion picture star (enacted by Lili Damita) and his rival for her affections is the son of an American coffee magnate (Fred Keating). The rivalry is for the most part friendly and no blood is let in all the plentiful riding, raiding and discharging of pistols.

Outstanding sequences portray the romantic gaucho's raiding of a town and taking over of a cinema so that he may see his favorite star on the screen without risk of distraction or capture, the raiding of the express train on which his beloved and his rival are passengers and the agreeable abduction of their party, the fiesta at his hacienda and the frustration of a malevolently instructed detachment of military police sent to wreak official vengeance upon the adventurous romanticist. Comedy is supplied by Tiffany Thayer as the star's press agent, and Jean Chatburn as her maid.

In the story, Pancho Granedo, friend of the people and opposed by the government, learns by radio broadcast that Diane Corday is in his country accompanied by his American friend, Gary Owen, on a personal appearance and coffee publicity tour. He stops their train to visit with them. Her press agent fakes an abduction story and Pancho converts it into reality, taking the party to his ranch, where he competes with Owen for Diane's affections. Military police come to take him and, learning that he is to be killed, Diane pretends to love him, saving his life. The execution order is countermanded when war is declared and Diane returns to her country with Owen, Pancho leading his followers to the defense of his country.

15 Maiden Lane

Drama

A casual glance at name values and title significance might indicate that this picture isn't very impressive. However, looked at from another important angle, whether the show is capable of giving entertainment, there's an entirely different story to be told. "15 Maiden Lane" is a freshly contrived dramatic story about thieves in the diamond business and a girl who succeeds in hoisting them by their own petard. In out of formula fashion, it elects to ignore love interest as that quality is made a part of most pictures and base its bid for audience recognition on a series of well considered and developed dramatic, comedy-tinged situations.

The plot is simple. A jewelry robbery has been committed in the headquarters of New York's diamond industry, one of the world's most carefully guarded buildings. Production details vividly illustrate the efficiency of this protection and they have exploitation merit parring that of story worth. Jane Martin is made an innocent accomplice in the robbery. Herself a partner in a jewelry concern, she poses as a gem thief and forms an alliance with slick crook Peyton. Her objective is to run down a combination of thieves and insurance men who have been preying on dealers. Peyton's activities cause several murders. In personal danger, but nevertheless drawing closer to the higher ups and determined to see the game through, she finally obtains the knowledge she has been seeking. Calling police, who kill Peyton, she puts the finger on supposedly respectable Lockhart as the menace to the jewelers.

While the straight, semi-mystery story moves consistently, occasion is taken to give auditors a glimpse into the more secret business of diamond cutting. One sequence, the actual splitting of a large diamond, packs almost as much suspense as does the story. Also, the drama has an unusual comedy contrast, this in dialogue. The picture has a timely character that no audience can possibly miss, as it concerns itself with crooks attempting to establish alibis by mouthing just how much they think of the now widely discussed Constitution.

Whatever apparent weakness there may seem to be in the matter of name importance is made up for by the individual and collective work of the players. Claire Trevor and Cesar Romero are convincing as principals.

(RKO Radio)

Very Good

The historical landmarks that are such through connection with the life of George Washington are many. The greatest number of these, undoubtedly, are situated in the state of Virginia, where he was born and where his remains now are. The camera by means of these landmarks traces Washington's life in Virginia. The short is excellently photographed and even without counting its historical value is an entertaining one. Tuneful

The singing of the Hall Johnson Choir, a Negro group, is featured in this short subject. The story itself revolves around a meeting that has been called to determine if enough money has been raised to send their pastor to a Birmingham conference. When it is discovered that one of the members of the committee is short $3 in her accounts the chairman calls for a collection to make up the difference. The choir sings but the collection is small. The choir sings again but this time the tune is a much livelier one and more than the amount needed is raised. Running time, 16 minutes.

Beach Combers

Very Good

Oswald and his shadow, Elmer the dog, spend a day at the beach. While Oswald goes fishing Elmer watches the lunch basket. The duck family also are present and the ducklings make a foray on the lunch basket but Elmer drives them off. Elmer is lured away by the black duckling, Fooey, who drags a bone under Elmer's nose. The others make away with the basket and float it out to sea, but an octopus seizes the basket and the ducklings. Elmer traps the octopus and rescues the ducklings. Meanwhile little Fooey has devoured the lunch. Running time, 9 minutes.

Benchley Film Short, "How to Vote," Gets High Commendation

Humorist Seen as Foolishly Funny Political Speaker

By CHARLES SCHNEIDER

TO appraise the new films which came to town yesterday on purely an emotional basis—foregoing artistry and importance for the moment—would be to toss our critical hats into the air over that infectiously funny Robert Benchley short subject, "How to Vote," at Loew's State.

This is not intended as a reflection upon the State's feature film, nor upon the Palace's enjoyable musical show, both of which are reviewed elsewhere on this page.

But the only way to give this Benchley short the credit due is to drag it out here in front—a position it should have no trouble in holding.

"How to Vote" is the funniest picture, regardless of length, that I have seen in months. Or hope to see for a long time to come.

It is a simple little thing, but to attempt a thorough description of its humorous and human content would be futile. Briefly, the spectacle presented is that of a big, good-natured but clumsy lummox trying to make a political speech.

Into the Breach

The speaker of the evening—the candidate—is unable to attend the meeting in dear old Eighth Ward. So his substitute, Mr. Benchley, steps into the breach.

Benchley forgets his speech, sputters, scowls, grins and bites his lip. He goes round and round, meeting himself on the turns. He "double talks" and accentuates the wrong words, with gestures of distraction and embarrassment, so completely foolish, yet so human.

One of the guests on the speakers' stand rustles a newspaper. Another walks across the stand with squeaking shoes. When Benchley unfurls a wall chart to show a proposed river dam, his audience begins to sing "Schnitzelbank."

A Sly Dig

Close observers will note in this bit about the proposed dam a sly dig by the producers at the New Deal's alphabetical agencies.

There are to be two dams—one of them a beautiful thing, costing millions, but a fake. The other, designed to do the work, is to be "hidden under the bushes."

Neither of the dams is to be of any value because, as Benchley proudly points out, someone has just discovered that the river, a half-mile above the proposed dam, turns out to be the state highway.

Benchley, as you may already know, has become one of Hollywood's prize possessions. A humorist of some note in the smart magazines and on the book stands, he went to Hollywood to write for the films. After one look at his expansive and genial pan, a canny producer put him before the cameras and turned out a short subject on "How to Sleep." Others, as well as minor roles in feature-length films, have followed—"Etiquette" and "How to Train a Dog"—but "How to Vote," to my mind, tops them all.

It's really a panic—short but violent. I highly recommend it to you.

AT TESTIMONIAL DINNER TO RODGERS

AT&T Will Refund $175,000,000 Bonds

American Telephone and Telegraph, interested in motion pictures through Western Electric and Electrical Research Products, Inc., intends to offer $175,000,000 3½ per cent bonds to refund outstanding issues. Of this total, $150,000,000 will be used to refund all its present coupon issues. The issue will be sold to the public through a banking syndicate.

The board has also authorized the redemption at 165 in December of $65,865,200 collateral trust five per cent bonds due in 1946.

At the same time it has filed with the Federal Communications Commission notice of a reduction of rates for broadcasters. It is estimated this will save $10,000,000 a year to radio firms.

New Franchise Plan Is Johnston's Aim

With Wall Street scheduled to finance the new proposed Monogram setup, which is slated to get under way the first of the year, W. Ray Johnston, president, will revise the former franchise plan, it was learned this week.

Instead of local distributors becoming actual partners in the new organization, they will be asked to sign long term deals providing only for the handling of the product. The new Monogram stock is expected to be listed on the New York Curb shortly. Mr. Johnston plans to make a trip to Hollywood around January 1.

TWELVE hundred exhibitors and motion picture executives, many of them from cities as far west as the Mississippi, crowded the main ballroom of the Waldorf Astoria hotel, New York, on Tuesday evening at a testimonial dinner given by exhibitors to William F. Rodgers, recently appointed general sales manager of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. On the dais were, left to right, Leslie E. Thompson, Major Albert Warner, George J. Schaefer, Martin Quigley, Ned E. Depinet, Frank C. Walker, Al Lichtman, Howard Dietz, Mr. Rodgers, Harry M. Warner, Sam Denbow, Jr., Milton Weisman, Joseph Bernhard, Jack Alicoate, Carl E. Milliken and J. Cheever Cowdin.

The speakers alternately embarrassed the guest of honor with pointed remarks about the "poor exhibitors" and praised and honored him for his character and ability. Mr. Lichtman, taking cognizance of the jibes aimed at MGM's new selling plan, said the step was merely an initial one in an effort to arrive at a yardstick for determining film rentals for all companies. Harry Warner urged the guests to work for closer cooperation between all its branches. Speakers also included Milton C. Weisman, attorney, Harry Brandt, independent exhibitor, and Sam Dembow.

Among the guests were Gradwell Sears, Si Seadler, Charles Einfeld, Neil Agnew, Louis Nizer, John and Barney Balaban, George Trindell, Edward M. Fay, William R. Ferguson, Colvin Brown, George Skouras, E. J. Sparks, Sidney Samuelson, Edward B. Hatrick, Jules Levy, Arthur Lee, E. V. Richards, Dennis F. O'Brien and Charles L. O'Reilly.

Ohio ITO Lining Up For New Tax Battle

A series of exhibitor meetings is to be held in seven Ohio cities starting this week and continuing through October 14 for the purpose of organizing opposition to a suggested restoration of the 10 per cent admission tax. A constitutional amendment to be voted upon election day will, if passed, exempt food from the present sales tax. It is estimated this will cut state revenue $15,000,000, and that the admission tax will be tried for the purpose of reducing the deficit.

The meetings will be held as follows: Cincinnati, Netherlands Plaza, September 29; Lima, Kirwin, September 30; Toledo, Commodore Perry, October 1; Steubenville, Fort Steuben, October 6; Youngstown, Ohio, October 7; Cleveland, Film Building, October 8; Columbus, Neil House, October 14.

Dismissal Denied in Laemmle Stock Suit

Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe has denied a motion to dismiss the complaint in the suit brought by Edwin R. Lavin against Willard S. McKay for $275,000 commission in connection with the sale of Universal stock.

In this action, Carl Laemmle is a co-defendant, and it is alleged that Mr. Lavin secured the purchase of Mr. Laemmle's stock for $5,000,000 after negotiations with Mr. McKay on Mr. Laemmle's behalf. Mr. Lavin charges that Mr. McKay was authorized to make the agreement on Mr. Laemmle's behalf. Mr. McKay denied this.

TELEVISION MOVES FOR WARD, BUT STILL FACES TANGLED PROBLEMS

Regulation of Licensing and Wave Lengths Up to U. S. Commission and There's Question of Material for Programs

Technical Limitation of Images to Foot Square Leaves Commercial Field Indefinite; New Tests Are Being Studied

Television for the home is far enough advanced today to be sold to the public and commercial television is not more than two years distant. This is not, however, a flat prediction, but is predicated upon the possibilities that the United States Federal Communications Commission can work out suitable licensing and wave length assignment regulations, that the problem of distance can be overcome and that suitable program material can be aligned for regular broadcasts. In the commercial field television is even more indefinite. Technical limitations at present prevent reproduction of an image larger than a foot square, making reproduction in theatres or public places almost impossible.

New television developments in the United States, England and Germany, where the most intensive experiments have been made, include:

Demonstrations of home receivers by RCA transmitters in New York and Camden, and by Philo T. Farnsworth, reportedly associated with William Randolph Hearst and Warner Brothers, and the Philco Radio and Television Corporation in Philadelphia;

Experiments with large images on a screen two by two meters in size in an effort to produce life-size pictures by German technicians, aided and encouraged by Nazi Government subsidy;

Announcement in England that regular television broadcasts by the Baird Television Company and the Marconi Electrical and Musical Industries will be started in November from Alexandra Palace in London where successful tests have been carried out this summer.

The Philco Radio and Television Corporation and Farnsworth Television, Inc., in Philadelphia, for the first time took their mechanisms out of the laboratory into a home and revealed "radio movies" as a commercially obtainable possibility to an invited group of newspapermen. In the Rydal home of William H. Grimditch, chief engineer of Philco, seven miles from the laboratory in Philadelphia, a 55-minute television program was broadcast from Station W3XE, at the company plant, over a six-megacycle band. Employing a development in which invisible black light, infra-red and ultraviolet rays illuminate the objects, the program was received simultaneously on two combination television and radio broadcast receivers. With this technique, television pictures could be made of not only large objects but even of minutely microscopic materials, such as living cells, it was claimed.

The pictures were reproduced at the rate of 6½ a second, and flashed upon a mirroring plate projecting pictures of 345 lines, the dimensions of each picture being 8¾ inches by 7¾ inches in size. They were straight black and white. The pictures appeared favorably with home motion pictures, the announced goal of the corporation in the television field.

TELEVISION SEEN RURAL INFLUENCE

Television as an aid to keeping farm boys on the farm is seen by a Canadian authority on power as a partial solution to the "most difficult problem of statesmen."

T. Stewart Lyon, chairman of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission, told delegates to the Third World Power Conference in Washington, D. C., that television might raise "a most formidable barrier to the drift of rural population to the cities." Radio and modern electrical appliances have already slowed up the migration from farm to city, he said.

Among the problems remaining to be solved before television can go into commercial production, James S. Skinner, president of Philco, said, are uniform standards for receiving sets so that they can pick up any transmitter; high definition pictures of 460 lines, and solution of the now troublesome broadcasting problem. Cost of sets was not considered an important factor. "Prices will come down with production," he said.

Radio Corporation of America has repeatedly demonstrated their activities in the development of television at their plant in Camden, N. J., and actual operation of a television station is anticipated by Farnsworth Television, Inc., which has built a complete television transmitter and studio at their laboratories in Chestnut Hill, near Philadelphia, and now awaits a license from the Federal Communications Committee to begin actual operation.

Tests Elsewhere

Tests elsewhere are continuing along lines similar to those indicated in the Philadelphia demonstrations. Television transmission over a distance of three and one-half miles are being conducted at Station KHJ in Los Angeles. Harry Lubcke, director of television activities for the KHJ-Don Lee system, is handling the broadcasts. Results, engineers claim, are promising. The station was recently embraced by Mutual Broadcasting Company, which thereby becomes the first major broadcasting unit to include a television station.

Coaxial Cable by November

American Telephone and Telegraph Company, which has been experimenting with ways of transmitting television broadcasts by wire to overcome the short-range defects of present systems, expects to have its coaxial cable for transmissions between New York and Philadelphia functioning by November 1st.

Carl Dreher, chairman of the scientific committee of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Science Research Council, came to New York from Hollywood this week to witness a special demonstration of the RCA television transmitter located in the Empire State Building, which has resumed experimental broadcasts. He will also inspect television equipment in Camden and Philadelphia and upon his return to the coast will present a complete report of the present status of television development to the scientific committee, and through the Research Council, to the heads of the motion picture producing companies.

FCC Studies Channels

The Federal Communications Commission is scheduled to resume hearings on television on October 5th, when applications for channels for television use will be considered. The Commission is preparing a report on the commercial and social aspects of the new field.

According to an announcement made by the Commission several hundred television receiving sets have already been installed and are now picking up programs from experimental stations.

Philo T. Farnsworth, vice president of Farnsworth Television, Inc., warned the FCC against "uncontrolled manufacturers" who, he declared, will produce sets for public consumption before any regulations can be enforced. The cost to the public of manufactured sets can be reduced to less than $250 almost at once, he added.

Purdue University and National Television Corporation of New York have on file protests at the FCC that tentative plans for allotment of channels would block rural areas from the use of television. They asked that the proposed withdrawal of lower frequencies from use for television experiments be reconsidered.

Television Seen Film Aid

If motion picture producers cooperate with the new television industry, Hollywood will have its greatest boom in years, but if the film studios withhold such cooperation it will be necessary for broadcasters to produce their own pictures, William Priess, head of International Television Radio Company, told the Securities and Exchange Commission at hearings on his company's application to register 1,000,000 shares of stock for underwriting.

The larger theatres will not be hurt by television, although the smaller ones may suffer, he added. Pictures for broadcasting can be produced at less cost than the present films, he said, because it would not be necessary to make them so elaborate in order to have effective images.

Mr. Priess said that his company has a "marketable" receiver which will sell for about $200 but that further experimentation is necessary on the transmitting end. Engineers of the company are experimenting with a three foot screen for reception.

Andrew W. Cruse, head of the Department of Commerce, Electrical Division, agreed with Mr. Priess that development of television will be of great help to the motion picture.

Declared No Threat

Television will not challenge motion pictures, George Fitzmaurice, pioneer motion picture director, said in Hollywood.

The belief that television offers no threat now or in the near future to the motion picture has been heard in other quarters. George Skouras, circuit executive, said that commercial television broadcasting will not prove any more damaging to theatre attendance than 16 mm. films for home showings.

Germany Pushes Development

Reports from Germany indicate that Nazi technicians, aided and encouraged by government subsidy, are concentrating on the production of a life-size television image at the receiving end. The aim of the government, it is indicated, is the establishment of a chain of transmitting stations throughout the country with receiving screens set up in postoffices, railroad stations, and other public places so that political speakers can be both seen and heard.

The Braun tube, hitherto used in German television receivers, is similar to the method of reception used in England and America and admits only a picture of limited extension. In sets exhibited in Berlin recently the screen in the Telefunken sets using the Braun tube measures 22 by 18 cm. Larger images are not possible, it is said, because of the technical nature of the tube.

German engineers are now testing an entirely different method with which it is hoped that clear images of much larger size can be received. Pictures on a screen measuring two by two meters have already been shown in Berlin. The screen is a panel divided into 10,000 small squares with a tiny electric bulb in each square. Each of these lamps is connected through relays to the main amplifier and the photo-cell apparatus of the receiving set. At the transmitting end a scanning wheel divides the image to be televised into a series of individual points which one after another act on a series of cells creating electrical impulses of varying intensity. By corresponding movements of the lines which occur simultaneously at the transmitting and receiving ends these impulses are transmitted to the small bulbs on the screen, creating light and dark spots which resolve into the picture.

Two Stations Operating

Two television stations with two transmitters each, one for sound and the other for pictures, are now in regular operation in the Reich. The stations operate on wave lengths of less than eight meters and have a range of about 31 miles. Government plans include the erection of 25 such stations throughout the country.

A third, but minor, station was first tested in May, 1935, and is using the intermediate film system, recording by motion picture camera The output is only 10 watts and distances of less than a mile are covered.

Engineers in Germany are following three systems. The first is that used for the transmission of ordinary motion pictures, previously taken. A normal 35 mm strip as used in film projection is reproduced by a projector running at 25 frames per second. The picture is taken off by a Nipkow disc, the sound by a normal sound reproducer. Impulses of a photo-electric cell are used to operate the transmitter. Ordinary films are broadcast by this means to four television booths open to the public at various points in Berlin.

The second and most commonly used German method is the intermediate film system. The scene to be televised is recorded by an ordinary motion picture camera fed by special film which is developed, fixed and ready for reproduction at a maximum of 70 seconds after exposure. The film includes sound and picture on the same strip. The recording van is driven to the scene of action, the camera takes the scene and the wet print is used immediately for tele-

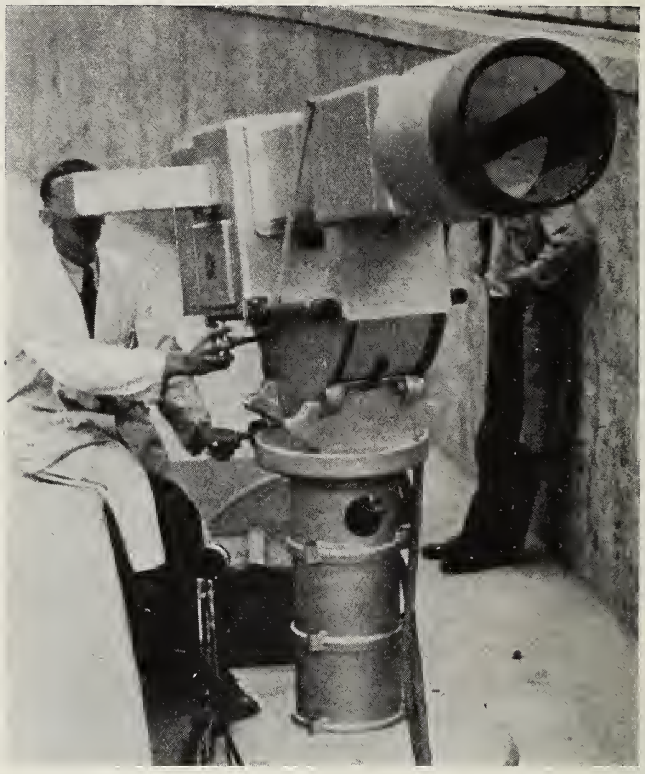
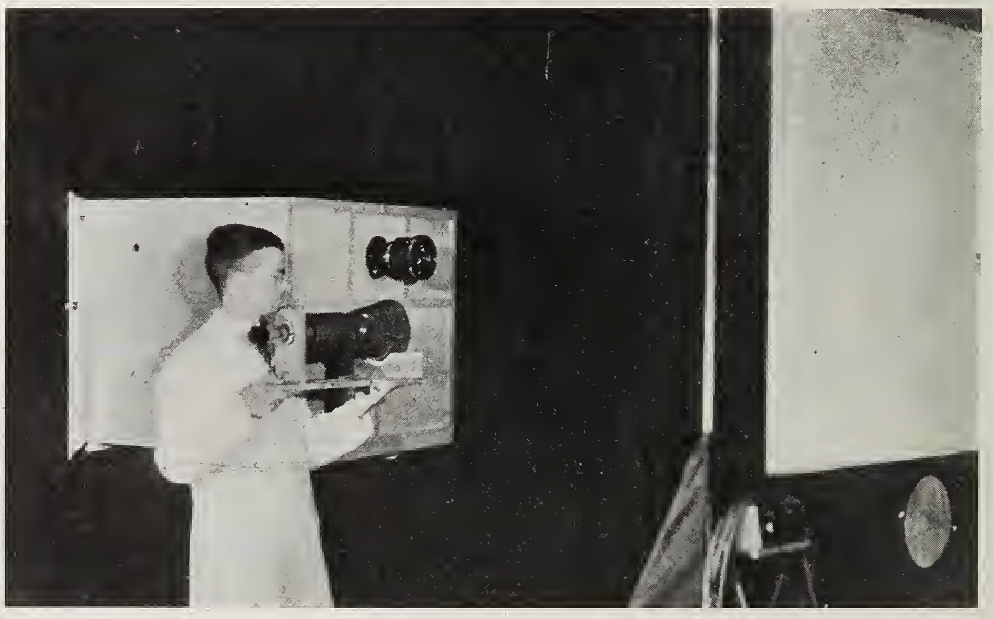
2x3-FOOT THEATRE IMAGE, GERMAN TELEVISION CLAIM

¶ Pictured here are two recent developments in television now being applied to public broadcasting for theatres and halls in Germany. One is a receiver permitting an image 2 x 3 feet that is said to have a clarity suitable to theatres. The other is a "camera" for picking up outdoor events.



The television long-distance camera is shown at right. It is described as being capable of picking up action at a distance of 400 feet, the optical image caught by the lens being transformed into corresponding electrical impulses by an American invention, the Iconoscope of Dr. Zworykin of RCA.



The new receiver, which has been developed by the Telefunken Company, is shown immediately above, placed in working relation to the screen. It is admitted that the nature and cost of the equipment confine its applications to theatres and halls. In the hands of the operator is the cathode ray tube, which employs a flat instead of a convex screen for the purpose of eliminating distortion. Plate voltage has been increased to 20,000, electrons being driven against the fluorescent screen at a speed of about 12,000 miles per second. The bright but small image thus obtained is projected upon the viewing screen, giving an ultimate image 2x3 feet. The lens protruding from the cabinet, which holds the cathode ray tube, is the projection lens. The transmission system employed with this receiving equipment operates with 360 lines. The price of the receiver is about $2,000, which eliminates it from the home television field. A number of Berlin theatres, however, are reported to have arranged for installations.

BRITISH BROADCASTS NEXT MONTH

vision broadcast. The film afterwards can be dried, printed and used in theatres.

The third method is the direct transmission of persons acting or speaking and is done in special halls where the person to be televised is the focus of a directional beam of light, traveling at great speed. The beam reflects on a revolving scanning disk and thus transforms the picture into electrical impulses.

Experiments have also been made with a long range television camera, claimed to be capable of picking up action at a distance of 400 feet, the optical image being transformed into electrical impulses by means of an American invention, the Iconoscope of Dr. V. K. Zworykin.

Four Booth's Used Daily

Public demonstrations are given in four television booths in Berlin five days a week. Sound films are transmitted from 9 to 11 a. m., other demonstrations, especially news events, being televised on these days from 3 to 4:30 p. m. On six days a week regular television programs by the German Broadcasting Corporation with news and other events are transmitted.

About 100 television receivers are now in operation in Berlin, a few of them in private homes, the majority being operated by the authorities, the technical companies and the postoffice. Regular transmissions are made by the Berlin station only, the other two operating at intervals.

A test of a large screen was made during the Olympic games this summer when transmission of some of the events was attempted, using the Iconoscope camera for transmission. The government set up 38 receiving stations in Berlin but the pictures failed to come up to expectations.

Circuit Head on Board

A new link between the television industry in England and the motion picture is seen in the announcement that Oscar Deutsch, head of the important Odeon circuit, is one of the directors on the board of Scophony, Ltd., new television manufacturing company which is sponsored by E. K. Cole, Ltd., one of the important radio manufacturers in Great Britain.

Claiming that its process provides high definition of pictures of large size by direct transmission methods, Scophony lists 126 patents in England and abroad, including nine in America. Receivers will be manufactured for the United Kingdom by the Cole Company and will include standard and medium sizes, the latter giving an image of about 12 by 9 inches. Directors, beside Mr. Deutsch, are Sir Maurice Bonham Carter, of the financial house of O. T. Falk & Company; W. S. Verrells, chairman of E. K. Cole & Company, and Arthur Levy.

Sponsored Broadcasts Banned

Extension to television programs of the prohibition on the broadcasting of advertising material and of sponsored programs has been reiterated as a major point of British radio policy. It had been proposed by the official government British Broadcasting Corporation to introduce mannequin parades and pictures of automobiles and other proprietary articles in television broadcasts. The existing monopoly of the B. B. C. in transmission has been extended for another 10 years.

British Plan Regular Broadcasts

Tests of "high definition" television systems developed by the British Baird Television Company and the Marconi E. M. I. (Electrical and Musical Industries, allied to the Radio Corporation of America) have been held regularly for the last two months with programs being broadcast from Alexandra Palace, London, and receiving sets being demonstrated by eight manufacturers at Radiolympia, also in London.

CRITERION EQUIPPED FOR TELEVISION USE

The new Criterion, recently opened in New York by B. S. Moss, is the first Broadway house to be equipped for television. Equipment has been installed but the start of programs is contingent upon the availability of broadcasts. It has been reported that the exhibitor has a television tieup with the William Randolph Hearst interests.

Starting in November it is planned to have the two companies broadcast regular programs on alternate weeks, competing to have their equipment installed by the British Broadcasting Corporation. During the experimental year the broadcasting area will be confined to London and the immediate districts. The transmission will be on ultra-short waves, vision on 6.7 meters and sound on 7.2 meters. Reliable reception cannot be expected more than 25 miles from Alexandra Palace, officials say.

Programs will first be heard in public places, as they were in the tests, with receiving sets being operated in railroad stations, large stores and radio shops.

The Baird system uses 240 lines of definition in the scanning process and the Marconi E.M.I. used 405. The pictures shown at the eight booths in Radiolympia included scenes from new Gaumont British pictures, a comedy scene enacted on the grounds of Alexandra Palace, the transmitting station, and a newsreel of the arrival of the Queen Mary.

The Baird apparatus utilizes a type of motion picture camera which pictures a news event and presents the film ready for scanning by the television transmitting apparatus within 60 seconds.

Exhibitors in London are opposed to the use of films as television material but they agree with distributors that great publicity value can be obtained from the use of short sequences from pictures in the course of production or about to be released.

Union Prepared for Television

The new contracts of New York circuits with Local 306 of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes incorporate new clauses specifying that in the event of the perfection of the commercial television during the life of the agreements, transmitters serving the theatres are to be manned by members of the projectionists' local.

Meanwhile 36 members of Local 306 are receiving technical instruction in television transmission in the RCA institute in New York. The 36 students are to qualify as instructors for a school to be conducted in television for all members of Local 306.

Television in Airplane

A television program was witnessed by passengers in an air-liner traveling over London at 180 miles an hour, with as much clearness as if they were on the ground. The demonstration was arranged by the Baird Television Company for a press party in a 14 seat Douglas-Fokker plane.

Curtains were drawn in the cabin after a height of a few thousand feet had been reached and, by means of a standard Baird receiver, receiving its signals through the ship's radio aerial, the travellers saw scenes from Charles Laughton's new "Rembrandt" being made by London Film Productions, an extract from a Gaumont British newsreel showing the Queen Mary and other newsreel pictures of the fighting in Spain.

The apparatus used in the test weighed less than 400 pounds and took up about the space of one passenger. It was identical with television sets now on display in radio shops in London.

Pope Considers Apparatus

Pope Pius XI is reported to be considering the installation of a television apparatus in his Vatican apartments, according to Havas News Agency stories. The Pontiff is said to have had a long talk on the subject with Guglielmo Marconi, who installed the Vatican City radio station several years ago.

The Compagnie Francaise de Television this summer placed a new transmitter in service at the Eiffel Tower, Paris. The station is reported to have sent pictures over a radius of 38 to 50 miles.

Chance Games Hit In Five States

Entangled in legal difficulties, chance games this week received setbacks in Oklahoma, New York, North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia, where the games were either withdrawn in some cases by exhibitors or ordered out by the courts.

The bank night drawings at Woodward, Okla., theatres were declared violations of the state lottery law in an opinion by Mac Q. Williamson, Oklahoma attorney general, to James G. Young, Woodward county attorney. The opinion held it was a violation of the law to require a person to be in the theatre to hear the winning numbers, since that entails the purchase of a ticket; and the regulation requiring outsiders in front of the theatre to signify their winning numbers within 30 seconds was impossible of being carried out.

All chance games have been abandoned at RKO and Loew's theatres in Mt. Vernon, New Rochelle and Yonkers by agreement between the operators of the two major New York circuits.

At Salisbury, N. C., the management of three theatres announced that jack pot night is being discontinued out of "deference to the Rowan county grand jury" which last week included this activity in its scope of things that "should be stopped." At Columbia, S. C., Warren Irvin, district manager of Palmette Amusements, Inc., also discontinued jack pot nights "in deference" to the opinion of the attorney general, while at York, S. C., the game was outlawed by a city council vote.

At Narrows, Va., following a hearing, Trial Justice Farrier has taken under advisement the case of J. A. Reel, local theatre manager, charged with operating a "bank night" scheme.

Freeman Is Given Odlum's Place on Paramount Board

Paramount Pictures this week effected a series of personnel adjustments in the corporate and production staffs which included the replacement of Floyd Odlum by Y. Frank Freeman on the board of directors, the transfer of Eugene Zukor to a production post in Hollywood and the resignation of Maude K. Miller, story department manager, and E. Lloyd Sheldon, producer with the company for 15 years and responsible for many notable pictures.

Y. Frank Freeman, vice-president in charge of theatre operations, was elected to the company board of directors at the monthly meeting to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Odlum, head of Atlas Corporation, who had been an influential figure in the company's activities since its reorganization. Mr. Freeman's election to the board is in line with the company's new policy of management inaugurated last June at the time of the annual election. That election saw Barney Balaban, E. V. Richards and Neil F. Agnew, all of whom are experienced Paramount management men, added to the board's membership which, at that time, had Adolph Zukor as its only member thoroughly experienced in affairs of the motion picture industry.

Eugene Zukor was elevated to an executive post in the production department in Hollywood to act in an advisory capacity on foreign department requirements and in the selection of material. His successor in the New York foreign department has not yet been chosen.

Miss Miller resigned from the story department and will be succeeded by Richard Halliday, formerly story editor.

Bogart Rogers, Twentieth Century-Fox associate producer, will join Paramount in the same capacity October 12. William Le Baron has given him the George Raft film, "Carnival," as his first assignment. He was formerly head of the Paramount writing staff. On his current schedule he is completing "Pigskin Parade."

Reorganization activities at the Paramount studio have been completed and operations stabilized, William LeBaron, managing director of Paramount production, said in New York Wednesday. He denied reports that the associate producer lineup would be pared. He added that no feature production was planned by Paramount for the East this season.

He said that he was unaware that the radio appearances of stars presented a serious problem to exhibitors.

At the same time, E. Lloyd Sheldon has resigned his post of Paramount producer after 15 years with the company and will join David O. Selznick at Selznick-International in the same capacity on November 1. His first Selznick assignment will be "Man with Young Wife," starring Edward Arnold.

In the courts, the United States circuit court of appeals in New York reversed an order signed December 3 by District Judge John C. Knox which had allowed the claim of the Madison Toledo Company against Paramount Pictures for $26,776.

TOMMY BREEN REACHES "TOM SAWYER" FINALS

Removal of parental objections has to all appearances cleared one of the hurdles in the way of an opportunity for stardom for 11-year-old Thomas Eugene Breen, son of Joseph I. Breen, head of the Production Code Administration of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc.

Tommy Breen now leads the field of 15,000 as the most promising juvenile for the title role in "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer," which Selznick International is producing. The red-haired, freckle-faced youngster was picked by a Selznick scout at a Beverly Hills school while seeking youngsters for the Mark Twain classic. Whether he ultimately will be chosen depends on how he passes the final screen tests.

Four Circuits Adding Houses

Expansion operations by New York independent circuit operators are continuing, with at least four important theatre heads having acquired or planning to buy and build a number of new theatres.

Now building three houses in Long Island and Brooklyn, Century Circuit has just taken over the Lynbrook, Lynbrook, and the Valley Stream, Valley Stream, L. I., formerly operated by the Skouras Theatre Corporation.

Harry Brandt, head of the Brandt Circuit of 64 houses in Greater New York. has closed for four additional theatres in the local area.

With about 24 units now being operated by his company, Walter Reade this week will announce plans for nationalizing his circuit. He is awaiting approval by the Secretary of State of the new name for the proposed company. One name already has been rejected and a second is now in the hands of Albany officials for approval.

Last weekend the Albany, 1,000-seat theatre built at a cost of $280,000, which includes the ground, was opened at New Brunswick, N. J. RKO and Reade are partners.

Sam D. Cocalis, who is now completing a de luxe house at Ogden Avenue in the Bronx, has been considering building a number of new houses in Brooklyn and Long Island with his partners, Dave Rosenzweig and J. C. Stein.

Edwards Grand National Eastern Sales Manager

Sol Edwards has been appointed eastern sales manager of Grand National Films, effective immediately. Mr. Edwards resigned from Educational Pictures, where he was sales manager, to accept the new post. He was formerly associated with United Artists and Universal.

Fox Accused of Blocking Moves For Settlement

Hiram Steelman, trustee in bankruptcy in the estate of William Fox, this week accused Mr. Fox in the federal court at Camden, N. J., of "deliberately blocking" attempted settlement of the estate. Mr. Steelman asked Judge John Boyd Avis to restrain All-Continent Corporation, of which Mrs. Eva Fox, wife of the former motion picture executive, is president, from proceeding with a suit in the federal court at Philadelphia.

Mr. Steelman, J. W. Sparks and Company, a Philadelphia brokerage firm, and California Capital Company are defendants in the Philadelphia action.

"This proceeding is planned not to assist the trustee, as counsel for the All-Continent claim," Mr. Steelman contended, "but to prevent the trustee from proceeding with the case and obtain assets to be turned over to creditors.

"The creditors' claims total over $5,000,000," he said. "The All-Continent Corporation, we expect to prove, has assets of $7,000,000, and was established by Fox for his wife." Fred H. Spotts, counsel for All-Continent, said the Philadelphia action was taken to settle the stock accounts of the company and to prevent loss. Judge Avis reserved decision.

Meanwhile, in Atlantic City, hearings were resumed in the William Fox bankruptcy action there with Joseph Hart, assistant to Herbert Leitsteen, Fox family bookkeeper, on the stand. After three hours of desultory questioning, Murry C. Becker, Fox attorney, was called to the stand for testimony about the All-Continent Corporation. Mr. Fox's daughters, Belle and Mona, have testified they left the corporation's affairs to their mother and she has testified that she depended upon her lawyers for advice and information. But the lawyers claimed they never saw the Fox-All Continent agreement in its final form, typed and signed, until a few months ago. A question was then raised as to whether Mr. Becker could be forced to testify. Federal Referee Robert E. Steedle, who is hearing the proceedings, is to decide the question this week.

At Mineola, N. Y., the hearing on the official acts of Mr. Fox while he was head of Fox Theatres and Fox Film Corporation, scheduled this week before Referee Elvin N. Edwards, has been postponed.

Academy Members Name Board of Governors

The members of the board of governors of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences were named this week following a tabulation of ballots from the organization's five branches. They are: actors—Clark Gable, Lionel Atwill and De Witt C. Jennings; directors—Frank Capra, Cecil B. DeMille and Frank Lloyd; writers—Graham Baker, Edwin Burke and Waldemar Young; producers—Samuel Briskin, David O. Selznick and Darryl F. Zanuck; technicians—John Arnold, Nathan Levinson and Van Nest Polglase.

Miss Dietrich Starts

Most important event of the British studio week, the shooting of the first scenes for the Marlene Dietrich London Films' production, "Knight without Armour," was robbed of some of its colour by the fact that Robert Donat, a victim of asthma, was unable to share with his co-star the limelight of Denham's great day.

A rearranged schedule gave Miss Dietrich her first experience of British production in an exterior setting. Built on the sloping banks of the river Colne which runs through the Denham grounds was a big set representing the Summer Palace, St. Petersburg, in the days of the last Czar. Arriving at the Palace in a troika drawn by three magnificent greys, the star was welcomed by a group of retainers in old Russian costume. She herself wore a flowing Cossack robe of dark green velvet, a Russian fur hat and high brown leather boots.

"Knight without Armour" is an Erich Pommer production, directed by Jacques Feyder. The script is by Frances Marion, settings by L. Mierson and camera work by Henry Straddling.

The action will have some of its most exciting moments in scenes showing the heroine's escape, by Trans-Siberian train, from the Bolshevik revolution.

John Lodge Contract

Marlene Dietrich's screen opposite in "The Scarlet Empress," John Lodge, is starting this week at Elstree in "Sensation," first of a series of films he is to do for BIP under a long term contract which followed immediately on his success for that company in "Ourselves Alone" and "The Tenth Man."

In "Sensation," Lodge, billed by BIP as "the star Hollywood neglected," has the part of a newspaper reporter who "frames" a man on a murder charge in order to get a story for his paper. Founded on the play "Murder Gang," the story was written by George Munro, a crime reporter.

Pinewood Baptism

On the bright new floor at Pinewood Studio, Iver, on Monday of this week Anna Neagle, co-starring with Tullio Carminati in Herbert Wilcox's "London Melody," finished the first scene ever to be played in this home of B & D, Wilcox Productions and Britain National Films, and received the unexpected gift from the staff of H. W. Productions of a large portrait of herself as "Peg of Old Drury," worked in silk.

Adjourning to a specially erected buffet, all hands thereupon drank health to one another and to the success of Pinewood before proceeding with work on the opening set, the dressing room of the cabaret dancer played by Miss Neagle.

"London Melody," started at the BIP studio, Elstree, after fire had destroyed the B & D plant, will be finished in two weeks. Other Herbert Wilcox Productions to follow at Pinewood are the Sydney Howard "Splinters in the Air" and the big naval film, with Admiralty cooperation, "The Navy Eternal." Before they start, British & Dominions on Monday next will be on the floor with "A Man with Your Voice," with Richard Cortez and Sally Eilers under the direction of Jack Raymond.

Gertrude Lawrence (left) as Barbara Halford and Miriam Hopkins as Ann Williams in "Triangle," a London Film production with Walter Reisch, director.

G-B War Scene

Gaumont-British staged the biggest spectacular scene of "O. H. M. S.," and its last important shot, when on the exterior lot at Northolt they put on the fight of a British expeditionary force against an Oriental army which had entrapped a British consul. The fighting went on for three days, with the British forces provided by detachments of the Royal Norfolks, 1st Worcestershires and 2nd King's Own. "O. H. M. S."" is being produced with the active assistance of the War Office. Raoul Walsh is directing it with an eye to the American market, and with an American star in Anna Lee.

Cotton Beauties

Twenty beauties from Lancashire came to London for scenes of Joe Rock's "Cotton Queen." Finalists in the annual beauty competition among workers in the cotton industry, they were used in a big set reproducing the huge arena at Blackpool in which the actual "Cotton Queen" of the year is selected. Bernhard Vorhaus is directing the picture, for which "dirt track" motorcycle racing sequences were shot at the West Ham track a few days ago.

Master of Battles

Criterion Film Productions, in order to get absolute authenticity in scenes of Fifteenth Century warfare in the Tay Garnett picture of the Scottish border, now in preparation, has engaged Major H. B. C. Pollard to supervise equipment and action in all these scenes. Major Pollard, a recognized world authority, was Master of Horse in an ambitious church pageant staged here some years ago. He knows all there is to be known about arms, armour, early firearms and the order of battle. One of his first tasks will be to superintend the firing of certain fifteenth century "bombards," or primitive cannon.

Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Rene Ray, Alan Hale and Richard Ainley have been cast, but they will have to wait some time for their first scenes. Largely because there are over one hundred and fifty location shots and because the weather of the Scottish border is notoriously uncertain, it has been decided to postpone the first shots until next April. Hale who grew a beard on the way over, has shaved again.

Film of the Savoy

The Savoy Hotel, London, favorite resort of visiting film magnates, luncheon rendezvous of British film executives, and London center of ceremonial and other trade functions, has been rebuilt at Denham for Walter Reisch's London Films production of "Triangle," with Miriam Hopkins. Vincent Korda has provided a replica of the approach from the Strand, with the Savoy Theatre entrance, and reconstruction of the interior also. Another piece of art direction for this picture reproduces the Royal Academy, using pictures actually hung at Burlington House.

"Pagliacci" Precedent

Richard Tauber, playing in "Pagliacci" for Max Schach-Trafalgar at Denham is to be presented as singing the famous "On with the Motley" in an entirely different setting from that used on the stage. The tenor-tragedian will be pictured as actually making himself up, in his caravan dressing-room, while he sings the song. Karl Grune, director, making this innovation because he thinks it provides a better method of getting over the meaning of the song, is ready to face a storm of criticism from musical purists accustomed for many years to see the broken-hearted clown sing his woes to the audience.

Establishment of an Irish production center is planned by Lord Killanin and Desmond Hurst, the last named of British International. Two companies are being formed, with headquarters in Dublin. One will own the studio planned, and the other will be the producing-distributing unit. Private backers are said to be supplying ample capital.

The company is negotiating with the Irish Free State Government to take over the giant airplane hangars at Gormanstown, near Dublin, for sound stages. Hurst will begin production on the first film, a story of the Easter week rising in 1916, next spring, when his B.I.P. contract expires. It is said Hollywood players will be brought over for the production, which is expected to cost about $250,000.

BRITISH OVERBUILDING BACK TO EXHIBITORS

Renters' Secretary Says Joint Action Cannot Come Before Theatre Men Agree

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

The first report of the Redundancy Committe, appointed at the Eastbourne Summer Conference, to the General Council of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association reveals that, after five meetings, the Committee has been unable to find a remedy for the probliem of overbuilding by action within the trade.

The Kinematograph Renters Society, through its secretary, Frank Hill, has replied to a request for joint action: "The members were unable to see their way clear to agree with your suggestion . . . until complete agreement is reached by your own association this society could not be expected to interpose itself as between any groups of exhibitors who may not be in accord with each other on the policy to be adopted."

This rebuff makes it impracticable to apply one of the three measures most favored during the Eastbourne discussion; the establishment of a joint committee of exhibitors and distributors to rule on the admissibility or otherwise of plans for new theatre erection, with the understanding that product would be withheld from buildings erected in the face of the committee's disapproval.

An immediate effect of the KRS statement was that the Redundancy Committee invited "some of the major circuits, who are the principal builders today," to confer with it and that, as a result of discussion "a considerable measure of agreement was reached." Saying that conferences with other groups are to be held, the Committee thinks it may still be possible to arrive at a general agreement and to approach the KRS again.

Deutsch in Negotiations

Probably the most significant feature of these negotiations is that they have included Oscar Deutsch, of the Odeon circuit, who is understood to have expressed his willingness to try to arrive a a "formula" governing new theatre erection. In a very large percentage of cases in which new licenses have been opposed by the CEA, successfully in some cases and unsuccessfully in others, a new Odeon has been the target. If the Deutsch interests subscribe to any CEA solution it will be considerably nearer practicability than any suggestions so far put forward. It seems equally certain that it will differ considerably in form from present plans. The Odeon policy is one of rapid expansion and it is unlikely to be abandoned.

Another interesting fact revealed in the Committee's report is that a proposal to appeal to the Government for protection received only minority support. The present progamme is to endeavor by every means possible to obtain an agreed exhibitors policy and to make another bid for the valuable, and in fact indispensable, support of distributors.

Exhibitors and Distribution

Capt. A. C. N. Dixey, sponsor of the Independent Exhibitors' Distributing Company is following up the very successful meeting in London at which this semi-cooperative scheme was publicly launched by a series of further meetings in key cities in the provinces.

Following sessions at Manchester, Liverpool, Leeds and Newcastle, there is to be a meeting at Glasgow October 2nd, others in Birmingham (Oct. 5), Cardiff (Oct. 7), and on the following day (Oct. 8) there will be another meeting in London.

The basic proposals are the provision of at least £25,000 ($125,000) of the initial capital of £100,000 by exhibitors, who would become franchise holders entitled to the product controlled by the company (estimated at fifteen films the first year) on terms not exceeding 33 1/3 per cent of receipts.

From endorsements to date it seems quite within the bounds of possibility, and indeed of probability, that within three months the Independent Exhibitors' Distributing Company will be in formal legal existence on the basis of an exhibitors' shareholding covering from 500 to 1,000 theatres.

It is a matter of universal agreement that the investment of £50 a theatre will not hold back a single exhibitor from joining.

What the exhibitor is asking is where the films are coming from and how they can be distributed profitably. Many smaller theatres may be expected to become franchise holders and to claim the product. In extreme instances, this may mean a feature going to a 300 seater, at a 33 1/3 rental, instead of to a 2,000 seater in the same neighborhood which might have bought it in the open market and paid 40 per cent or more for it. Limited to a circuit even of 1,000 theatres of small capacity, some of them presumably in competitive situations, an IEDC feature might be faced with a maximum gross of £20,000 or less.

Capt. Dixey replies that if the capital is available plenty of production units will be willing to provide the films. He says that the combination will not consist entirely of small theatres, that circuits, apart from the majors, may be expected to join up, as well as individual owners of super-theatres; secondly, that that there will be areas in which profitable bookings will be obtainable from non-members; thirdly, that revenue may be expected from foreign markets.

United Artists Convention

United Artists entertained at its annual convention banquet at the Savoy on September 20th, probably the most notable company of executives and stars ever gathered at one London function. Murray Silverstone presided and the guests included Elisabeth Bergner, Marlene Dietrich, Ann Harding, Marie Tempest, Edward G. Robinson, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Richard Tauber, Conrad Veidt, Flora Robson and many other players. Executives and directors included Alexander Korda, Erich Pommer, Victor Saville, Marcel Hellman and Lothar Mendes. Theodore H. Fligelstone, president of the Cinema Exhibitors Association and Oscar Deutsch of the Odeon circuit were among those representing exhibitor interests.

AUSTRALIAN INDUSTRY EYES HOYTS-GENERAL

Abandonment or Continuance of Alliance Awaited with Trade Factors in Balance

by CLIFF HOLT
in Melbourne

One of the liveliest topics of conversation during recent weeks wherever Australian film men gather has been the future of General Theatres Corporation, the vast holding company of the major Australian circuits, Hoyts and Greater Union Theatres.

A month ago there seemed no doubt in the minds of most interested and well informed parties that there would be no renewal of the 5 year working agreement that expires next year; that, in fact, both Greater Union and Hoyts would be glad to withdraw from the arrangement at the earliest possible moment—if the banks would let them. More recently, however, general opinion appears to have undergone a metamorphosis; the renewal of the working agreement looms as a definite and very likely possibility.

It is doubtful whether anyone, even members of the directorate, could more than guess at the future of the corporation at this stage. Here's the position:

Position Is Defined

General Theatres Corporation is the managing company for the city interests of Union and Hoyts.

Union has numerous interests outside the city; similarly Hoyts control about 60 neighborhood and country theatres, and this circuit (entirely independent of G. T. C.) undoubtedly earns bigger profits for Hoyts than its 50% share of the profits made by G. T. C.

The latest balance sheets disclose that both companies hold heavy bank over-draughts, but behind Hoyts is the Fox Film Corporation, which owns a 51% controlling interest in Hoyts, though this control is never visible so far as the actual operation of the company is concerned. Forced to do so, we can assume that with Fox's financial assistance, Hoyts could free itself of banking influence, and could do so voluntarily if it wished. Thus it would seem that, so far as the affairs of General Theatres Corporation are concerned, Hoyts has a material advantage over Greater Union, even to the extent of gaining control of Union should it decide to terminate its partnership with that company in G. T. C.

New Capital Obtained

But, on the other hand, reliable authorities state that while in London, Stuart F. Doyle, managing director of Greater Union and managing director of G. T. C., found sufficient capital to wipe off Union's bank over-draught, and thus strengthen its position as chief competitor of Hoyts should the partnership as it exists in G. T. C. come to an end. At the moment, therefore, the future of Australia's biggest exhibiting company remains indefinite and any prediction as to likely developments is little more than guess work.

Assuming Hoyts and Greater Union do become rivals again—what then? Well, distributors would be the first to congratulate themselves, inasmuch as the market would instantly take on a more open appearance and they would be able to use one company as a lever against the other as they did in the years prior to the Hoyts-Union get-together.

Distributors Interested

MGM and Paramount, which have not sold to the corporation since the Film War of 1933, and have missed the rentals they once obtained from either Hoyts or Union, would probably reenter the fold on one side or the other.

The position of the independents operating in competition with Hoyts or Union houses would be a little more obscure; some would welcome the break, others may be worried by it, especially those who now hold MGM and Paramount franchises. If those companies sold to Hoyts or Union, independents may begin to wonder whether they could still buy these products without being obliged to grant lengthy protections in favor of the circuits.

The return of Stuart Doyle from abroad may throw some light on a situation which at present is clouded.

Tax Reduction Forecast

Early reductions in general taxation are forecast in Parliamentary circles here, and as much as 50 per cent is expected to be clipped off the present amusement tax. This would represent a saving to patrons of approximately £50,000 a year.

Arising out of the discussion of films in the latest Papal encyclical and the Pope's invitation to the world to form local Legions of Decency, plans are being formulated in Australia for the creation of a Board of Catholic Film Inspectors. The proposals will be considered at the conference of all Australian dioceses, to be held in Adelaide in December. An early suggestion is that members of the Legion of Decency will undertake to promise not to patronize a picture which meets with the disapproval of the inspectors.

Principal Closes Deal

Principal Film Exchange, New York, has closed with Chesterfield and Invincible for a two-year franchise with renewal options. The deal covers all of the product of the two companies for distribution in New York and northern New Jersey.

Julius Levine Joins Trailer Firm

Julius Levine has joined Theatre Trailer Service as salesman for the New York territory. Walter Frudenberger, general sales manager, is negotiating with several other men for representation in the New York area.

Kirkwood Closes Deal

Ray Kirkwood has closed with Jack Adams of Dallas for distribution of eight Reed and Nelson action westerns, eight Spanish actions and one serial.

Commerce Department Changes Film Status

Trade promotion activities of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce which are maintained to assist foreign sales of American motion pictures and equipment have been transferred from the Specialties Division to the Electrical Division of the Commerce Department unit. Foreign sales of American film equipment and rentals for pictures exhibited in foreign countries return approximately $85,000,000 to the United States each year, the department has announced.

Dickinson Office Moved

Glen W. Dickinson Theatres, Inc., has moved its booking office from the Dickinson Theatre building, Lawrence, Kas., to the Davidson building, Kansas City, Mo. Gus C. Diamond, formerly office manager and city salesman for Warner Brothers in Kansas City, has been appointed film buyer and head booker for the Dickinson office.

Sampson Rejoins Schreiber

George W. Sampson, formerly general manager for the Jacob Schreiber circuit in Detroit and more recently owner of Sampson Theatre Premiums, has rejoined the Schreiber forces in his former position. George W. Sampson, Jr., has taken charge of the premium business.

Salmon Quits Paramount

Monty Salmon, formerly in charge of Paramount's theatre operations in Philadelphia has joined Skouras Theatres as an aide to George Skouras. Harry Royster, of the Paramount home office has gone to Philadelphia to take over the post.

Hartley Assigned to Omaha

George W. Weeks, general sales manager of Gaumont British, has assigned George Hartley, Des Moines manager, to handle the Omaha office as well, and has transferred Ernest Stein, Dallas salesman, to Kansas City.

Remington Joins Idzal

Harry Remington, who has resigned as film critic of the Minneapolis Tribune, joins David M. Idzal at the Fox Detroit in charge of publicity. This is the post held for many years by Freddie Schader, who resigned a short while ago.

Flynn Joins Selznick

Ray Flynn, former unit manager of Twentieth Century-Fox, has been signed as production manager by Selznick International and will assume his new post immediately to work on "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer."

Republic Colombia Deal

Morris Goodman, sales manager of Republic Pictures' export department, has set a deal for distribution of the company's 1935-36 product in Colombia, South America, with Cine-Columbia.

Spectrum Contract Closed

Spectrum Pictures has closed with Amity Film Exchange of Dallas for Texas distribution of six musical westerns starring Fred Scott.

COMMISSION SYSTEM PREVAILS IN INDIA

Distributing Agents Are of Three Types; Territories Pay on Varying Schedules

by C. A. THAKUR
in Bombay

Here in India we have a variety of distributing agents; sole agents, free lance distributors and independent distributors. Sole agents sign with the producers for a particular period, varying usually from one year to five years, to exploit all his pictures, on commission basis. This agreement, however, between a sole agent and a producer has always a clause in it that the producer is competent to sell away any of his pictures to other parties, and on such deals the sole agent receives an overriding commission of 5 per cent on the sale price of the picture sold to a new party.

Free lance distributors are those parties who do not bind themselves with any particular producer for a certain supply of productions; they usually get pictures from different producers on commission basis and sign for a particular picture at a time.

Quality Determines Price

Independent distributors never believe in taking pictures on commission basis, but purchase the exploitation rights at a definite figure, and the figure varies with the quality of pictures.

The geographical territory of India is divided between the following five film Distributing circuits: Northern India, Sind and Balochistan, Bengal Presidency, Bombay Presidency, including Rajputana, C. P., and C. I., and Southern India, including Madras Presidency; British East Africa also shows Indian pictures. Recently the West Indies, Japan and British settlements have also begun showing Indian Pictures.

The terms of business vary with the different producers, but a sole agent has to keep a certain fixed deposit with the producers till the expiration of the contracted period, and against each picture he has got to give additional deposit. These deposits vary with the different circuits. A distributor for Northern India may advance deposit for a picture varying from Rs. 20,000 to Rs. 45,000; Sind and Balochistan, Rs. 3,000 to Rs. 7,000; for Bengal circuit, Rs. 5,000 to Rs. 10,000; Bombay Presidency, C. P. and C. I., Rs. 10,000 to Rs. 20,000, while for Southern India he may give Rs. 5,000 to Rs. 10,000. East Africa pays Rs. 3,000 to Rs. 5,000.

Distributor Remits to Producer

A distributor gets a commission of 15 per cent on the share that he receives from the exhibitors; it may incidentally be said here that in India the exhibitor runs first run pictures against a "forty-sixty" system. That is, a distributor receives 60 per cent of the gross takings at the box office and 40 per cent goes to the exhibitor, and it is on this 60 per cent share that a distributor is entitled for his 15 per cent distribution commission.

After receiving this 15 per cent commission, the distributor either remits the balance share to the producer, or receives the same to cover his deposit amount advanced to the producer. This commission of 15 per cent is universal in India, but the same may increase after the distributor has collected a certain amount for the producer, and this certain good amount often coincides with what is known as a "minimum guarantee" figure. This minimum guarantee, known for brevity's sake as M. G., is the only safeguard for a producer in India.

Since three months ago the exhibitors and distributors in India are experiencing a period of uncertainty, and the renting of films has received revolutionary changes.

Three financiers at Bombay, Super Film Circuit, Evergreen Pictures, and All India Talkie Distributors have started purchasing exploitation rights of pictures for the whole of India. Due to these deals, the already popular distributors in different circuits of India are threatened of no supply of pictures for their exhibitors. As such the exhibitors have a reason to cancel their contracts with the distributors and call back their deposits.

Buying for All of India

These financiers are purchasing pictures for whole of India at an amount varying from Rs. 70,000 to Rs. 150,000. The distributors from different circuits rush to them and purchase exploitation rights for their territories. Thus the financiers are easily making Rs. 10,000 to Rs. 30,000 over each deal. This leaves them a big margin of profits, when presently bank interest in India varies from 2 per cent to 3 per cent per annum.

Lastly, I might mention here that distributors in India wield a great influence over producers; producers consult distributors as to the themes of the picture and certain box office punches. There have been frequent cases when a censored picture in India has had added some situations and dilated particular portions only at the express desire of distributor for he asserts that he knows what the public wants.

RCA VICTOR EXPANDS EDUCATION BUREAU

The RCA Victor Educational Division plans to expand the scope of its activities under the direction of a new manager, Ellsworth C. Dent, former chief of the Motion Picture Division, United States Department of the Interior. A more widespread application of recent developments in the radio and sound arts to the problems of education is planned. These supplementary teaching aids now include, besides phonograph records for several branches of teaching, sound motion picture equipment, slide film projectors, centralized sound distribution and communications systems, school radio systems and special books and publications on music appreciation.

Budapest Circuit Reported Gaining

by ENDRE HEVESI
in Budapest

The recently completed reorganization of the Gero circuit, most important theatre organization in Hungary, which was expected to result in a loss of part of the holdings, actually has made the unit more powerful than before.

The circuit included six first and second run de luxe houses here, all managed by Istvan Gero. At the close of last season it was reported the first run Forum and the second run Capitol would operate independently. Such a situation was regarded hopefully in film circles, since it would tend to open the way for more general activity on the part of distributors here.

However, although he did lose the Forum and Capitol, Gero succeeded in obtaining control of six other Budapest houses, which will be booked entirely by him. Thus he will have complete control over the product shown in 10 of the city's 16 leading houses, making the position of distributors still more difficult.

The improved condition of native Hungarian production is indicated in the fact that Hunnia and Filmiroda, two of the leading plants, are building new studios adjacent to the present plants. A second reason for the expansion lies in the low production costs in this country, which often leads foreign producers to use Hungarian studios.

French product in Hungary is enjoying a new popularity with the Hungarian public since last season, when several French films were received with unusual favor by the native audiences.

German films, on the other hand, have lost the small market they had here. Last season several independent distributors handled the product, although it was not popular. This season, however, there are no Hungarian companies handling German films.

National Screen Plans Ten Additional Branches

With seven branches now functioning, 10 additional offices will be opened by National Screen Accessories by the fall. Morton Van Praag, general sales manager, is now in Dallas on a swing of exchanges. New offices will be opened in Atlanta, Dallas, Cleveland, Boston, New Orleans, Philadelphia, Detroit, Kansas City, Minneapolis and Pittsburgh. Exchanges in the far west will be opened starting the latter part of the year. In all instances, trailers as well as advertising will be serviced from the new points.

Burr Closes Deal

Charles C. Burr, who plans to produce two series of six features under the name of BJS Films, has closed with state right distributors for the handling of the product in five territories. The distributors and the product they will handle are: Melvin Hirsch of Security Pictures, New York and northern New Jersey; Nate Schultz, Cleveland; Lee Goldberg, Tennessee, Cincinnati and Kentucky; Sam Decker, Detroit; and Ed Boreth, Masterpiece of Philadelphia.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

DEVIL'S SQUADRON: Richard Dix, Karen Morley—Good action and air scenes feature this rather depressing story, as it's a series of crack-ups and subsequent deaths that go to make up its plot. Was nice to see Karen Morley again; she should play more often, as folks liked her. Played September 15.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

KING STEPS OUT, THE: Grace Moore, Franchot Tone—A very fine picture. Singing of Grace Moore's marvelous and it's good all around entertainment. Running time, 85 minutes. Played September 13-15.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

KING STEPS OUT, THE: Grace Moore, Franchot Tone—We can't gauge this picture's drawing power for we played it with the Schmeling-Louis fight pictures and, of course, the fight drew the biggest part of the crowd. However, there were only a few walkouts on this feature from the ones who came to see the fight, and all others said, "Grace was good." She certainly has a flair for comedy.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MR. DEEDS GOES TO TOWN: Gary Cooper, Jean Arthur—Many people went out of their way to tell me how they enjoyed this picture. It will please and fill your house. Don't be afraid to tell the public about your playdate on "Mr. Deeds." Columbia home office advertised the film for me, which helped at the box office. Played September 12-13.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

First National

BULLETS OR BALLOTS: Edward G. Robinson, Joan Blondell—One of the greatest box-office disappointments in a long time. Really expected to do a swell business on it and after seeing the picture, still felt we should have, but they just didn't come. Very interesting picture. Running time, 81 minutes. Played September 13-14.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

CHINA CLIPPER: Pat O'Brien, Beverly Roberts, Ross Alexander—Air picture with the same old story and a different ship. Running time, 90 minutes. Played September 9-10.—Geo. F. Smith, Lyric Theatre, Lapeer, Mich. Small town and rural patronage.

LAW IN HER HANDS, THE: Margaret Lindsay, Warren Hull—A swell little picture with a pleasing mixture of comedy and drama. Good cast, interesting story and plenty of laughs. Not much at the box office but pleased those who came. A much more satisfactory picture than a lot of the specials. Running time, 58 minutes. Played September 9-10.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SINGING KID, THE: Al Jolson—Good show. Yacht Club Boys singing "My How This Country Has Changed" was the highlight of the entire show for me. If you haven't played it yet, pay close attention to the above song. It's fine.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

WHITE ANGEL, THE: Kay Francis, Ian Hunter—Splendid photoplay. Kay Francis plays sincerely the immortal Florence Nightingale. Played September 20-21.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

EXCLUSIVE STORY: Franchot Tone, Madge Evans, Stuart Erwin—Fine picture. Why Tone was featured as the star of this is more than I can see. Stuart Erwin was by far the greater star of this. I do not like to knock a star but I just can't see Tone as being so hot. Maybe I'm wrong but still that is my honest opinion. Anyway he was no good in this.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

ROBIN HOOD OF EL DORADO, THE: Warner Baxter, Ann Loring—It pleased, this drama of the 49'ers. It has about a three handkerchief section in the first two reels, and did our Dunbar beauties weep when Rosita made her dramatic exit to parts unknown. It is one of the few movies that can be recommended for small town houses, although the extras looked more like Japanese than Mex. Running time, 86 minutes. Played September 19.—C. F. Deane, Dunbar Theatre, Dunbar, W. Va. Family patronage.

SMALL TOWN GIRL: Robert Taylor, Janet Gaynor—They couldn't resist Robert Taylor. A fine picture that deserves patronage.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

SPEED: Wendy Barrie, James Stewart—An unheralded successful action drama. The tour through the auto assembly plant was very interesting. Everyone was satisfied. Running time, 72 minutes. Played September 16.—C. F. Deane, Dunbar Theatre, Dunbar, W. Va. Family patronage.

SPEED: Wendy Barrie, James Stewart—Okay action programmer. Nice work from Una Merkel and Ted Healy. James Stewart is liked. Played September 18-19.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

VOICE OF BUGLE ANN, THE: Lionel Barrymore, Maureen O'Sullivan—It held wholehearted attention. Everyone was satisfied. A rural photoplay with a vehicle that carries the talent, instead of the players carrying the play. It is financially stable. Play it by all means. Running time, 72 minutes. Played September 20-22.—C. F. Deane, Dunbar Theatre, Dunbar, W. Va. Family patronage.

BIG BROWN EYES: Joan Bennett, Cary Grant—A very poor detective story. Joan Bennett always puts them in the aisles—on the way out. Running time, 76 minutes. Played September 18.—C. F. Deane, Dunbar Theatre, Dunbar, W. Va. Family patronage.

BORDER FLIGHT: John Howard, Frances Farmer—A very good action picture. Played on double bill with "Don't Bet on Blondes," to slightly above average week end business.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence Ky. Small town patronage.

FLORIDA SPECIAL: Jack Oakie, Sally Eilers—Very interesting. Not big but a good programmer. Story held interest throughout. Running time, 68 minutes. Played September 9-10.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

MY AMERICAN WIFE: Francis Lederer, Ann Sothern, Fred Stone—Good picture and very fine entertainment. Stone good character actor. Running time, 74 minutes. Played September 11-12.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

RHYTHM ON THE RANGE: Bing Crosby, Frances Farmer—A new lease on life for Crosby with our patrons is the result of this one. Martha Raye and Bob Burns made themselves popular in their screen debut in this good picture. Played September 13-14.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

THREE CHEERS FOR LOVE: Eleanore Whitney, Robert Cummings—Has no draw but, used on a double bill, it pleased very much. Plenty of music, plenty of comedy, good story and good tap dancing by Miss Whitney.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

ANOTHER FACE: Wallace Ford, Phylis Brooks—Good show all the way through. Plenty of action blended with comedy situations. Good for any night. Running time, 7 reels. Played September 16.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

ANOTHER FACE: Wallace Ford, Phylis Brooks—Another fair program from RKO. They have made many like this already this year. Where are all those big pictures we have been expecting? They lead the field with their musicals and their one or two westerns are OK, but after that what have you? Good colored cartoon (but terrible shorts outside of this). "The March of Time," my! Will be glad when my contract is out. People leave when it starts. I now run it on my money night just before I give away cash. This way I make them look at it. But after all I wonder if I should? Maybe RKO will do better next year. Hope so. My report on shorts does not include the Major Bowes shorts. I do not run those, but have heard they were OK.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

EX-MRS. BRADFORD, THE: William Powell, Jean Arthur—Under average business for first three days of week. It was too "talky" for our customers, and had a terrible letdown after first day.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

IN PERSON: Ginger Rogers, George Brent—Just a fair program picture, very slow in action. Very poor for Friday and Saturday. We were glad when it was over with on the last run. Running time, 9 reels. Played September 11-12.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

LAST OUTLAW, THE—Harry Carey, Hoot Gibson—One of the best westerns ever to come to our screen. Extra advertising brought in extra business. If you play this, let your folks know about it. Running time, 71 minutes. Played August 28-29.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town and country patronage.

SPECIAL INVESTIGATOR: Richard Dix—A very good picture that did very little business. The lawyer G Man, Mr. Dix, did some fine acting, but no business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Twentieth Century - Fox

CHARLIE CHAN AT THE CIRCUS: Warner Oland, Keye Luke—This has almost everything: comedy, mystery and some sadness, thrills and excitement that make this picture good entertainment. Running time, 7 reels. Played September 9.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

COUNTRY BEYOND, THE: Rochelle Hudson, Paul Kelly—Didn't do any advertising on this and they ate it up. They seemed to think it was great. Don't know why. Played September 9-10.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

GIRLS' DORMITORY: Simone Simon, Ruth Chatterton, Herbert Marshall—Fox made a mistake when they cast Simone Simon and Herbert Marshall in this picture, as both are a trifle hard to understand. Consequently casting the two together in this picture as we see it doesn't do the picture any good. Without a doubt Simone Simon is a star in the first magnitude and we look forward to playing her next releases. Business fair. Running time, 66 minutes. Played September 6-8.—W. C. Myers, Myers' Theatre, Francesville, Ind. General patronage.

GIRLS' DORMITORY: Simone Simon, Ruth Chatterton, Herbert Marshall—Good picture and deserves extra plugging. Good title and excellent cast. Women will go for it and Simone will have the boys all het up. Running time, 66 minutes. Played September 6-7.—Geo. F. Smith, Lyric Theatre, Lapeer, Mich. Small town and rural patronage.

Plot: Two wealthy children, Linden and Parker, fall in love, and, although their parents are against their wedding, marry. They run away and live with a deeply religious man, Beresford, who influences the boy's life and makes him a shining example of good living. Beresford goes to the girl's mother to comfort her concerning the girl's welfare, but is thrown into jail when he refuses to divulge her whereabouts. Linden comes to town to fight for him, and is arrested. The trial discloses his good character and everyone relents, allowing the couple to be left alone in happiness.

Modern Drama

Based on a book which has had a great circulation than any other volume, except t
Bible, "In His Steps" is impressive modern dr matic entertainment. It is not a Bible stor nor is it a literal picturization of the content the Charles M. Sheldon original. From a viewpoint it is the kind of picture that any e which family type audiences constitute a lar proportion of patronage, can recommend to h customers.

It is an impressive picture, undoubtedly o of the most powerful dramatic themes ever be faithful understanding is seen in capturing t dramatically spiritual atmosphere, not the deta of the original. "In His Steps" is a spiritu story. It is heart touching drama.

Influenced by spiritually minded Davids
the young and modern Tom Carver forces Ru

In His Steps

Grand National release of B. F. Zeidman production. Stars Eric Linden and Cecilia Parker. Screen play by Karl Brown and Hinton Smith. Suggested by story 'In His Steps,' by Charles M. Sheldon. Directed by Karl Brown. Photography by Harry Jackson. Art director, Edward Jewell. Music supervisor, Abe Meyer. Special effects, Jack Cosgrove. Film editor, Edward Schroeder. Supporting cast: Harry Beresford, Clara Blandick, Roger Imhof, Olive Tell, Henry Kolker, Charles Richman, Robert Warwick. Previewed Sept. 10. Running time; 75 mins.

With 'In His Steps,' a highly controversial picture because of its religious angles, Grand National Distributing Corp. breaks film tides with one that will appeal to the masses if properly exploited. It's a sleeper. By word of mouth, through women's organizations it will come out in the blue.

B. F. Zeidman pulled this one away from the general class of indie productions through superb casting, direction and in the handling of a neatly scripted opus by Karl Brown and Hinton Smith. Brown also directed with a deft hand, having complete feel of the script.

Eric Linden and Cecilia Parker, children of warring financial parents, neighbors, are in love. But because of abstract differences they are torn apart by their kinfolk. Unwillingly and not being able to recognize any of the apparent reasons for such an act, Linden forces Miss Parker into his auto. They elope to the home of Roger Imhof and Clara Blandick, two souls of the soil and God. Imhof, being a minister, unites the pair in wedlock, but only after Linden declares parental consent has been obtained.

Grooming the land to eke out a living, Linden and Miss Parker are capturing that spirit of wholesome wedded bliss when their benefactors learn that the parents of Miss Parker have sworn out legal affidavits for the arrest of Linden on an abduction charge.

Harry Beresford, religious advisor to the youths before their marriage, counsels Imhof and Miss Blandick to keep the couple on their homestead. However, the youths, learning that Beresford is being questioned by police relative to their whereabouts, go to his aid.

A trial follows at which Linden's father, Henry Kolker, attempts to have him villify his wife. L

Grand National presents as its first release a picture that has strong appeal for the great mass audience. It is not for sophisticates, but will, like the famous book on which it was built, delight millions and on neighborhood levels is certain of a highly profitable career.

From the Charles M. Sheldon book, with its theme of Christian inspiration, a moving modern morality play has been devised by Karl Brown and Hinton Smith. It is close to the heart; moralizes fully and frankly; is unaffectedly sentimental, and will win a widespread tribute of tears.

The central figures are a couple of youngsters from rival millionaire families. With the connivance of the old gardener, Davidson, who personifies the Christ spirit, they elope and are married and harbored by a fine old farmer-parson. He lets them start housekeeping from scratch in a shack on his farm, where they are mothered by his gentle-hearted wife.

Meanwhile the girl's father has brought a kidnapping charge against the boy; the police are combing the country for the couple and the newspapers are giving top play to the sensation. Not until Davidson is jailed for withholding information do the youngsters yield and return, the boy to stand trial for criminal abduction and the girl to stick faithfully to him through the long trial to the happy surprise outcome.

Eric Linden as the boy gives a strongly appealing portrayal, his character transition as he awakens to the inescapable moral values being convincingly shaded. Cecilia Parker as the devoted girl is delightfully real and likeable. Harry Beresford as the spiritually-minded Davidson is excellent, and Roger Imhof's rugged country parson is a splendid match for him, while Clara Blandick movingly rounds out the interesting trio as the parson's gentle wife. Four stars of other days fill out the main support and give it dignity and vitality. They are Charles Richman as the girl's father, Olive Tell as her mother, Henry Kolker as the boy's father, and Robert Warwick as the understanding judge who tries the case.

Karl Brown's direction, while not free from technical faults, is unrestrained in its frank emphasis on emotional values and gets the desired results. Harry Jackson handles his camera ably, and the production, for which B. F. Zeidman deserves a warm word of praise, is ample in all departments.

Independent EXHIBITORS FILM BULLETIN

There's dough in "In His Steps" . . . START DIGGIN'!

Nothing satisfies the true showman more than a film that is DIFFERENT . . . something off the beaten path of routine movies . . . into which he can dig his hands and pull out a surprise package of extra dollars. He has a "sleeper" just like that in Grand National's first release—"IN HIS STEPS."

Yowsah, gents, here is something DIFFERENT! Adapted from a semi-spiritual book that rates as the greatest best-seller of all time. Over 20,000,000 copies of "IN HIS STEPS" have been sold and it has been translated into more than 20 foreign languages. It's merchandise, then, that thousands and thousands of people will be waiting for, but it's also merchandise that MUST BE SOLD to the new generation.

Let's get down some facts about this story. It tells a powerfully dramatic, yet tender, story of a boy and a girl, deeply in love, who are frustrated in their quest for real happiness by the selfish, unreasoning tactics of their wealthy parents. Only through the friendship and guidance of a man, whose life is moulded to follow in the steps of Christ, do these unfortunate children eventually win their right to happiness.

Rel. Oct. 20, '36

Producer B. F. Zeidman has given the New Grand National a picture with which it can make a proud debut. With ample entertainment values and based on a generally popular book and theme, the film is ably produced, directed and enacted. It will do business and augurs well for the place Grand National will occupy in production and exhibition fields. Eric Linden and Cecilia Parker are splendid as the youthful lovers who, despite parental enmity and objection, elope and start life on a small farm. Davidson, a deeply religious man, protects them as well as he can, but Linden is brought to trial on criminal charges by Cecilia's mother. A surprising and dramatic reconciliation ensues, the parents become good friends, and Eric and Cecilia return to their happiness on the farm. Directed by Karl Brown.

ROAD TO GLORY, THE: Fredric March, Warner Baxter, June Lang, Lionel Barrymore—This is one of the best war pictures we believe we have ever had the pleasure of playing. Properly exploited this picture will make any exhibitor some money. The picture is a little gruesome in spots, but so is any war picture. Warner Baxter and Lionel Barrymore both do exceptionally fine acting all during the picture. Running time, 103 minutes.—W. C. Myers, Myers' Theatre, Francesville, Ind. General patronage.

ROAD TO GLORY, THE: Fredric March, Warner Baxter, Lionel Barrymore, June Lang—Good production which didn't make expenses. War pictures and air pictures do not mean a thing at the box office regardless of the cast. This was a bigger bust than "Under Two Flags." Running time, 101 minutes. Played September 16-17.—Geo. F. SING, BABY, SING: Alice Faye, Adolphe Menjou—If your customers like a fast moving show with plenty of comedy wisecracks and good music, they will go for "Sing, Baby, Sing" in a big way. Adolphe Menjou is again beginning to mean something at the box office. The Ritz Brothers almost steal this picture. We hope Twentieth Century-Fox will use them often. Running time, 87 minutes. STAR FOR A NIGHT: Jane Darwell, Claire Trevor—This is one picture in which Jane Darwell steals the whole show. Personally, we think she is the star in "Star for a Night." We played this picture on Give-Away night, but it should have had a Sunday date. This picture will hold up any night in the week. Claire Trevor, by the way, didn't do a bad job in this picture herself. Running time, 76 minutes. Played September 9-10.—W. C. Myers, Myers' Theatre, Francesville, Ind. General patronage.

STAR FOR A NIGHT: Claire Trevor, Jane Darwell—Good picture for Friday and Saturday or family night. Running time, 76 minutes. Played September 11-12.—Geo. F. Smith, Lyric Theatre, Lapeer, Mich. Small town and rural patronage.

UNDER TWO FLAGS: Ronald Colman, Victor McLaglen, Claudette Colbert, Rosalind Russell—This showed up at the box office as the biggest grosser on Wednesday-Thursday in 1936. The CCC boys went for this one in a big way. Played September 16-17.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

United Artists

I STAND CONDEMNED: Laurence Olivier—Another British turkey and our patrons sure basted it. The (intended) serious moments were shattered by ribald guffaws from the untutored, while the literati stole softly out. Running time, 76 minutes. Played September 9.—Geo. F. Smith, Lyric Theatre, Lapeer, Mich. Small town and rural patronage.

ONE RAINY AFTERNOON: Frances Lederer, Ida Lupino—Excellent farce with Lederer in top form, and yet there will be those who call it silly. Most audiences should enjoy its comedy and react favorably. Played September 18-19.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SPLENDOR: Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea—This picture certainly proved a colossal flop for us. Too much dialogue.—Harold Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

STRIKE ME PINK: Eddie Cantor—This picture did very well. We billed it with the fight pictures, but doubt if it would stand up so well alone.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Universal

CRASH DONOVAN: Jack Holt, Nan Gray—One of the best action programmers we've used this year. Played September 11-12.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

DRACULA'S DAUGHTER: Otto Kruger, Marguerite Churchill—Fine picture of its kind. Did not take in half enough to pay expenses. Weather was terrible.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

MAGNIFICENT OBSESSION: Irene Dunne, Robert Taylor—Very good show, but sad, and we like to have them laugh instead of crying. It is more like an entertainment when you hear the audience giggle or laugh. Very few comments of "good"; that's O. K. with us. Running time, 13 reels. Played September 13-14.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

NEXT TIME WE LOVE: Margaret Sullavan, James Stewart—Some said good, others said no good. Pretty fair picture but will not please generally.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

Warner Bros.

BIG NOISE, THE: Guy Kibbee, Warren Hull—Say, the program pictures of these producers are getting shorter and shorter. It is hard to make up a decent length program any more on them without a big bunch of shorts and they cost money. The picture was okay and pleased Bank Night audiences, but give us some length. Running time, 60 minutes. Played September 11-12.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

GREEN PASTURES, THE: Rex Ingram—Personally we thought this great but most people didn't seem to get it at all. Running time, 98 minutes. Played September 13-14.—Geo. F. Smith, Lyric Theatre, Lapeer, Mich. Small town and rural patronage.

HOT MONEY: Ross Alexander, Beverly Roberts—Joe Cawthorn saved this one. The guttural jabbering of the ubiquitous Ross Alexander is horribly monotonous. Running time, 68 minutes. Played September 18-19.—Geo. F. Smith, Lyric Theatre, Lapeer, Mich. Small town and rural patronage.

PUBLIC ENEMY'S WIFE: Pat O'Brien, Margaret Lindsay—Interesting action play. Program box office value. Played September 11-12.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

PUBLIC ENEMY'S WIFE: Pat O'Brien, Margaret Lindsay—A crackerjack of an action picture with enough love interest plus a beautiful wedding to interest the women. Above average business. Running time, 75 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

SONS O' GUNS: Joe E. Brown, Joan Blondell—I consider this Joe's poorest picture. It got off to a good start but is just a little too goofy in the last three reels. However, Joe is mighty popular here and handed them a lot of laughs, which is what they want. Running time, 79 minutes. Played September 12-13.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

FALSE ALARMS: 3 Stooges—If your public likes slapsticks, this is the tops. It's a scream.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

HALF SHOT SHOOTERS: 3 Stooges—Another crazy episode with the 3 Stooges. Folks enjoyed its hilarity.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MAJOR GOOGLE: Barney Google—The best Google cartoon to date. Very fast and clever sequences in this colored reel.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

"SPARK PLUG": Barney Google—Another funny color cartoon that is refreshingly different.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

UNTRAINED SEAL, THE: Color Rhapsodies—The music is fine, the color effects very good. Believe it is more amusing to the grownups than the youngsters.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

PUDDY THE PUP AND THE GYPSIES: Paul Terry-Toon—The best Terry-Toon we've played this season.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

RADIO RASCALS: Cabin Kids—This bunch of Negro children are always greeted with applause here. This reel is especially good. Running time, 1 reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small own patronage.

RAIL BIRDS: Tuxedo Comedy—Very good, plenty of laughs, and that is what the cash customers want. Make them laugh and you are O. K. Running time, 2 reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

SORORITY BLUES: Song and Comedy Hits—A peppy little short that will please okay.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

AIR HOPPERS: M-G-M Sports Parade—Interesting air glider short.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

OLD MILL POND, THE: Harman-Ising—One of the most beautiful cartoons I have run. Good music and a thoroughly entertaining short. This series is all good. Running time, 10 minutes.—Gladys E. Mc Ardle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

ON THE WRONG TREK: Charley Chase—The best Chase comedy this year so far.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

THRILL FOR THELMA, A: Crime Doesn't Pay Series—A good number of this well made series. Features Irene Hervey in the lead.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Paramount

COBWEB HOTEL, THE: Color Classics—Very good. Running time, 7 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

GYPSY REVELS: Headliners—A splendid musical. Very entertaining. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

LUCKY STARLETS: Baby LeRoy, Virginia Weidler, Billy Lee—This company's child stars all in a single reel, cleverly put together so each child has a part. We enjoyed it.—A. N Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

DUMMY ACHE: Edgar Kennedy Comedies—A good Kennedy comedy.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

FIGHT IS RIGHT: Radio Flash Comedies—This was only fair. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

FOOLISH HEARTS: Radio Musical Comedies—A musical comedy, but no laughs in the whole subject, only at the very last end. Running time, 2 reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. O. Small town patronage.

MELODY IN MAY: Radio Musical Comedies—Although we did not think much of this ourselves, we had several good comments on it. It has a smooth little story and Ruth Etting sings two good songs. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

TUNED OUT: Ruth Etting—Fair two-reeler; plenty of fun and singing. Ruth is a very good singer that should please any kind of audience. Running time, 2 reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

United Artists

PECULIAR PENGUINS: Silly Symphonies—A very good Disney cartoon for weekend business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Universal

DOCTOR OSWALD: Oswald Cartoons—Very good cartoon; latest recording came in as clear as a bell; when we cut over on the feature, we got surprised what difference there is in the recording. Give us good recording and we will be O. K. Running time, 1 reel.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

Vitaphone

BLOW-OUT, THE: Looney Tune—A good cartoon. Running time, 8 minutes.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

DOUBLE CROSSKY, THE: Olga Baclanova—Not so good. These Brevities are slipping a little. They must be running out of material. Running time, 21 minutes.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

FOR THE LOVE OF PETE: Big V. Comedies—This is the first Joe Palooka we have used. It was not so bad, in fact, was some better than the usual run of comedies nowadays, but that's not saying much. Running time, 21 minutes.—Horn & Morgan, Ino., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

I LOVE TO SING: Merrie Melodies—Papa and Mama Owl and their little owlets provide some good fun. Running time, 7 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

I'M MUCH OBLIGED: Vera Van, George Dobbs—A mixture of comedy and music that is always a sure fire hit with my patrons. Running time, 20 minutes. —Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

KING OF THE ISLANDS: Broadway Breveties—A very interesting color short and music on the South Sea Island. The men enjoyed the dances.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada.

OKAY, JOSE: El Brendel—Just fair. Running time, 17 minutes.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

PLAYGROUNDS: James Wallington—Our Own United States Series. A very interesting travelogue on popular Southern resorts.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

SUNDAY GO TO MEETIN' TIME: Merrie Melodies—Very good colored cartoon. These cartoons are always tops. Running time, 10 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

'WEE' MEN: Pepper Pot Series—A very fine juvenile show in the land of make believe.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Miscellaneous

LOUIS-SHARKEY FIGHT: Bought it right—Think it did extra business. Had to pad it up on account of the three rounds.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Serials

Republic

DARKEST AFRICA: Clyde Beatty—Seems to please the youngsters. Is better than some serials in that comedy is put in each episode.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

UNDERSEA KINGDOM: Ray Corrigan, Lois Wilde—Same old stuff. Gets tiresome. But some think they are cheated if no serial is shown, so all I can do is to wish for 'em "bigger and better." Just finished playing twelve chapters.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

M. H. Aylesworth Quits at N. B. C. To Stay at RKO

Merlin H. Aylesworth, chairman of the board of RKO and former head of the National Broadcasting Company, has resigned as vice-chairman and a director of NBC in order to devote his entire time to RKO, where until now he has been occupied only partially. The resignation, which was handed in last weekend, marks Mr. Aylesworth's complete severance from NBC.

Mr. Aylesworth resigned as president of National Broadcasting Company last January 1, but remained with the company in the posts which he has just now relinquished in order to act temporarily in an advisory capacity on NBC policies. He was succeeded as president of NBC by Major Lenox Riley Lohr of Chicago, and in the interim has been devoting more of his time to RKO than formerly. Mr. Aylesworth had held the dual posts of president of NBC and RKO since 1932. He was elected chairman of the RKO board and subsidiaries when Leo Spitz became presidet of the company last winter.

"It is with sincere regret that I sever my official connection with NBC," Mr. Aylesworth said in making a statement on his resignation. Reviewing his association with the broadcasting company and his desire to devote more of his time to RKO, he said that "the approaching reorganization of Radio Keith Orpheum now calls for my entire time.

"I have greatly enjoyed my work in the National Broadcasting Company as president since the day of its organization in November, 1926," the statement continues. "I leave with deep gratitude and affection for all of the men and women who have been so loyal to the company and have made it such a great institution through the 10 years of its life."

Meanwhile Leo Spitz, president of RKO, is due in Hollywood from New York shortly and, among other scheduled business, will discuss a new contract with Pandro S. Berman, executive producer at Radio, whose current contract expires in April. Reports that he would join Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer have been dismissed by Mr. Berman, who said he "knew nothing at all about them."

Back in New York, directors of Keith-Albee-Orpheum and B. F. Keith Corporation held routine meetings with the latter board ratifying the agreement under which the Grand Opera House on 23rd Street in New York is being leased for 21 years.

Code Seals Up To 255 During Three Months

Working at high speed for three months, the Hollywood office of the Production Code Administration has viewed and has given seals of approval to 184 feature pictures and 71 short subjects. These figures date from June 27 to September 19.

Indicating that a flood of reissues of old pictures will greet exhibitors during the season, the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., office tabulation, shows that 58 old features received the code certificate during this period. Warner, alone, accounted for 52 of these.

Since the code seal machinery was started, July 15, 1934, Joseph I. Breen and his aides have approved 1,524 features and 894 shorts of one and two reels.

Fox Dividend of $1

The board of directors of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, at its meeting Tuesday declared a cash dividend of $1.00 per share on the outstanding common stock, payable October 23rd, to stockholders of record October 16.

Aint it the Truth?

An Excerpt from an Editorial Appearing in BOX OFFICE, issue of August 22nd.

"AIR conditioning has lately become a subject for profoundly practical discussion with theatre owners. Until recently, scientific theory has been used too profusely with hardly enough citation of fact to impress the non-technically minded theatre owner, whose conception of air conditioning is generally confined to 'cooling' requirements during our seasonal hot spells.

"It is felt that this is a most opportune time to substantiate our many previous inferences that all-year-round air conditioning (not just cooling) is what every theatre needs, regardless of size or situation."

. . . and when it comes to all-year-round air conditioning, here's a system that will suit your theatre—exactly.

Equalized Kooler-Aire

Provides washed and filtered warm air in cold weather and delightfully cool air in summer. This means all-year-round comfort for your patrons.

Leo C. Cimikoski supplies an excellent reply to Section A. He says, "As the name implies, the three-element tube consists of three elements sealed within a glass tube from which all air has been exhausted. There is an anode (positive terminal) and a cathode (negative terminal). The latter supplies electrons (negatively charged) which the anode collects, while the third element, the grid controls the collection, it being negatively charged and therefore repels negatively charged electrons emitted by the first (cathode) element in proportion to its voltage, which varies with the light impact upon the P. E. cell active element.

"Vacuum tubes are divided into two general classes, depending upon the uses it is proposed to make of them. Those to be employed in amplification are so constructed and operated that a weak, variable voltage applied to one element (the grid, or more precisely, the control grid) will produce duplicate variations in a far stronger voltage (or should we say current?) flowing between the other two elements, the same being known as the plate circuit.

"Rectifier tubes do not amplify, but may be used to supply power for the operation of amplifying tubes. Rectifier tubes have one anode and one cathode only. If a.c. current be applied to the tube anode, it will be positive and negative, alternately, and since current can only pass while the anode (plate) is positive, that lists the tube as a rectifier of alternating current, supplying pulsating current flowing in only one direction. The flow of negative electrons (negatrons) from cathode to anode is variously termed plate current and space current."

J. R. Prater replies, "The three-element vacuum tube is so named because it consists of three essential electrical elements; namely, cathode, anode and control grid, all sealed inside of a glass or metal tube from which all air has been exhausted. The cathode is usually placed in the center of the tube. It consists either of a metal wire which is capable of being directly heated to incandescence with d.c., or of a cylinder of insulating material coated on its outer surface with emitting metal and capable of being heated to incandescence indirectly by means of a loop of wire inside the cylinder, which wire is electrically insulated from the cathode circuit and is heated by a.c. from an independent source.

"The anode usually consists of a flattened ring or cylinder of metal surrounding, but not touching the cathode. In operation the anode is given a positive charge with respect to the cathode. Consequently a great number of the negatrons emitted from the incandescent cathode are attracted to the anode.

"The control grid consists of a wire screen or similar metal skeleton construction placed between the cathode and anode, but not touching either of them. Negatrons passing from cathode to anode must go through the spaces between the grid wires, thus coming very close to the metal of the grid. When supplied with sound current, the grid thus situated is able to influence or control the negatron flow, hence the name control grid.

"Except for the addition of the control grid, the three-element tube is identical to the rectifier tube. Although seldom done in practice, it is entirely possible to use a three-element tube as a rectifier merely by disregarding the grid.

"Either of the terms plate current or space current may be used to describe the flow of negatrons across the empty vacuum of the tube from cathode to anode, or plate, as it is commonly called. However, my own preference is to regard plate current as that current which flows through the entire plate circuit, and space current as the current which flows through the space between cathode and anode inside the vacuum tube, which is only a part of the complete plate circuit."

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 43

This question is not from the Bluebook. Section A: Assuming some reasonable proof of ability should be exacted when a projectionist is employed, please set forth your views as to ten reasonable questions that it would be proper for the employer to ask (save, of course, where the prospective employer is fully acquainted with the applicant's ability). Section B (the names of those answering this section will not be divulged; only straightforward arguments for or against will be considered): Do you believe that membership in a union should stop employers from examining members sent to them for employment?

To join the Bluebook School merely send in answers. Place name and question number upon first sheet. Address F. H. Richardson, No. 3 Tudor Lane, Scarsdale, N. Y.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ended September 26, 1936, from 108 theatres in 17 major cities of the country was $1,292,532, a decrease of $7,458 from the total for the preceding week ended September 19, 1936, when 112 theatres in 18 large cities aggregated $1,299,900.

ADMISSIONS, GROSSES MAKE FURTHER GAINS

Higher Prices for Tickets Established in 13 Cities or Territories in Fortnight

The movement to increase admissions, preliminary results of which were recorded by MOTION PICTURE HERALD two weeks ago, continues to be manifest in reports from various sections. At the same time box offices are adding to the list of records set by the new pictures.

Higher admission levels in individual theatres or in small circuits have been put into effect in 13 cities or territories in the last two weeks.

In Albany, N. Y., Si Fabian's Grand theatre, playing double features, has advanced its top price to 35 cents as a fall policy. The scale formerly was 25 cents top.

The first step toward increasing price levels in Buffalo was taken when both the Lafayette and Shea's Century, heretofore charging 25 cents for adults at all times, increased the price by ten cents for Sundays and holidays. At least two of the neighborhood houses in the city are increasing prices five cents.

Attendance in theatres in the Chicago and Milwaukee zones is greater than ever before, James Coston, operator of Warner theatres in the territories said recently. "I have been in the business 27 years and have seen nothing like it," he added. Admissions have increased ten cents at the Avalon, Chicago, and Warner, Milwaukee, and it is planned to raise prices in four or five more houses, Mr. Coston said.

All theatres in Lorain County, Ohio, near Cleveland, raised admission prices by five cents on September 27th. Theatres affected are the Capitol, Elyria, operated by John Pekras; Ohio, Lorain, operated by August Ilg; Palace, Lorain, a Warner house; Apollo, Oberlin, operated by Jerry Steel; and the Tivoli, Lorain, operated by John Pekras.

A five cent admission increase went into effect on September 19th in the Crystal, Kramer, Senate, Imperial, Chopin, Graystone, West End and Granada theatres in Detroit. The Hollywood, a neighborhood house, has increased its balcony price ten cents on Saturdays and Sundays, and the Center, also a neighborhood house, and the Loop, downtown, both in the Associated Theatres circuit, plan to raise their prices this month.

District Manager Evert Cummings of the Tri-State theatres in Hastings, Neb., has raised evening prices at the Strand to 20 cents. Matinee prices will remain at 15 cents.

The Warner circuit has instituted a price raise in its first-run houses in Hollywood, the Hollywood and Downtown. The new scale entails an increase of five cents on general admissions for matinees, ten cents advance for evening general admissions, plus tax, and ten cents on loges including tax. Subsequent run houses in the circuit remain the same. The circuit is charging ten cents more on showings of "Anthony Adverse" throughout the northwest and plans to do the same with "The Great Ziegfeld." They have also raised admissions five cents on balcony seats in Salem, Ore.

The Fox West Coast circuit has been gradually raising admissions in the Los Angeles territory for the last eight months. Circuit officials say that the increased revenue offsets any possible loss through diminished patronage if there is any. The independent theatre prices in the territory remain about the same but it is expected that the increases by the major circuits may have some effect on these operators.

MORE MONEY ASKED FOR NEW PICTURES

Distributors in Kansas City are asking more money for pictures than they did last year, in some cases as much as 25 to 35 per cent more, exhibitors report.

However, while they are getting increased prices from exhibitors, especially from those buying protection in Kansas City, the actual increase is small, probably not over five or ten per cent, and the increased asking price is reported to be largely for trading purposes.

Dickinson Prices Increased

The Glen W. Dickinson circuit in the Kansas City territory has increased admissions at its Booth theatre, Independence, Kan., from 25 to 35 cents. William Wagner, operator of the Beldorf at Independence, also has raised prices from 25 to 35 cents. The Dickinson circuit increased prices at the Dickinson, Hiawatha, Kan., early in September from 25 to 35 cents top, and officials report that there has been no complaint and that attendance has been substantially on the increase.

"Business is very definitely improved at the box offices of theatres throughout the territory," Mr. Dickinson commented. "We had the biggest opening in the history of the Dickinson at Lawrence, Kan., for 'My Man Godfrey.'" He said that he intends to increase other price schedules wherever justified.

The Saenger circuit, which recently acquired Al Yoeman's houses in Meridian, Miss., has advanced the scale at the Temple in that city to 44 cents, with 26 cents the new top price in all other houses.

The increase in prices at Warners' Stanley and Loew's Penn in Pittsburgh, started on "Anthony Adverse" and "The Gorgeous Hussy," will continue in effect indefinitely. Both houses increased their scales for straight pictures by ten cents for matinees and evenings. The Fulton theatre has dropped its bargain opening price of 15 cents. Its early matinee admission is now 25 cents.

The Hamrick-Evergreen Paramount theatre in Seattle has instituted a single feature Class A product policy, according to William Hamrick. "The Gorgeous Hussy" was the opening film under the new policy, with admission rates raised to a 40 cent top in place of the previous 30 cent top for double features.

Three houses in Toledo, Ohio, have increased prices by five cents. They are the Royal and Eastwood, both Smith and Beidler houses, and the Ohio, operated by Jack O'Connell.

Among the newer pictures which have been rolling up an unusual number of box office records are "Dodsworth," "My Man Godfrey," and "Sing, Baby, Sing." "Swing Time," "Anthony Adverse" and "Girls' Dormitory," released earlier, are still mentioned as record breakers.

"Dodsworth," the Samuel Goldwyn production of the Sidney Howard-Sinclair Lewis screen play, was credited with showing to an attendance of 58,250 for its first five days at the Rivoli, New York, beating all records except Charlie Chaplin's "Modern Times." The attendance on the first Sunday of the run surpassed all previous marks in the last five years, including that of "Modern Times." The film also broke all records in its first five days at the Aldine, Philadelphia, according to the manager, Harry S. Torrante.

Universal's "My Man Godfrey" grossed $17,000 on its opening day at the Music Hall, New York, beating $12,000 for "Magnificent Obsession," and $10,000 for "Show Boat" on their opening days at the same theatre. The picture also was reported to have broken records in San Francisco, Los Angeles and Pittsburgh.

The best weekend business in the history of the Brooklyn Paramount was claimed for Warner Brothers' "Anthony Adverse," which played simultaneously at the New York Strand. The picture opened to record business at the Brooklyn house, more than doubling the average opening day figures.

152,903 Pay in Seven Days

Herb MacIntyre, southern district sales manager for RKO, in New York for a conference, reported that "Swing Time," the Astaire-Rogers musical, exceeded records set by "Top Hat" in Dallas, Galveston, El Paso, Memphis, Fort Worth, Little Rock, Birmingham, and New Orleans. He said he expects the picture to make a new record for total sales in the southern sector.

"Sing, Baby, Sing" established new box office and attendance records in its first week at the Roxy, New York. A total of 152,903 persons paid admission in the first seven days with box office receipts estimated at $60,000, or 14 per cent in excess of the first week of "Girls' Dormitory," the Roxy's previous record holder and also a 20th Century-Fox production. On the Friday of its second week the picture attracted an even larger number of patrons than on its opening day.

The number and extent of holdovers in recent weeks also have been unusual. Among pictures chiefly responsible for the unprecedented extended runs were, besides those already mentioned as having scored box office records: "Last of the Mohicans," "The General Died at Dawn," "The Great Ziegfeld," "The Gorgeous Hussy," "Texas Rangers," "Road to Glory," "San Francisco," "His Brother's Wife," "Piccadilly Jim."

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

THE AWARDS AS A GOAL

Whatever their situations, forward-minded men point their hopes and efforts to some goal. In theatre business that goal as concerns the manager is often recognition of his abilities by superiors and through such recognition advancement to more responsible and better paying jobs.

In the three years of competition the Quigley Awards have time and again been credited by showmen for being the means of reaching these objectives, in fact so often that the winning of a Plaque or Mention can be put down as among those things to which theatremen aspire.

The response of the higher-ups from the very beginning proves that these ambitions are not in vain. Leading exhibitors in many sections have unequivocally endorsed the purposes of the Competitions and rewarded the winners. Sentiments of this nature continue to arrive in the mails and among the most recent, from A. H. Blank, president of the far-flung Tri-States Theatres, who on being informed of Herb Grove's success in August writes, in part:

" . . . Am gratified to have one of my oldest managers come through so signally. Permit me to say again that your Round Table is accomplishing much; your awards have come to mean everything and since competition is the life of any business, you are putting a genuine vigor into the industry, month after month.

"You may be assured we are making our men realize the importance of representation on your honor roll."

From Alex Manta, president of the progressive Illinois-Indiana Theatres, who, much impressed with the fine score rolled up by his managers, has this to say about it:

"We are indeed proud of Plaques won by managers of our Circuit. While each winner is individually rewarded in accordance with whether he wins a Silver, Bronze, First or Honorable Mention, we have in mind doing something for the boys as a group around the end of the year. The end of the year, because we still have hopes that during the remaining months some other of the boys may be fortunate enough to take their place with other winners of Plaque campaigns."

From Seth Field, February Bronze Plaque winner, who is taking over a bigger job and credits the Awards thusly:

"Once again the value of winning a Quigley Award has been demonstrated! Since capturing the February Bronze, four positions have been offered me, the last being so attractive that I have accepted it. Beginning October 4, I'll be located at the University Theatre in Cambridge, Mass., as assistant to Stanley Sumner."

There is ample and gratifying evidence that with Mr. Blank, showmen everywhere do indeed realize the importance of being represented upon the Awards honor roll. The new names appearing so often in the monthly listings may be taken as further indication that the forward-thinkers have not only adopted the Competitions as their goal, but are also scoring in no uncertain manner.

START AT THE TOP?

High school graduates much concerned with the problem of finding a ladder to climb should be heartened with the recent item in Motion Picture Daily about the girl down in Florida who went right from commencement exercises to a job as theatre manager.

The world do move. Not so long ago, a career in theatre business meant starting as an usher or relief doorman, working up to general handy man, to assistant and sichlike before taking over the reins. The gradual ascent usually took a spell of years, but that of course was in the dear, dead days. Now evidently a high school diploma is an open sesame to starting at the top.

Maybe it's the influence of those study guides.

SATISFYING THE SCEPTICS

There should be little reason for protest from Hollywood this year that the theatres are not backing up the finer grade of pictures now being released. In every sector there is activity of the highest order and it is safe to say that no boxoffice angles of consequence are being neglected by the men in the field. Reports in this issue, for instance, on the effective exploitations employed to sell the new season, to tiein with football, should satisfy even the most sceptical of complaining studioites.

SOBLER'S KNOCK, KNOCK BILLBOARD STUNT IN SAN DIEGO

Best Board Builds "Man Godfrey" Idea

The knock, knock game still going very strong out on the coast, Al Sobler, skipper of the Spreckles Theatre, San Diego, tied in on the gag for "My Man Godfrey" with an outdoor stunt that went very nicely. Al rented the most prominent billboard in the city, had it lettered as illustrated in photo to left, leaving, however, a large blank space where the letters of the title are shown. Cast, theatre and picture catch lines were run, but not the title.

Nothing was done for the next two days to build up interest when Sobler had four masked bathing girls climb to the platform alongside the board and one by one tack up the giant letters in the blank space to spell out the title. The stunt was repeated from time to time.

A newspaper knock, knock contest supplemented the billboard stunt. Prizes were awarded for the best knocks composed from either the first or last name of any member of the cast of "My Man, Godfrey."

Newspaper Features "Dodsworth" Strip

Top publicity feature of the New York Rivoli campaign on "Dodsworth" was tiein with the Mirror for fourteen day serialization strip built up by the paper with posters on all delivery trucks (see photo). Strip which covered five columns daily was given an advance buildup through special promotional ads.

Macy's tied in with the film from several angles, using newspaper ads, store windows, radio mention over WOR on three consecutive mornings and fashion publicity. Motion picture editions of the book were placed on display in chain drug stores and window cards distributed in strategic spots in various sections.

Fashion shop gave full window display to coat tieup using ads in all papers with prominent picture mention, Bigelow Weavers described several scenes in an advance broadcast and transcriptions were planted on smaller stations. Choice 24 sheet stands were utilized in addition to one sheets in all subway stations. Special front display featured at the Rivoli was emphasized on the date with animated marquee lettering, giant scene and star enlargements among other decorations.

Newspaper Delivery Trucks Plug Serialization

Revival Week Staged By Boucher at Met

Frank Boucher at Warner's Metropolitan in Baltimore went after his kid trade with the serial "Custer's Last Stand," every child attending opening matinee receiving an Indian cap through the courtesy of cooperating drug store and a bottle of chocolate milk from dairy. Large heralds were distributed, front of which contained picture copy and reverse merchants' ads.

In connection with his revival week, Frank got some nice publicity in the Baltimore Sun, which carried several stories calling attention to the fact that rather than book class "b" pictures, he was putting in features of the past. He also stressed the fact that in each picture some one who then had a very small part had raised to stardom, playing up "Society Doctor" with copy "America's new ideal, Robert Taylor, in the picture that won him stardom."

Pollock Ties Up Paper On Eight-Week Contest

A swell tieup with the Rochester Journal American was effected by Les Pollock, Loew's Rochester Theatre, when he offered guest tickets to those solving "the world's biggest crossword puzzle." Contest runs every Sunday for eight weeks, puzzle covering a full page and each week Les gets a plug in for his current attraction.

Radio Contests Planted By Maloney for "Frisco"

Radio contests highlighted H. H. Maloney's "San Francisco" campaign at Poli's Theatre, New Haven, Conn., one of which was a memory song contest, winners receiving guest tickets and the other listeners-in were invited to write their own lyrics to "Would You?"

An attractive window display was spotted in five-and-ten week ahead showing large fish bowl filled with water and seaweed, sign over top reading, "The invisible gold fish used in making San Francisco." Records of tune hits were played in lobby, and novel display consisted of globe lamp of the word with shade, card atop reading "A vacation suggestion," arrow painted on globe and shade to San Francisco.

Beauty salon cooperated featuring a Jeanette MacDonald coiffure, movie magazines were distributed with picture strips across top and special editorials with art work were run in the Journal Courier.

THEATRES PUBLICIZE NEW SEASON WITH HIGH-POWER EXPLOITATION

Loew Poli Division Motorcycle Cavalcade Parades Cities; Governors and Mayors Sign Scroll Carried by Riders

Costumed girls riding brilliantly colored motorcycles over three states, a lobby display illustrating graphically the evolution of the motion picture and a typical New Year's Eve celebration were highlights of the more ambitious of the recently reported campaigns put on by Round Tablers in various parts to inaugurate the new picture season. Harry Shaw, Loew Poli division head, with Erle Wright, division publicity director, plus the direct aid of the Loew-men concerned, did a fancy job with the bike stunt. John J. Baker, at the Fox Hackensack, Hackensack, N. J., conceived and followed through on the motion picture display and Bill Exton takes bows for his campaign waged in favor of the new pictures at the Gateway and Kenosha Theatre, in Kenosha, Wisconsin.

The Motorcycle idea was suggested by Harry Shaw at a managers' meeting as part of the "Happy New Movie Year" drive and with the approval of the theatremen, Erle Wright executed a tiein with the Indian people to supply motorcycles of special construction. Four skilled girls in costumes of red, white, blue and gold rode the bikes, decorated in the same colors and each vehicle carrying the new season and theatre pennants.

Worcester Inaugurates Journey

Cavalcade was started from Worcester, Mass., by Governor Curley and Mayor Benedict, whose signatures appeared on the scroll of honor (see photo) congratulating the Poli theatres on the new season's attractions. Signatures of Governor Cross, of Connecticut, and Mayors of Springfield, Hartford, Meriden, Waterbury, New Haven and Bridgeport also were inscribed, these executives with other civic officials receiving the girls on arrival in each spot. In New York President Lyons, borough president, greeted the Cavalcade (see photo) at the Bronx Borough Hall, which ceremony and the parade following was filmed by Metrotone.

The Poli New Movie Year Scroll

In Worcester Manager H. B. Watts started the tour by having the girls gather at the Poli Theatre and after collecting a sufficient crowd proceeded to the City Hall for the opening ceremonies following the parade about town. Publicity was in keeping with the rest of the local campaign.

In Springfield, Mass., George Freeman met the Cavalcade with a parade that covered Main Street to the City Hall. Parade included police motorcycle escort, local Bright Side Boys' Band, followed by the girls on their bikes with Erle Wright in the official car with escort from the Springfield Motorcycle Club. Bringing up the rear was the 24-sheet "Great Ziegfeld" sound truck. Procession was staged just as offices were closing with large crowds forthcoming. Mayor signed the scroll at the City Hall.

Governor Signs Scroll

Jack Simons was all set in Hartford to meet the travelers at the outskirts and brought the folks down to the Poli as a growd gathered before proceeding to the office of Mayor Spellacy for the scroll signing. The caravan then proceeded to the grounds of the State Capitol, where Governor Cross also signed and posed with the girls for the newspapers. Cavalcade was then taken on a tour of suburban towns and returned to Hartford to make an appearance at the local Indian dealers.

Top stunt of Simon's campaign was appearance of girls at local motorcycle races, going on as added attraction, to turnaway crowds. Sport pages carried banner headlines on the tiein which had girls circling the track with headlights turned on and spotlights overhead. While the girls were on announcement was made of the new Poli show season.

In Meriden, Manager Louis Falk at the Poli-Palace, staged a local parade in advance of the caravan's arrival, with fife and drum corps and theatre ushers drumming up advance interest. Falk awaited the girls at town's limits with escort of local motorcycle club and police squadron. At the City Hall, Harry Shaw, R. E. Russell and Erle Wright were on hand to greet the riders and also to witness the scroll-signing.

Skouras N. J. Manager Puts On Old-Time Picture Show and Exhibit; "Happy New Year" Celebrated in Kenosha, Wis.

Waterbury being the home of the Indian factory, there was a large turnout of factory personnel, fife and drum corps, motor cycle club, police escort, etc., arranged by Manager E. Fitzpatrick, of the Poli. After the City Hall ceremonies the travelers were guests of the city, feted by leading hotel.

The ceremonies in New Haven were utilized by Manager H. H. Maloney, at the Poli, to advertise his current date on "Great Ziegfeld" with the parade bally making the town before the greetings by Mayor Murphy. And the tipoff on the turnout put on by Manager Morris Rosenthal to tie in his date on "Girls' Dormitory" at the Poli-Majestic, Bridgeport, was that local papers commented that the theatre parade was better than any put on for the recent Centennial celebration.

Bridgeport Stages Three-Block Parade

Procession was three blocks long, lined up by Rosenthal while awaiting the arrival of the cyclists. When they hit town girls were escorted to the Mayor's office where Matt Saunders participated in the scroll-signing. Then the parade stopped at the various Loew houses for photos, with traffic blocked and street cars held up until the ceremonies were over. Line-up was headed by police escort, boys carrying New Season banner, a 55-piece band, local cycle riders, parade of cars with theatre and civic officials, boys carrying individual banners of coming attractions, sound truck, another band, 14 girls in line, each with block letter spelling out "Girl's Dormitory."

were, first, a display in his lobby illustrating the evolution of the motion picture and secondly, the presentation each week of an added attraction in the form of one of the very early features, these shown during the drive month called "Hollywood on Parade."

The display was detailed in a number of artistically executed set pieces. One carried photos of the old time stars with the headliners of today and on one wing was set forth a number of congratulatory telegrams from the stars themselves. Another unit featured enlargements of scenes from the earlier pictures with photos of the first nickelodeons. Models of the earlier projectors and the newest were also shown.

Issues of fan magazines from the beginning were also interesting, indicating the changes in style, fashions and favorites over a span of years, and still another display contributed by the Max Fleischer studios described the making of cartoons. Photos and stories of the exhibit were carried in the local papers.

Puts On Old-Time Show

The first added attraction shown by Baker was "Tillie's Punctured Romance," with Marie Dressler and Charlie Chaplin, presented as follows: Introductory trailer explained the historical value of the picture and requested patrons to imagine themselves seated in an old-time nickelodeon 23 years ago. Then an old asbestos curtain with ads of the 90's was lowered, slides projected and a whiskey baritone sang while the audience joined in. Following the picture, interrupted with slides such as "One moment please to change reels," a short trailer was run: "Such was the humble beginning of motion pictures. We salute these pioneers. Because of their courage and foresight we are able to say 'Forward' to the greatest season."

Bill Exton's Two-Column Kenosha Thanks Ad

"Welcome '37" Week Plugged by Exton

It was "Happy New Screen Year" at the Kenosha and Gateway Theatres, in Kenosha, Wis., and in keeping with the idea Bill Exton put on a lot of New Year parties, distributing hats, noisemakers, serpentime, etc., and putting on "community sings." The keynote of Exton's campaign was "Goodbye 1936—Welcome 1937," and this was followed in all advertising. First announcement was introduced by large illuminated cutout letters across entire orchestra pit just below stage which lighted up at each change of subject when the foots were brought up. All house personnel wore ribbons with this catchline and all phone calls were preceded with "Happy New Screen Year." Doors, windows, lounge rooms, etc., were posted with "Goodby" posters and all ads in advance underlined with the phrase. To all patrons ushers distributed heralds signed "Your Usher" and addressed "Dear Patron" with message from Exton giving all the details of the big pictures slated.

Gives Back-to-School Matinee

Window cards, trailer, mailing list were likewise identified with the catchline and wherever available the entire lower four inches of page one was taken in rural papers. Included in the campaign was a free Back-to-School show tied in with local paper. Over 6,000 children attended and trailer on Texas Ranger was run and a talk made about the coming pictures. In exchange the paper ran a full page ad for Exton run on the opening day.

Exton reports this as the biggest week registered in Kenosha theatre history with the "Goodbye" angle setting the entire town talking and as a followup ran a two-column ad for a thank-you, reproduced in center column. Campaign was also put on in the circuit theatres in Green Bay and Oshkosh.

Safety Campaigns Sell 'Sudden Death'

Through tieup with newspaper, Fred, Weimar, Paramount Theatre, Mitchell, So. Dakota ran a "safe driving quiz" in connection with "And Sudden Death," awarding guest tickets to those correctly answering list of published questions on safe driving; winners' names were published in paper.

City council paid for printing of traffic regulations which were distributed to every patron leaving theatre, police cruising car picked out safe drivers issuing theatre passes and judge sentenced reckless to see picture. For his lobby, Fred, planted a table at entrance one week ahead with scrapbook containing local accident stories and photos.

In Vernon, Texas

Lew Bray, Vernon Theatre, secured the cooperation of two safety councils in staging a parade and also got the Mayor to proclaim a "safety week." Papers ran a safe driving contest and for his street bally Lew promoted a wrecked car which was driven about town on truck properly bannered, as was an ambulance and hearse.

And at Logan, Utah

The junior Chamber of Commerce was approached by Jack Braunagel, Roxy Theatre, for a safety parade. Cards were tacked on all boulevard traffic lights, photos obtained from insurance companies were spotted in lobby two weeks ahead and car with p.a. system and policeman at wheel drove through main streets warning reckless drivers to prevent sudden death.

For his trailer, Jack flashed auto crash scenes on screen followed by flash powder explosion in footlights, a siren was sounded and then "calling all cars" was sounded as it faded into the regular trailer.

Office Buildings Covered By Krendel for "Show Boat"

Concentrating on the appeal that "Show Boat" would have for office workers, Dan Krendel, Tivoli Theatre, Toronto, Canada, promoted 5,000 sticks of gum which were pasted to small cards and distributed in downtown office buildings, copy reading, "The flavor of the sweetest story ever told," etc., etc.; cast and playdates followed.

Colored bookmarks with cuts of the stars were placed in leading bookstores, stickers with cut of small show boat were used profusely and tieups were made with leading beauty salons which used window and counter cards plugging a facial that would make the customers' complexion as clear as Irene Dunne's. Music stores plugged the song hits and local florist made up a "Show Boat" bouquet devoting window to scene stills and appropriate floral decorations.

Newspapers Work With Hague on "Pine"

A. Hague, Pathe Cinema, Bombay, India, for "Trail of the Lonesome Pine" put sandwich boys on streets distributing colored handbills and placing them in all parked autos on streets. Hague also effected a tieup with the Sunday Illustrated Weekly News, which is circulated in Bombay and the suburbs, for the insertion of three-color photos of Sylvia Sidney and Fred MacMurray. Paper also ran stories on the picture with art work and playdates.

Five weeks ahead, the theatre's program carried a colored cover plugging the engagement, tieup was effected with leading druggists featuring window displays of cosmetics and for his street bally, a mountain shack surrounded by cutout pines was mounted on truck and driven about town.

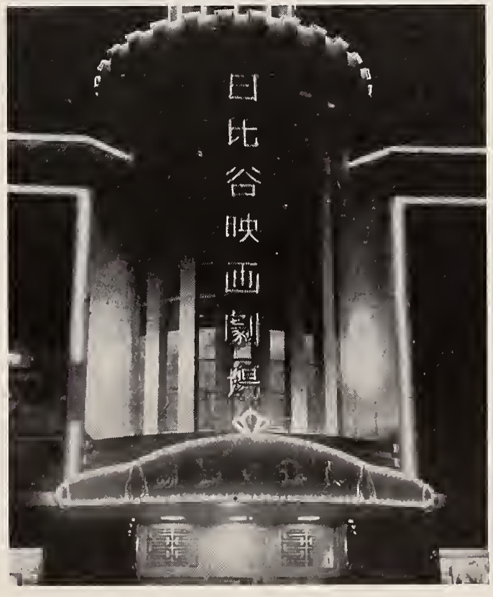
Tokyo Marquee Sells "Desire"

Accompanying photo shows the marquee of the Hibiya Gekijo Theatre in Tokyo with its special Japanese dressing for "Desire." Note that the front of the marquee has the title in Japanese and also several strings of pearls draped around.

Special herald was also distributed in shape of a pearl oyster with all reading matter inside the shell and a tieup advertisement on the back of the shell with one of the principal jewelry stores in Tokyo.



Tokyo Marquee Dressed with Necklaces

Full-column story on front page was promoted by Ed Siegal, Granada, Buffalo, N. Y., on the promotion of a free cooking class held three mornings under the joint sponsorship of the theatre and the Pioneer Air Conditioning Company which presented a stove from the stage. Various other merchants donated prizes which were presented during the sessions. Ed reports that about 1,700 women attended the classes. Accompanying photo shows the class in session.

Special section of paper, dubbed the "cooking school edition," contained recipes submitted by winners, merchants' ads and swell theatre plug. Ed says the stunt proved highly successful and recommends it to other theatremen.

Goetz Invites Nurses To See "White Angel"

When Joe Goetz, RKO Paramount, subsequent run in Cincinnati, recently played "White Angel," he invited the nurses of local hospitals to attend in a group as his guests at the nine p. m. showing. There is an intermission at that hour and as the nurses in uniform marched down the aisles in single file to their special section near the front of the house it presented an impressive sight which brought applause. Lights were partially subdued as the procession moved, which added solemnity to the occasion.

Forsyth Uses Robot To Plug "Chandu"

J. E. Forsyth, chief of exploitation and theatre publicity for Gaumont British in London, devised a talking robot which won considerable attention and resulted in valuable publicity. The mechanical man was stationed at Cole's, a leading store, and was advertised to the public as being able to answer any question asked.

Large crowds gathered and asked questions which penetrated the holes in the robot's chest. The replies came back in a deep voice out of the "man's" mouth, mystifying the public, and drawing larger and larger crowds.

At regular intervals the robot announced the current program at the Regent, GB's theatre in the vicinity of Cole's. The store carried newspaper ads on the appearance of "'Chandu,' the remarkable Gaumont British talking Robot."

Judge Sentences Speeders To See "And Sudden Death"

For "And Sudden Death" at the Victoria in Ossining, N. Y., Charlie Carroll secured the cooperation of the Chief of Police, who issued a proclamation that all residents see the picture and all persons appearing before the Police Judge on speeding charges during the engagement were also sentenced to attend the Victoria.

Accompanying photo shows machine that was used by Carroll for his "Earthworm Tractor" street bally, cutout of Brown was placed at wheel, note card with title, playdates and scene stills atop tractor.

Hospitals Dress Dolls For Bronson's "Angel" Date

An excellent stunt was arranged by George Bronson, Sheridan Square Theatre, Pittsburgh, for his "White Angel" engagement promoting 20 odd hospitals in his vicinity, each to dress dolls in appropriate costume representing their respective institutions. Dolls properly designated were displayed in prominent store window and stunt received plenty of newspaper breaks.

In addition to this, George sent a box of candy to Kay Francis together with a large photo of the window.

Newspapers Aid Cornell On "Last of Mohicans"

Duffy Cornell, United Artists Theatre, San Francisco, got some swell breaks in the newspapers on "The Last of the Mohicans" by planting the serialization and a full-page cooperative ad in the News, and several feature stories and roto stills in the Chronicle. The News also carried a contest for three weeks. The Call-Bulletin ran a special story and art on Binnie Barnes in connection with "Mohican Red."

The P.T.A. Journal, with a circulation of 250,000, carried the front cover and full-page story on the picture, while the organization distributed several hundred study guides and erected a smash "Mohican" still display at its headquarters.

Leading fashion shop filled a window with gowns worn by Binnie Barnes and Heather Angel, and several other women's stores featured "Mohican Red." Cornell likewise made some very effective tieups with the men's stores on lighters, electric razors and sporting goods. Local radio stations gave considerable time to the transcriptions and daily spot announcements, giving the picture a thorough build-up.

Nurses Movement Tied To "White Angel"

Dorothy Flukes, publicist for Warner's in Sydney, Australia, put over an effective campaign on "White Angel" at the Sydney Town Hall by tying up the Nurses Christian Movement, a special Florence Nightingale service was held at St. Andrews Church attended by 800 nurses in uniform. Archbishop Mowll gave a special sermon on Florence Nightingale, mentioning picture.

Drug company printed counter cards for drug stores, carrying scenes from picture and the Sydney Truth devoted a three column interview to Tempe Piggott, who plays an important role in picture. Hollywood Reporter of radio station also interviewed Piggott on the picture.

A private showing was given to Lady Gowrie, wife of the Governor General in the ballroom of the Federal Government House, screening breaking with story and photos in leading newspapers.

Window Displays Used To Plug New Pictures

With the new show season in full swing, Roscoe Drissel of Loew's Parkway in Wilmington, Del., has begun an extensive program of exploitation in large local department stores and other important spots in lobbies throughout the city. Accompanying photo shows window display for "Last of the Mohicans" in leading real estate window which is reported to have attracted considerable attention.

Roscoe also displayed in window of department store the original costumes used in the production of "The Great Ziegfeld" and a reported first time was the spotting of stills in public library on "Mohicans." George Shepp, assistant, aided in planting the various stunts.

Teaser Campaign Planted By McKoy for "Bullets"

Week ahead of opening of "Bullets or Ballots" at the Paramount Theatre, Goldsboro, N. C., James McKoy, city manager, ran a series of teaser ads headed "If I Were ——." Names of local city officials were used each day, followed by copy on picture.

Mounted on marquee was large cutout of a bullet and beside it a local ballot form blown up to four by eight feet; between the two was a large question mark. Across top of the bullet was the word "bullet" and over the form, "Ballot," on the question mark was an "or."

Lobby display included various firearms and three nights ahead of opening policeman walked on stage just ahead of feature, apologized for the interruption and proceeded to announce his recommendation that all present witness the new film. A reported first time for this stunt, Jim says it went over with the anticipated bang.

Leading Lady Contest Used by Gates for "Frisco"

A lobby contest formed the highlight of Arnold Gates' "San Francisco" campaign at Loew's Park, Cleveland, with lobby board carrying art work board with still offering guest tickets to those submitting the most impressive ten-word statement on who in their opinion has been Clark Gable's most suitable leading lady and why. Ballot box and statement cards were available at theatre.

Directional arrows were posted on telegraph poles, enlargements of star photos used in dress shops, song guessing contest was planted over radio and picture title lettered in whitewash was placed on side of hill, where thousands entering or exiting from Cleveland Heights were compelled to read it.

Murphy Welcomes Chief For "Last of Mohicans"

F. M. Murphy, relief manager for vacationing Eddie McBride at Loew's State, Syracuse, for "Last of the Mohicans" staged a street parade opening morning, headed by boys' band, magazine boys and Onondaga Indians in full regalia, ushers wearing sashes, bannered trucks and police escort. Chief Tantaquidgeon arriving in city for opening was met at train by two cars of Indians in full regalia, driving through town in bannered cars to hotel where a radio and theatrical reception was held.

Accompanying photo shows the way Murphy dressed his lobby with tepees and picture copy, department store tied up, offering guest tickets to each child purchasing a polo shirt, their advertised feature. Two Indian kiddies were stationed in front of theatre distributing fliers, Indian hats carrying picture and theatre credits were given out to children attending opening matinee and bookmarks were planted in all libraries.

Radio Contest Staged For "Queen" at Earle

Radio played a big part in the campaign for "Nine Days a Queen" put over by manager Charles Grimes of the Earle Theatre, Washington and publicity director Frank LaFalce whereby announcement was made that invitations to the opening would be sent to the first 200 people phoning in.

Invitations were later mailed on double post cards, second half of which contained a list of descriptive adjectives including "glamorous," "beautiful," "fascinating," etc., etc., with the request that the recipient designate her choice of Nova Pilbeam, star of the picture, and mailing same to the theatre. Radio transcription, which gives a comprehensive resume of the picture, was also planted by the boys.

"Notable Women" Contest Planted for "White Angel"

A unique contest to sell "White Angel" was planted by George C. Hoover, Capitol Theatre, Springfield, Mass., by planting list of 20 women, who by their brilliant efforts have made notable contributions to the progress of our civilization. Contestants were supposed to fill in blanks run in paper what these particular women had accomplished, guest tickets going to those submitting best entries to theatre.

Letters were sent to all nurses, private screening held for press and members of hospital boards, beautician featured a "White Angel" coiffure and department store tied in by offering guest tickets to first 75 customers purchasing a white uniform.

Lampe Hosts Author Of "Anthony Adverse"

District Manager Gus Lampe and Jay Golden of Keith's Syracuse scored a neat tieup on "Anthony Adverse" when they got Hervey Allen, author of the novel to attend a private screening of the picture along with a group of theatremen. Preview was covered by local press with wire services picking up story and pictures of attending celebrities.

Prior to opening theatre gave dinner party for the author and accompanying photo shows, seated, Mrs. Allen, Hervey Allen, L. W. Schine and standing, Gus Lampe, George Seed of Warner's Buffalo Branch and Jay Golden.

Following the preview, which was held a week ahead of opening, a contest was run in the Syracuse Herald for the best fan review of the picture, prize being copy of the novel signed by the author

MANY FOOTBALL CAMPAIGNS READY

In last week's issue, the first reports on football tieins were reported by some of the members and on this page are detailed what other Round Tablers have done last year and are doing this season to take advantage of 1936's wider gridiron popularity. Set down in alphabetical order are ideas contributed by Harry Botwick, Harry Brown, Jr., Louis Charninsky, Mort Goodman, Milt Harris, Joe Kinsky, John McManus, Bill Powell, Ed Siegal, Charlie Winchell, Dick Wright and Vic Gauntlett.

Botwick Makes Up Score Sheets For Posting on Ace Windows

One of Harry Botwick's favorites for use at the State, Portland, Me., is the planting of a sheet about 11 by 14 with room for scores of 10 games, headed "Football Scores" with bottom carrying theatre and current program. Names of teams are posted and sheets posted on front windows of cigar stores, restaurants, groceries, drug stores. Close contact is made with the newspapers and as the scores come in, a boy is sent out to set them down. Merchants like the idea, as folks stop to look and the theatre ad also gets the break. Only cost is the sheets, scores filled in with black crayon, and Botwick says he is good for at least 50 of the best windows during the season.

Along the same line is Harry's lobby score board on Saturday nights during the season. Scores from 10 to 20 leading games are posted as they come in and there are always crowds about taking a look at the figures. At the same time the folks observe the various attractions advertised. Then at seven o'clock, through the house p.a. system, scores of the important contests are announced. This takes about three minutes, costs nothing, and is a very popular feature. At games of popular semi-pro team on Sunday Botwick has secured exclusive rights to the p.a. system that announces all plays and by which the current picture and show is announced three times every game to an average of over 5,000 in the stands.

Something new on the coming Paramount "Rose Bowl" is planned by Botwick wherein an original dress or copy of one of the sport dresses worn by Eleanore Whitney in the picture will be offered as a prize in a contest already arranged with leading store. Tieup takes in newspaper and one school team. Shots of various high school games will be taken on 16 mm. stock and shown in one of the store windows with clips from the picture and theatre copy. Store pays for everything, and the contest angle, Botwick believes, will sell the women on the football picture as well as the sport styles tied in by the store.

Brown Announces Football Night Every Saturday During Season

With members of the local team and their girl friends as guests, Saturday nights in Newport at Shea's Paramount are to be celebrated as Football Nights, says Harry Brown, Jr. School pennants will be strung along the lobby and under the marquee and every woman attending is to receive a midget football attached to ribbon bearing the local school colors and seal.

VIC GAUNTLETT USES VARIOUS AIR STUNTS

For the Evergreen State Theatres, up in Seattle, ad head Vic Gauntlett, has had planes towing 50-foot banners flying over stadiums and also likes the gag whereby toy balloons each carrying theatre banner are sailed into the stands. Tiein with fireworks company to set off fire bombs with parachutes attached, these with ads on current attractions, is also recommended. Gauntlett has also arranged for 50-word announcements before and after each broadcast this season of all University of Washington Pacific Coast games.

On the night previous to the team's first game, Brown put on a Rally between features with entire team, coaches, etc., seated on stage. Principal coaches made pep speeches and the nationally-known Boston sports writer, Bill Cunningham, was slated to talk on the current season's outlook. Sweaters to the varsity squad promoted from the local merchants was also penciled in for a feature of the evening.

Score cards with theatre credits for distribution at games is also contemplated by Brown and he is working on a tieup with the bus lines to supply bannered busses for free rides from the field direct to theatre. Pictures of important home games to be shown at the Paramount on the following Monday and Tuesday are also planned.

Louie Shows Football Short At Start of Local Schedule

Few weeks back, at the Rialto, in Dallas. Louie Charninsky booked in the short, "Football Flashes," to tune in with the start of the local fall practice. Set pieces and blowups were planted in the lobby, letters mailed to college and high school coaches asking them to inform teams of the showing and also in advance, Louie promoted an announcement over the p.a. system at the Chicago Bears-Centennial All-Stars game.

Last year at the Dallas Capitol, on "Fighting Youth," Charninsky won the first prize offered by Universal for the best campaign on the picture and among his featured stunts was a tiein with sporting goods store which furnished football uniforms dressed on models and planted in ace windows with theatre credits. Ushers were clad in football uniforms and week ahead Louie built lobby of goal posts and figure in uniform. Another football-clad figure was placed atop the boxoffice reaching for a football suspended in the air by a wire. On opening day a parade was put on with the two leading high school bands leading a procession of bannered cars with uniformed ushers announcing the picture via megaphone.

Goodman Suggests Team Contest For "All-American Entertainments"

Although he has not as yet worked the idea, Mort Goodman, Warner Cleveland publicist, suggests a slant based on the pictures to be played during the football season where bookings can be set that far ahead. Take about 25 available coming pictures, says Mort, and from them on a newspaper tiein, ask readers to select what they think are the 11 tops and would like to see. Pictures are listed in football style, such as "Anthony Adverse," left end; "Texas Ranger," left tackle, etc., and contestants asked to write short essays on their choices. Selections coming nearest to actual bookings win the prizes.

Goodman also fancies a "most popular player" contest with paper tiein for high schools. Paper runs daily blank to be filled in and left at theatre. Merchants may be asked to come in with votes for purchases and blanks might also be offered with admissions. First prize could be trip to some big time game.

"Miss Great Lakes" To Plug Local Games and Loew Theatres

With the closing of the Great Lakes exposition in Cleveland shortly, the girl chosen as "Miss Great Lakes," said to be the most photographed personality in town, will act as a good-will ambassador in visits to out of town college towns to extend invitations to students to come to Cleveland and root for their teams in games with local schools. At the same time the girl will aid in exploiting attractions at the Cleveland Loew downtown theatres, State and Stillman.

In addition to the above, Milt Harris, Loew's publicist, details other tieups worked in previous years and to be repeated this season, including printing of official score cards. Entertainment of local and visiting teams at Loew's State night previous to games is also slated, this accompanied by parade down Euclid Avenue to theatre, banners reading "On Our Way to Loew's State to See (so and so) as Guests of (Name of Star)." Invite includes teams and school band. In exchange, theatre banners are displayed along grandstands at games and girl in football costume with theatre banner is allowed in grounds.

Further tieins reported by Harris include theatre banner on Goodyear blimp flying over field during big games. Imprinted blotters with schedules of local teams, theatres and attractions are distributed to students and for a laugh in street parades, old collegiate Ford with girl and boys in costume bring further attention to the Loew houses.

Kinsky Arranges for Exclusives On Score Card Privileges

At various theatres in his district, Joe Kinsky, Tri-States Davenport district chief, reports exclusive score card privileges at local high school games. Colored cards, about five inches wide by 11 deep, headed with "Football" cut and illustration, contain lineups of the two teams, all players with corresponding numbers, coaches, etc. Space in center allows for actual lineup. About half the space at bottom is given over to theatre and attractions. This card is one used by the Garden, in Davenport, Iowa, one of Kinsky's houses, and is distributed at high school stadium by the gatemen themselves. Arrangement has been in effect for past three years and renewed in 1936. Kinsky writes the theates also cooperate in ticket drives, pep meetings, etc.

McManus Awards Term Pass To Outstanding Local Player

To the player voted outstanding at the end of the season on the local Rockhill University team, John McManus, Loew's Midland, Kansas City, awards a term pass, the offer obtaining sizable mention in the college papers and downtown dailies. Entertainment feature stressed by John include acting as host at the theatre to traveling teams stopping over. Last year, Notre Dame, University of Kansas, University of Detroit were among the teams so entertained, with players introduced from the stage for resultant newspaper attention.

McManus also reports using imprinted blotters, heralds, etc., with team schedules and theatre attractions. Also found effective one season was a cheap, serviceable leatherette seat cushion carrying theatre name and location.

Most Valuable Player Award Works Best for Bill Powell

At the top of his highly effective football tieups, Bill Powell, Western Massachusetts Theatres publicity chief, lists a "most valuable player" tiein with sports department of newspaper, theatre and two high schools. Prize was inscribed silver cup, one for each school, and selection made by vote of the student body, the contest riding all through the season. Stunt was clinched by permission of school authorities and coaches, who cooperated.

Votes were deposited only in special box set in the inside lobby with explanatory poster alongside. Ballots were distributed at each school and students allowed one vote only for each game. (Cost of ballots was taken care of by jeweller's ad on reverse side.) Committee appointed by the school papers distributed the vote blanks and once each week collected them from the locked ballot boxes. Votes were carefully checked to insure them being bonafide and that students only voted once.

CASH FOR "GUESSES" NEWSPAPERS OFFER

In the New York metropolitan area, there is a lot of activity promoted by newspapers this season on the weekly score-guessing stunt with cash prizes and tickets to local games offered as prizes. The Mirror, for instance, runs a daily 15-game box to be filled in and mailed to Football Selection Editor at the paper no later than noon of day of games. First prize is $150 with others in proportion and entrants are allowed only one coupon each week. Rules say that neatness will also count in judging.

Because of the value of the tiein to the team and publicity to the schools, students were placed on their honor not to gag the stunt. Sports writers plugged it continuously and pointed out how to select the player, not on the basis of long runs and touchdown but rather on proper carrying out of assignments, good blocking, hard, consistent playing, team discipline, etc. In addition to all the season's buildup for the theatre, stunt was topped on the two high school nights (one for each team) when the prizes were awarded from the stage by the team's coach, of course, to packed houses and more.

Carried out properly, Powell says the tiein is one of the year's ace ideas containing plenty of institutional and direct value to the theatre. When stunt was repeated the second year it was built up further with pictures taken of certain standout plays from local games shown on a weekday following, usually to full houses.

Former Gridiron Player Lists Many Smart Slants

As Ed Siegal, now at Schine's Granada, Buffalo, is an old-time football player, it was natural to expect a slew of good stuff from him for these pages and Ed comes across with some snappers he has found quite useful. For instance, in Pittsburgh last year Ed tied in with a hat shop to put on a sort of "Vox Pop" broadcast in front of the theatre. Many questions were asked, including: "If you were an All-American, would you try for a screen career?" this to tie in with the players usually found in a football picture.

On football pictures, Siegal finds that merchants can be tied in on co-op ads and also windows on all sorts of women's and men's wear along the line of "what the well dressed man or woman will wear at the Big Game." Newspaper publicity can be built around contests for best all-local team and on football pictures, comparing local stars with famous footballers in the picture.

For the youngsters, an autogrophed football with signatures of local high school or college stars to be contested for at a Saturday matinee is recommended and for flash fronts Siegel likes the animated football figure kicking a goal with pennants of the local teams arranged so thay seem to be flying in the breeze. In towns with two or more high schools, this member suggests a band concert on the stage perhaps on the eve of some big game.

Winchell Describes 1935 Campaign To Publicize "Champion" Short

As Minnesota was acknowledged the 1935 National football champion team, the theatremen in that sector had especial reason to publicize this and it was done through the medium of a short created by Ben Blotcky, of Paramount Pictures, taken from various Paramount newsreels, of the high lights of the Minnesota games and made up collectively to be shown as an added attraction.

Charlie Winchell, Minnesota Amusement circuit ad head, realizing the value of the short in his territory, made up a sales plan for the circuit's managers to be used in putting over the short, suggesting copy such as: "Extra Added Attraction. A $15.40 50-Yard Line Seat to the Seven Most Thrilling Footbal Games of the 1925 Minnesota Schedule." Other smart slants included an advance lobby display of a miniature football field placed flat on a small table. Miniature footballs on an endless belt traveling from goalpost to goalpost were included with the name of the team on each ball together with the opposing team and the score of that game. The scores were listed for the information of the managers.

Contacts with schools was suggested to sell the date and announcements made on bulletin, in school papers, etc. Contact with alumni associations of all colleges concerned was another idea and it was set down that if parents or close relatives of any of the Minnesota players were local residents to have them as guests at the showing.

FELIX McMANUS

acts as manager and projectionist for the Strand Theatre, Chilliwack, B. C. Felix was originally the lessee of the Opera House in Chilliwack and the Edison, Lyric and Imperial Theatres of the same city, the Regent in Vancouver and for the past four years manager of the Famous Players Canadian Strand. Felix has already contributed to our pages and we look forward to further accounts from him.

is the assistant manager of the Gayety Theatre in Chicago, Ill., and now that both he and the manager are signed up we are anticipating that that house shall be duly represented. How about letting us and your brother members in on what's doing around Chicago?

manages the Regal Theatre in Lancaster, England, for James Brennan. Wilf says he finds much of interest and advice in our pages for which we thank him. Well, Wilf, you say you have relatives in Seattle, Wash., who keep you in touch with theatre business. How about letting us know what you are doing so that it may be detailed in our section, and your friends in turn can read what you are accomplishing.

in Grand Junction, Colo., manages the Mission Theatre and is fairly new to showbusiness, having started with the J. H. Cooper Enterprises, who own the Mission, as publicity man and was then made manager of the house. Grand Junction appears in our section frequently and we are expecting that you will help swell the ranks of reporters from that city.

who manages the Merri Theatre in Victoria, Australia, is new to showbusiness, having only been in it a year. Well, we hope he derives much benefit from our section, but this is a give-and-take business and we're hoping that this will serve as a gentle reminder that we expect contributions of his activities at the Merri before long.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1935, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parenthesis after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1936-37 season.

J. C. JENKINS—HIS COLYUM

Neligh, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

There now, it is Friday and Sherm Fitch has not come to take us to the Black Hills to see Leo Peterson and some more of the boys this week. We presume he went to Minneapolis, but what anyone would want to go to Minneapolis for when he could go to the Hills is more than we can understand. Some want to go to Minneapolis and some want to go to bed, but, anyhow, last night we put on a slipper and went to the Moon theatre and saw "The Bride Walks Out," with Barbara Stanwyck, Gene Raymond, Robert Young, Helen Broderick and Ned Sparks. We don't know what the critics and reviewers would say about this picture, but it is our guess that those who pay at the box offices to see it will pass it as pretty good entertainment regardless. We have seen a whole lot worse pictures than this one, but then of course we have seen some better ones, but you will always see a good one when Helen Broderick and Ned Sparks are in it.

There, the carnival is over. Mr. and Mrs. Grasshopper and their family of several million children and their Aunts and Uncles and their Cousins and Mrs. Grasshopper's folks have been holding a carnival in our vegetable and flower gardens for three or four weeks and have cleaned up every damthing but the bird bath and garage. If they ever go down to Pittsburgh we hope it rains. When it comes to families Mr. and Mrs. Grasshopper have got the Quintuplets beat a mile. You take a good healthy couple like Mr. and Mrs. Grasshopper and give 'em a good garden to work on, and the census enumerator will have to call for help and get six adding machines and three politicians to keep up with the job.

The Grasshopper family is the most prolific family we know of. Sundays and the Fourth of July are just like any other days to them, and when they see the sign "Keep Out" they think it means "Come to Dinner."

There is this about a grasshopper we admire: he never needs a tonic for his appetite. He can relish anything from the Constitution of the United States to a wire fence on the Elkhorn, and nothing ever gives him indigestion. Should you need any grasshoppers please let us know. All orders for hoppers promptly filled, either dead or alive, preferably dead. You remember Zeb Smith, don't you? Well, Zeb had—

A Plymouth Rock rooster that started out to find
Some angleworms and bugs for his supper,
And he spied a big hopper on a sweet potato vine
And that was the last of Mr. Hopper.

A New Yorker went "Out West" to visit his Uncle in Dayton, Ohio, and he pointed to a large building and said, "Say, Uncle, what's that building over there," and his Uncle replied, "Why, that's our school house," and the New Yorker said, "Your school house, eh? Well, I'll be darned; I didn't know you had school houses away out here."

AN OPEN LETTER TO GERTRUDE

Dear Gertie:

If your imagination is sufficiently fertile, and I am assuming it is, you can imagine my surprise, and pleasure, in receiving your letter. In this letter you addressed me as "Dear Dad." Now, listen, Gertie, I don't object to the "Dear" part, but what I want to know is where you get that "Dad" stuff.

You must have been corresponding with Sherm Fitch at Sioux Falls, S. D. Sherm has been calling me "Dad" ever since he spotted me a stroke a hole on the Sioux Falls golf course and won a case of beer, and the wonder is that he doesn't refer to me as Grandpa.

You said you hoped to go out to the Pacific coast some time. I hope so, too, and when you do I want you to go to Hollywood and go to the Herald office and meet Mildred Early. You will find Mildred an excellent lady and a most capable chaperone, and you will need her assistance in Hollywood; in fact, you will need several out there. It won't be necessary to introduce yourself; just tell her you are a special friend of mine, and from then on everything will be easy, for Mildred thinks I am a pretty good guy (I hope).

While you are out there I wish you would call on Lola Gentry, secretary of the Film Board in Los Angeles. Lola and I are to have dinner some time, but the Lord only knows when that "some time" will be. You can tell her that my heart is still on the left side.

I understand that Bill Weaver is down there helping you get out the Herald on time. Please tell Bill that unless my memory goes haywire, I will send him a new nightshirt for Christmas to take place of the one I ripped up the back when I was at his house that time.

I wish you would also say to A-Mike Vogel and Denny Shea, the two Polanders in the office there, that they have my kindest regards.

Should I ever get back there to Rockefeller Center, which I probably won't, I shall surely visit the office force, including yourself, provided you have taken the sign off the office door "Dogs Not Allowed," but in the meantime I hope you will be assured of my best wishes always.

Very respectfully yours,
"DAD"

The chairman of our board of supervisors was coming through the town of Orchard the other day and he says he saw a lot of fellows going down the street carrying guns. He thought there had been a robbery or a bank holdup of some kind, and so he asked one fellow what was going on and he said, "Oh, we are just going out on that shelterbelt to shoot jack rabbits for the government." Gosh, I wish they would send them down here to shoot grasshoppers in our garden.

All right, Ernie, it's time for you to go and see your sick grandma; the ball game starts in a few minutes.

WORDS OF CHEER

IN this fervid October of a campaign year with the atmosphere laden with viewings of alarum and outcries of peril for the nation and the world, there is a warming thrill in the discovery of an important industrialist who thinks that in a large way things are a little bit of all right and tending toward the better.

The press has not yet discovered a formula for making the millions aware of the frequently sensational character of good news, so there has not been much attention for the utterances of Mr. A. W. Robertson, chairman of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, before a gathering of distributors of electrical wares in Boston about a week ago.

"The truth is," Mr. Robertson remarked, "that we have traveled farther along the road to a safer and more enjoyable life in the past one hundred years than in all the preceding centuries of recorded history. And the last twenty-five or fifty years have surpassed all others. . . . Our life expectancy has been extended ten years. If we were all under sentence of death we would have a better appreciation of what a priceless boon ten more years of living truly is."

In his survey of attainments for the better life and forecasts for the future, Mr. Robertson placed heaviest emphasis on what air conditioning might be expected to do for a crowded city civilization. He observes that we eat and drink now and then, and go to considerable pains about the quality of the intake, while we breathe eighteen times a minute, and a lot of it pretty bad air.

In that connection we are pridefully reminded that air conditioning has had its introduction to the public, and right down into the lower buying power masses, too, through the instrumentality of the motion picture theatre. The motion picture has a share in the new Golden Age, as a disseminator of technologies as well as emotional stimuli.

OUR "ART" ECHOES

A SOUND bit of business, be it wit, humor or comedy, becomes immortal, always. Many a year ago the editor of this page set rolling the story of the late Mr. Rudyard Kipling's repulse of an American interview with the testy remark: "Young man, if I had a good story, I would not tell you—I'd write it."

And now one can fancy that Mr. Howard Dietz gets an amused moment now and then with the recrudescence in the public prints of a quip he conceived in the days of his publicity service of the Goldwyn company. Mr. Goldwyn was in London interviewing Mr. George Bernard Shaw. Mr. Dietz cabled his London office to tell the press that Mr. Shaw had said, "Mr. Goldwyn, you are so much of an artist, and I am so much of a business man, that we will never agree." The story came back over the press cables and went around the world. It has been going ever since.

So it has been inevitable that in the current twittering about Mr. Shaw and his St. Joan absurdities, it should come back again. The other day the New York Times recorded Mr. Shaw as saying to Mr. Goldwyn: "All you think of is art and all I think of is money." Every year or so there is a new version.

A PUBLICITY seeking attack on the Production Code Administration of the organized industry of the motion picture in the United States by Wardour Films in London, addressing the English press for attention to a release entitled "Living Dangerously," was given attention in the news pages of Motion Picture Herald of September 12.

In sequel Mr. Bruce Allan, London representative of Motion Picture Herald, transmits a letter which he has had from Mr. John Maxwell, chairman and managing director of Associated British Picture Corporation, Ltd., controlling, among other interests, Wardour Films, Ltd. Mr. Maxwell in his letter, discussing the publicity material involved, says:

> Now that I have read it I can say that I would not have permitted it to go out had I seen it before. I do not approve of animadversions on other countries' censorship codes. These are entirely their own affair, and are no doubt designed to met the different outlooks and feelings of their respective peoples. Nor would I have approved of making publicity out of the fact of a picture being banned in another country. I consider that an antiquated and pointless form of sales-talk, although I know it is frequently used by both distributors and exhibitors. Naturally I have not time to supervise all the details of the various branches of our business or know all that is going on.

Meanwhile, the further fact remains that the picture in question was not banned, and could not be, but was rather in the same process of adjustment to Code requirements as product of American origin.

THE mallard drakes that went slinking away into hiding in the ragged moulting days of midsummer are back again on the waters of the Silvermine Valley in gay feather and full of arrogant quackery. Also a cock pheasant, immodestly ornate, has brought his harem to share the last of the sweet corn. Any day now his raucous, challenging crow may puncture civilized indulgence and bring Fate down from the gun rack.

This Week

Who Bought What

Important circuits throughout the country to the number of 95, representing some 3,700 theatres in key cities, have signed 346 contracts for 1936-37 product. A nationwide survey by MOTION PICTURE HERALD lists this information which is important to exhibitors who are buying subsequent runs to follow the circuits included in the study. Information on long term franchise deals is included where such data are available. The deals included in the survey are those concluded in representative territories throughout the country except Chicago, where a fight over clearance has delayed product buying.

The story is on page 13. The list starts on page 14.

Mrs. Fox Loses Round

Mrs. Eva Fox, wife of the former motion picture magnate, lost a point in the involved litigation surrounding Mr. Fox's receivership hearings when Federal Judge John Boyd Avis in Camden, N. J., ruled that Mrs. Fox must place the books of All-Continent Corporation in a neutral place where they will be available to Referee Robert E. Steedle. Mr. Fox testified last week that while he was worth $100,000,000 in 1930, today he has nothing but a "few odds and ends."

Developments in the hearings are reported on page 40.

Universal's Plans

Efficient functioning of the Universal Pictures studio under the first six months of the company's new regime has decided officials to announce an increase of 10 pictures, from 42 to 52, in the production schedule for the 1937-38 season, according to R. H. Cochrane, president. Mr. Cochrane returned this week from a visit to the studio on the coast and was enthusiastic in his praise of the work completed and contemplated.

An interview with Mr. Cochrane is quoted on page 40.

Showmen's Travelogue

London as a theatre center is called 20 cities in one because of a multitude of factors. The article in this issue's "Managers' Round Table" starts a second series of articles by MOTION PICTURE HERALD correspondents covering show business in the world's key cities. Listed for early publication are articles on Tokyo, Bombay, Sydney, Warsaw, Vienna, Nanking, Berlin, and, on this side, Indianapolis, Washington, Columbus, Cleveland.

The London article starts on page 93.

Trade Practices

Exhibitors concerned with trade practice disputes turned their attention this week to New York, with the arrival of Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, for final action on his organization's 10-point program to remedy the entire situation. It is expected that the issues will be cleared up this week.

For details of Mr. Kuykendall's stand on the matter, and other exhibitor organization activities, see the story on page 32.

Chicago Anti-Trust Suit

Independent exhibitors in Chicago expect that their anti-trust suit, now in preparation, against Balaban and Katz and the large distributing companies and charging that they have violated the consent decree of 1932 and an agreement not to adopt a uniform system of clearance and zoning, will result in a federal investigation which will break up what they call "trust combinations." The suit is to be filed in ten days.

Details of the Chicago clearance situation, which is holding up product deals with independents, appear on page 80.

Circuit of 100

A circuit of 100 newly-built "intimate" community theatres to compete with the present reputedly obsolete houses in small towns was announced this week as the goal of American Community Theatre Corporation, of which the principal independent exhibition, equipment manufacturing and private banking sponsors are Walter Reade, American Seating Company's L. N. Olmsted, and Frank V. Storrs.

Preparations for television, wide range and stage broadcasting of radio programs were announced as part of the plan, described in full on page 31.

British Expansion

Bernstein Theatres in England has undertaken an ambitious program of expansion which is to bring the circuit to 40 houses at an outlay of $5,000,000. Most of the 16 new houses, and ten of them already are under construction, are to be in newly developing residential sections.

These and other news developments in the British field are discussed on page 68.

Giannini Opinion

Dr. A. H. Giannini, president of United Artists Corporation, told reporters on his arrival in New York last weekend that the mounting European interest in motion picture production is the most significant development confronting the industry.

Dr. Giannini's views are reported on page 30.

Radio "Solutions"

"Cures" for the "evils" attributed by exhibitors to film stars' radio broadcasts are pouring in from everywhere, and range from the stopping of film programs to pick up important broadcasts on the stage, to a dictatorial control of how and when and where the stars may make such broadcasts.

The "sure-cures" are detailed on page 29.

That Gaumont Deal

The status of the Gaumont British agreement with 20th Century-Fox and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer continued uncertain this week. Joseph M. Schenck, in Hollywood, criticized the Ostrer brothers for considering a competitive offer believed to have been made by John Maxwell, of British International Pictures. Sidney R. Kent, president of the Fox company, is in London to carry on the negotiations. Reports from the British capital continued to quote persistent rumors that the deal will not be consummated, citing opposition from the British Government.

Latest reports on the situation are reviewed on page 46.

Junior Laemmle's Plans

Three and possibly four pictures will be produced this year by Carl Laemmle, Jr., through the medium of his new company, Laemmle Productions, Inc., which is to be formed shortly, the youthful producer revealed upon his arrival in New York from Europe. He was accompanied by his father, Carl Laemmle, Sr., who said he had no plans to enter the motion picture industry even though he would like to produce about one picture a year.

The plans of the younger Laemmle, with a list of the four stories he may make into motion pictures, are found in the story on page 32.

74 Stories Bought

With the production wheels turning over at full speed in Hollywood to meet release commitments, the studios during September purchased 74 vehicles as suitable screen fare. Paramount led with 23 purchases, followed by Warner, Radio and Twentieth Century-Fox. Of the total number of purchases, 40 were original stories, 32 were novels and published magazine stories and two were plays, neither of which are current on Broadway.

The complete list of purchases, with all the available screen credits, is found in the story which begins on page 33.

The Irish in Them

Anna Lee, cast for an Irish part in the Gaumont-British adaptation of Sir Rider Haggard's "King Solomon's Mines," at Shepherd's Bush, London, is learning an authentic brogue from Tony Quin, native of Kilkenny and former member of the Abbey Players of Dublin.

These and other bits of sidelights on the British studio activities of the day are presented on page 69.

Hopes in China

What with political accord between Canton and Nanking rapidly being reached, film folk in China are more optimistoc concerning business activity than at any time since the former Canton government laid down its drastic quota regulations and added a local censor fee for good measure, writes J. P. Koehler from Shanghai. Mr. Kohler's article was written before the latest Japanese naval force landed to patrol a part of Shanghai following the shooting of a Japanese policeman, so what effect this incident will have on theatre receipts is still to be learned.

Mr. Koehler's news letter is on page 65.

Pickets in Philadelphia

Executives of Musicians' Local 77 in Philadelphia are preparing to conduct a picket campaign patterned after the New York precedent in an attempt to increase the number of occupational opportunities for their members in twelve key neighborhood motion picture theatres.

Steps taken and objectives sought are disclosed on page 40.

Legislation

Legislation aimed at motion picture theatres in particular, and the industry in general, was proposed this week in Minneapolis, where an ordinance seeks to prohibit construction of any new theatres; in Detroit, where it is aimed to keep children out of the houses at night. In Pittsburgh, the Waynesburg Sunday vote was declared illegal.

These and other taxation matters are reviewed on page 30.

Thalberg's Will

The will of the late Irving Thalberg, who died after a short illness recently, was filed for probate in the court at Los Angeles this week. The producer left an estate estimated unofficially as approximately $10,000,000. By the terms of the will, the widow, Norma Shearer, is left the bulk of the estate.

The details of the document, especially the highlights, are found in the story on page 30.

Hollywood Index

The state of production affairs in Hollywood is indexed by the launching of thirteen pictures last week while eleven were being taken to the cutting room, leaving a net forty-eight in work.

Titles, casts and directors are listed on page 49.

Argentine Quota

A quota plan for Argentina, which would require importers and exhibitors to rent one home-made picture for each ten foreign throughout 1937, with the ratio increasing to 15 per cent the following year, is proposed by Sr. Juan A. Bracamonte, honorary technical director of the Argentine Motion Picture Institute. Mr. Bracamonte proposed that private production of motion pictures, but with government financial support and control, be countenanced only until the Government itself can take over the job.

Details of the report appear on page 72.

Teaching by Film

Financing of motion picture production by private companies for purposes of general education in the public schools of Japan is provided for in the budget Minister Hirau of Education has submitted for the coming year. The plan is to sponsor formation of distributing leagues throughout the nation which will have charge of the work.

Chikushi Tani's faithful reporting of this and other news of the industry in Japan is presented on page 76.

Dutch Competition

Competition is starting for the American motion picture in Holland, and it is coming from the Dutch Indies, in the form of a newsreel organized by 15 companies there. The reels will be airmailed to Holland. As for features, several are now in work in Holland. When experienced American producers and directors are obtained, something like real competition is to be expected.

The new developments in Holland and its colonies are described on page 84.

Republic Stock Issue

Herbert J. Yates, president of Consolidated Film Industries and a principal in Republic Pictures, has been discussing with Wall Street houses a projected public stock issue for Republic.

Exhibitor Sessions

The Independent Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut, at a meeting this week in New Haven, set October 13 as the date for voting on affiliation with Allied States Association. Sentiment at the meeting was in favor of aligning with the national unit.

The Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana will hold their annual convention October 27 in the assembly room at the new Variety Club in Indianapolis. Meanwhile, the annual convention of the M.P.T.O. of Washington at Seattle has been postponed to October 23, a week later than the original date scheduled.

95 CIRCUITS CONTRACT FOR 17,646 PLAYDATES IN 3,700 THEATRES

A total of 346 contracts, representing 17,646 individual playdates for the 1936-37 product of ten large distributors, have been signed by 95 of the most important circuits of the country, involving some 3,700 theatres. This is determined in a nationwide survey by MOTION PICTURE HERALD as to which circuits possess what product for the new season. The circuits covered in the study are the key to the whole national exhibition structure, the independent subsequent-run exhibitors taking their product after the important circuits, which in virtually all cases get prior runs because of their buying power.

In the table starting on the following page are listed the important circuit contracts concluded to date. While the buying season has not reached its conclusion, so much progress has been made that exhibitor buyers expect the majority of circuit contracts to be signed by the end of this month. Although these major circuit deals include only about 30 per cent of all accounts usually entered on distributors' books, they bring more than half the total rentals for the year.

Reported attempts by distributors to increase rentals or to extend the number of percentage pictures slowed up deals in a number of situations, but except in a few instances negotiations have now been completed. Other factors have delayed completion of contracts in one or two territories, notably the Chicago area, where a fight over clearance is being waged.

Exhibition sources report that all companies are making strong efforts for increased terms, basing their demands on the greatly improved business conditions. In addition to stepping up rentals everywhere, the distributors are pressing for more percentage deals this year, and where these are being sought the guarantees are more strict and the percentage higher, predicated on the showing made by pictures during the last year either on a flat rental or percentage basis.

Independent exhibitors have complained heatedly about the level of rentals demanded, but, except in the Atlanta area, the larger circuits have signed for product on the new terms. Demands for substantial advances over past averages have slowed up activity in the Georgia territory, where general sales of new contracts to the circuits, some 20 in number, with each involving from six to fifty theatres, have been very few, according to sales managers in the exchanges.

Opposition Voiced

The independents realize that major producer-distributors are getting higher rentals from their own theatres, but they are reported to resent the selling point being made by some distributors based on this factor. This opposition is expected to continue as buying by independent exhibitors continues through the year.

DISTRIBUTORS LIST 514 FILMS FOR YEAR

A total of 514 features has been scheduled for the 1936-37 season by ten large producer-distributors, as follows: Columbia, 58; Gaumont British, 24; Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, 48; Paramount, 78; RKO-Radio, 54; Republic, 52; 20th Century-Fox, 69; United Artists, 29; Universal, 42, and Warner Brothers, 60.

The concentrated drive for percentage deals is expected to characterize the season's sales policies insofar as the great majority of subsequent run exhibitors are concerned.

For the new selling season all major distributors have abandoned the minimum admission clause, generally included in contracts during the depression years. All but four have also eliminated the double featuring restrictions from their 1936-37 contracts and, inasmuch as three of these, Paramount, Warner and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, are on a double feature policy in most of their affiliated theatres, it would seem that no serious effort to enforce the clause will be made by these companies.

Cite Business Improvement

All these factors in the sales policies are attributed by sales officials to the rapidly improving business situation and the reasonable expectancy of better product from all companies.

They also see solution, through percentage deals, for the problems engendered by unreasonably low admissions and, in some instances, unnecessary double featuring.

Apparent from the amount of product for which a majority of circuits have contracted is the fact that double features will probably continue in a large number of houses throughout this season.

Uncertainty at Chicago

Uncertainty of subsequent run exhibitors in Chicago over the amount of product they will require for the new season in the face of the indicated return to double features there has been cited as one reason for the buying stalemate in that city, which was precipitated by a fight over clearance schedules. Balaban and Katz, Paramount affiliate which dominates the territory, has delayed putting into effect its announced new double feature policy, the reason given being that not enough new product can be obtained to place all the neighborhood houses on a double bill basis. Exhibitors not vitally affected by the clearance dispute are reported to be holding back on their buying because of the resultant uncertainty.

The unsettled clearance problem, however, is seen as the major factor holding up film deals running into hundreds of thousands of dollars. It was brought about when independent theatres refused to buy any product on terms other than those of last year and has now reached the point where Allied Theatres of Illinois has announced that a suit, including the complaints of 100 exhibitors, will be filed in federal court.

B & K, in buying new product, demanded from distributors an extra seven days clearance between "C" week and the first week of release. When the circuit was given the extra clearance Allied Theatres, as a group, refused to buy any product until the old terms were included in all contracts. Allied said that the new terms were a violation of a consent decree handed down in the United States district court in 1932.

Depend on Forthcoming Suit

Independent exhibitors have become so aroused by the dispute that in most instances they have steadfastly refused to contract for new season product and are depending on the pending suit to force the distributors to revise the terms. As playdates for some of the new pictures rapidly are drawing near, the situation is causing both theater men and distributors grave concern.

B & K originally planned to start the dual policy in outlying theatres about the middle of September, but business in the Loop has been so good that many new pictures have been held over and not enough new product is available for the double bills. The circuit has contracted for all major product.

In other territories where disputes threatened for a time to delay contracts the difficulties have been ironed out and negotiations concluded. In San Francisco a two-year product deal was signed by the Golden State and T. & D., Jr. circuits with Universal after a squabble during which Universal threatened to sell around the first-run circuits and even to distribute product through church and social auditoriums.

A survey of the buying situation indicates that most contracts have been signed for the important circuits, which include first-run houses in the key cities.

Sales executives of the distributors are confident that the present totals of accounts signed, which in some instances are 30 to 40 per cent greater than last year at the same time, indicate that new highs will be reached when the accounts are totaled at the end of the season.

PRODUCT BOUGHT BY LARGE CIRCUITS

The following table shows the product purchased by the larger circuits of the country, long term franchise deals being indicated where such information is available. Many circuits affiliated with distributors have long term franchise contracts, but under arrangements which provide for negotiation each year, the contracts thus amounting to continuing options. Under such deals both parties are obliged to confer annually on rentals. This type of contract is especially true of Paramount with its circuit partnerships. Several major distributors, as a matter of policy, refuse information on long term franchise deals, particularly with their affiliated circuits. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, RKO Radio, Warner Brothers and 20th Century-Fox product will be played by these companies' affiliated circuits but terms of the contracts are withheld. Similarly Columbia and Universal are officially silent on long term franchises.

Many of the circuits listed herewith have not purchased their full supply of product and are still negotiating with one or more of the distributors.

"Folks, Meet 'OIWIN'"

("Oiwin" is Brooklynese for the good old Anglo-Saxon name of Erwin)

To the bride and neighbors he was a polite and milk-toasty Erwin, but to the mob he was 'Oiwin'—the horse-picking demon who gave bookmakers financial D.T.'s! A gentle Jekyll in Jersey . . . but a Hyde-de-ho in the betting ring.

Now it can be told! Nearly every star comedian in Hollywood wanted to play 'Oiwin'. "I'll buy the play," said one . . . "I don't want any salary. Just give me the chance and a percentage," said another world-famous funnyman . . . But Warner Bros. decided to give this coveted acting plum to Frank McHugh—not because he was the best-known actor to do 'Oiwin'—but because in their opinion he was by far the best suited. How glad you'll be they made this choice when you meet 'Oiwin' on the screen!

DISTRIBUTORS LAUNCH COURT FIGHT TO BAR DOUBLES IN PERELMAN CASE

Counsel Clash Over Whether Showings Involve Interstate Commerce Act; Warner and Paramount Drop Litigation

Take Appeal from the Decision in Philadelphia That Companies Cannot Legally Bar Duals in Product Contracts

The organized distributors summoned their best legal talent this week to their year-old fight in the courts to win the right to prohibit any exhibitor contractually from showing one of their features on the same bill with another feature.

The fight is the strongest yet made by the large interests to force exhibitors to eliminate double bills. The occasion is their appeal from a Philadelphia court's decision of last year, in which the independent Perelman exhibition interests in Pennsylvania were sustained in their contention that distributors could not legally bar duals through a clause of prohibition in product contracts.

In the appeal the distributors are taking the position before the circuit court at Philadelphia that the use of the anti-double feature contract clause involves no restraint of trade in interstate commerce.

The rehearing was granted the distributors on their plea that the original ruling court had misconstrued some of the trial testimony and had been guided in part by other testimony called either incompetent or improper.

Conspiracy Already Ruled

The circuit court already has found that there existed a conspiracy among the distributors to enforce the anti-dual clause. Unless that finding is now reversed by the same court on the new rehearing, the clause would continue to be invalidated for the future. The court will withhold a decision pending further study.

Judges Joseph Buffington, J. Warren Davis and J. Whittaker Thompson, sitting in the third circuit of the federal court of appeals, on Tuesday heard the re-arguments on the appeal which grew out of the suit brought by Harry Perelman and his father, Louis, independent exhibitors who operate the West Allegheny and Lehigh theatres in Philadelphia, against Warner Brothers, First National, Vitagraph, RKO, Paramount, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Fox and United Artists.

Opinion in the United States district court on Jan. 31, 1935, by Judge George A. Welsh, upheld the allegations made in the bill of complaint filed by Benjamin M. Golder, attorney representing the Perelmans. The decree was made final on April 2, 1935, and the bench of the circuit court of appeals sustained the decision of the lower court on January 16, 1936.

Warner and Paramount Drop Out

In buying pictures, the contract contains a clause which forbids the exhibition of two feature films on the same program under penalty of cancelling the contract. Allegation was made that this is in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman anti-trust act and under Section 16 of the Clayton act as a conspiracy in restraint of interstate trade and commerce in motion picture films.

At this week's rehearing, Warner Brothers and Paramount dropped out of the litigation.

Discussion by Morris Wolf, counsel for the distributors, was centered on the question whether the testimony showed the outlawing of double bills constituted a conspiracy. In the original decree, upheld by the sitting judges, opinion by Judge Welsh was that inclusion of a clause in the contract to prohibit duals was not a matter of pure coincidence, "but this unanimity of action in banning doubles was a well defined, well thought out and a well studied intent to accomplish a purpose prohibited by the federal laws."

BOYCOTT BY PATRONS SUPPORTS EMPLOYEES

The unusual action of a citywide boycott by citizens for the dismissal of circuit employees attracted attention at Meridian, Miss., this week when a mass meeting, attended by practically everyone in the town, was held and a conciliation committee of five leading citizens appointed. The mass meeting followed several sessions at which it was decided to boycott the town's Saenger theatres because of dismissal of all the circuit employees when the circuit took over the Alberta theatre last week to give it a monopoly on the town's houses.

Former employees of the theatres have declared that the persons who took their jobs are working for half the pay they formerly received and that they have been given no reason for their dismissal.

While the original testimony consumed over 1,200 pages, attack was made against witnesses who attributed a statement to Louis B. Mayer of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to the effect that a method to stop exhibitions of double bills had been found and that steps would be taken to remove this "menace." Mr. Wolf hinted that, if this testimony was competent, it did not show the existence of a conspiracy, and that if, as the judges interpreted it, it showed a conspiracy, then the testimony of the witnesses was not competent. Contention was made that Mr. Mayer's statement was a historical fact and not the result of a conspiracy.

In arguing for the Perelmans, Mr. Golder pointed out to the court the testimony that the meeting at which Mr. Mayer made the alleged statement was called for the express purpose of curbing the "double feature evil."

At this point, Judge Buffington raised the question that if the showing of doubles was such an "evil" to the motion picture industry, why the policy is permitted to continue in New England states while the same distributors refuse to allow it in the Philadelphia district. Mr. Wolf informed the court that the distributing companies were thinking in long term ranges and inserted the clause as a means of curbing the trend. Further, Mr. Wolf continued, since the banning of duals, independent exhibitors are enjoying a prosperity they never knew before.

The question of a "conspiracy" was also taken up by Edwin Weisl, also for the distributors, who said that there was no similarity of action on part of the distributors

Mr. Weisl's arguments were based on the alleged failure of the Perelmans to establish that this restraint in trade was "unreasonable"

In the original opinion, upheld by the sitting judges, Judge Welsh had written that by the control that the distributors have over the major production of pictures, the independent exhibitor cannot exist without pictures controlled by these distributors. By reason of the tremendous concentration of resources that are in power and control of these distributors, Judge Welsh had continued, they are able to dictate their own terms and conditions.

Mr. Weisl pointed out that Columbia and Universal are major distributors of pictures and Philadelphia exhibitors may double their features with any independent product.

Sees "Cultural Life Controlled"

However, Judge Welsh, in his opinion, said that by such domination "the cultural life of our country would be controlled by a small group who might or might not be representative of the people."

Mr. Weisl contended that the banning of doubles is not the motivating factor in driving the independent exhibitor out of business, but that the use of double features might keep them out of business, hence the insertion of the debatable clause was with no intent to restrain trade against public interest.

The final argument now advanced by Mr. Weisl was to the effect that interstate commerce, within the meaning of the Sherman and Clayton acts, was not involved in this case.

Mr. Golder in answer cited the supreme court ruling in the Paramount Pictures case that the exhibition of pictures constituted interstate commerce, also pointing out that attorney for the distributing companies in this case made no exception to the finding of facts by Judge Welsh that the picture showing is interstate commerce.

Cites Circuits' Dual Bills

Mr. Golder also pointed to the testimony that the circuits, operated by the major distributors, are showing double features in various localities and this policy has not lowered the quality of their productions. Further, the individual distributors were doubling their features with features from the other defending companies.

The industry in Philadelphia was not alone in focusing attention on the double feature controversy. In Chicago, where a bitter battle threatens between independents and the dominating Balaban and Katz circuit, the B. and K. interests said they will swing to duals regardless of what action independents may take. John Balaban indicated that the circuit will be ready for the change in about four weeks, when old releases will have been played.

In Kansas City, double bills reached a new all-time high the other day when 41 out of 44 subsequent runs offered duals, widely advertising the offerings.

The Belmont and Summit, two independents, and the Fox Plaza were the only subsequents in Kansas City not dualing. The five downtown first-runs adhered rigidly to singles, excepting Loew's Midland, which, starting Friday, will double feature for the second time in its history.

SAYS STAR BROADCASTS CHEAPEN FILMS' VALUE

B. P. McCormick Sets Out to Reduce Publicity for Players Who Go On the Air Waves

by B. P. McCORMICK

B. P. McCormick, who sees star broadcasts as a direct concern of the exhibitor and his pocketbook, operates the McCormick Theatres, with headquarters at Canon City, Colorado.

The McCormick theatres are the Jones and the Canon at Canon City, the Rialto and the Libert at Florence, Col., and El Cortez theatre at Hot Springs, New Mexico.

To the Editor of the Herald:

Should motion picture stars place their talent and drawing power as regular features on the radio programs?

That's the question before our industry today and I see in one of the trade papers today that the Hays organization is going to investigate to see if it has any drawback on theatre receipts over the nation.

This time and expense could be dispensed with if the producer is really interested in protecting their own investments as well as that of the exhibitors of the country, if they will go to any newsstand and purchase three or four of the most recent issues of radio magazines, turn to the index showing the order of programs that receive the highest rating for holding radio listeners each week, and they will see that the program featuring motion picture stars heads the list.

For the past several weeks the radio magazines have featured movie stars on their covers and on one of the front covers the printed matter in bold type was—

Do the radio listeners want me on the air? I want an answer from the listeners. —Clark Gable.

In one issue there was a large picture of Ginger Rogers and a statement in bold type quoting Miss Rogers as saying, she would rather cast her lot with radio than to remain in pictures.

If exhibitors and producers will buy and read radio magazines for the next three weeks, they will be convinced of the tremendous role that motion picture stars are playing in radio programs, that they do have a tremendous pull for radio listeners. They will learn that these broadcasts are at a time when the exhibitor must expect to get 80 to 90 per cent of the total box office receipts, and a fellow don't have to be really smart to figure out that a person can't stay at home listening to a radio program and attend the theatre at the same time.

On the front cover of the Herald issue of Sept. 5th, we read the following—

RADIO ANSWERS EXHIBITOR PROTEST AGAINST STAR BROADCASTS BY BUDGETING $51,000,000 FOR TALENT.

That statement alone is a sufficient answer to the question.

Let it be understood that the exhibitors of the land know that radio is a marvelous invention (just the same as the movies are), that it is playing a tremendous part in world affairs, and that the radio is here to stay.

We also realize that radio has the same privilege to hire talent as does the producer of pictures and that those seeking employment have the right to work for either interest or both of them if there is no objection from either side to the talent and drawing power of the person or star being divided.

Look into the records and discover the earning power of the stars before they found a place in motion pictures. Compare what they were able to earn then and what they have been able to earn in pictures. Then consider the fortunes that have been spent by the producers to help make nearly every star in motion pictures what they are today. Then consider that this entire bill has been paid by exhibitors in extra high film rentals, according to the publicity that has been given the star.

Exhibitor Is Contact Man

In addition to the producer's investment in the stars there is the exhibitor, who is the contact man, the world over, with the newspaper man; because of the money he spends every day on program advertising, the exhibitor has been able to get "publicity for the making of stars" that was absolutely necessary in the creating of popular demand for the stars so publicized.

Look at any exhibitor's contract, and where there is a recognized star in a picture, you will note that the picture cost a premium in exact proportion to the presumed value of the star.

Here is the proof that the producer and the exhibitor have a big investment in star names and that investment is not paid back or a profit shown until every picture the star has appeared in has been shown by all who have bought that picture. Producers must be required to protect, so far as is possible, this intangible something that we pay a premium for in pictures. That product must come to the exhibitor with all the exclusive features and magnetic drawing power that it was sold for. A star's conduct after a picture is made has a great deal to do with sustaining or destroying the worth of every picture they ever appeared in.

It is a well known fact that stars object to making any great number of pictures per season, some of them one, some two and others three to six. The reason is that too many times on the screen tends to cheapen their names and drawing power. That reason is already a part of several records in court. And if we accept that line of reasoning, we must also admit radio broadcasting by these stars for the public to get, free of charge, with the programs going into every dive and honky-tonk, as well as the swanky spots, on every radio from coast to coast—that is appearing for the public in a lot of places and a lot of times—such a practice is going to cheapen their product in theatres!

If diamonds could be gathered in every week or in every gravel pit, all the diamonds now in the jewelry stores of the world would have little market value. Entertainment that can be had free through millions of radios seldom can be sold by the theatres at a profit.

Wants Exclusive Values

Motion picture theatres will show a greater profit if they are able to show a class of entertainment that has a value that is distinctive and exclusive.

Free shows in the parks or elsewhere cripple box office receipts. Tens of thousands of people each week and every night can get reserved seats free at the broadcasting studios from coast to coast. You are invited to telephone for reservations without cost or obligation. That is stiff competition for every theatre in cities where there is a station offering this free entertainment. There are no ifs or ands about that competition hurting theatres.

Nearly all organized exhibitor groups have expressed their disapproval of stars broadcasting as they are now doing. Disapproval has come from many quarters and I am glad to do all that I can to help correct this competition by the stars.

It took "Publicity" to make "Stars." They must have publicity of the right kind if they are to remain Stars. I am situated the same as every other exhibitor that buys pictures. I am the man that must pay for the programs in my daily papers. My editor will run the publicity stories that I ask him to and he will leave out everything that I request him to leave out. I am going to cut to the bone every line of publicity on those motion picture stars who continue their radio broadcasting. My lobby artist will be instructed to give less attention to certain stars.

Without continued publicity the stars of today will cease to be such, just the same as grass will die without water. Exhibitors have the power to cut off the main supply of publicity in the daily papers. We can and will cease paying any premiums for any star's product if that star continues to work against the earning possibilities of their own pictures.

The producer must, so far as is possible, protect the earning power of the product they sell us. They must regulate and limit any broadcasting. Producers, stars and exhibitors should see the need for cooperation.

New York Theatre Assessments Listed

The Center theatre in Radio City has been assessed tentatively at $4,500,000 in the list made public by the Board of Taxes and Assessments. The figure is $100,000 less than the present year's valuation. The RCA building in which many film company home offices are housed, represents a greater assessment increase than any other large building in the city, jumping from $26,500,000 to $27,500,000. The total assessment on Rockefeller Center buildings is $76,800,000 compared with $75,400,000 for 1936.

Among Broadway theatres assessments for the most part showed decreases from the 1936 figures. The houses and their tentative 1937 valuations are: Loew's State, $3,850,000; Palace, $1,200,000; Mayfair. $1,675,000; Roxy $3,425,000; Ziegfeld, $980,000; Astor, $1,700,000; Globe $1,000,000; Strand, $3,200,000; Rivoli, $1,550,000; Capitol, $2,400,000; New Criterion, $6,500,000; Rialto, $3,000,000.

In the Bronx the Grand was assessed at $1,100,000; Keith's Fordham, $835,000, and the Paradise, $1,325,000. In Brooklyn Loew's Kings in Flatbush was assessed at $1,175,000; Loew's Metropolitan, $1,100,000; Loew's Melba, $450,000, and Fox Flatbush, $5,965,000.

Hamrick Increases Salaries

Substantial pay increases to all employes of Hamrick-Evergreen Theatres in Seattle will be inaugurated this week, according to John Hamrick, city manager. Some of the increases represent outright raises and others are restorations of previous pay cuts, it was said. The general increase is reported to be approximately 10 per cent.

FLOOD OF "CURES" OFFERED FOR "EVILS" OF FILM STAR BROADCASTS

Stoppage of Shows for Broadcasting from Stage Is Tried Out; Limitation of Player Time on Air Proposed

Appointment of "Czar" of Players' Appearances Suggested; "Council" Would Supervise Material for Radio Programs

"Sure cures" for the reputed "unfair competition" of Hollywood film stars' appearances on radio programs are now being offered in rapidly increasing numbers and from divers sources. The suggestions fall into these principal categories:

1. Limitation of the time allowed film stars on the air by their film studio employer.

2. Stoppage of motion picture shows to permit broadcasting from the theatre's stage of the important radio programs from which the box-office is said to suffer most, in order to bring potential patrons away from their radios at home.

3. Appointment of a "czar" to govern film stars' air appearances and rule on any "unfair" competitive aspects.

4. Creation of a "council" to work for alleviation of exhibitor pressure on the stars' broadcasts by exercising a close supervision of the material broadcast and active surveillance of their appearances on the air.

The question, however, of the extent, if any, to which the broadcasts unfairly compete with theatres, resulting in losses at the box office, still was to be determined. Contrary to earlier reports, which had indicated the completion of such an investigation, the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America not only has been unable to determine with any degree of thoroughness the full effect of such appearances, but on last Friday the investigators found they would have to extend the machinery in the checkup, giving it considerably more width and breadth, thus delaying the report for weeks.

NBC Radio System Grows

Meanwhile the controversy proceeds merrily. Fanning it to a greater intensity was a statement issued this week from the home office of National Broadcasting Company in New York to the effect that NBC's radio system, now observing its tenth anniversary, has grown 500 per cent in its first decade—meaning, in effect, that the competition of radio to the motion picture box office has been increased five times in ten years, from the 19 original stations of the NBC network in 1926 to 105 stations in 83 key cities of the United States and Canada on Dec. 1, 1936, the first ten years' expansion program ending two months hence. And motion picture stars today broadcast from each of the 105 stations, frequently at the same time that exhibitors are trying to fill their seats for pictures in which the same broadcasting film stars are featured.

Claiming fulfilment of a promise made at the inauguration of the system in November, 1926, that the corporation would "provide the best programs available for broadcasting in the United States," the Radio Corporation of America, parent of NBC, now announced as NBC's second purpose: "To provide machinery which will insure a national distribution of national programs, and a wider distribution of programs of the highest quality." Thus, the complaining exhibitors may expect even further competition in the new expansion to nationalize the networks.

ENGLISH PRODUCERS TRY "POTTED" OPERA

"Potted" opera is the latest novelty to be tried out on British motion picture patrons, according to press dispatches from London. Condensed versions of the principal operas, lasting an hour, and performed partly by artists and partly on the screen by means of color films, and accompaned by an organ, are shortly to be presented in principal theatres. The plan, originated by Harold Ramsay, British theatre organist, would involve an expenditure in salaries to artists, and for making the films, of over £5,000,000 ($25,000,000).

NBC is now pouring forth that so-called competition over its air waves with a power of 1,734,900 watts in an 18-hour day, as against the original 41,250 watts in 1926.

Five Broadcasting Centers

In order to facilitate acquisition of film stars for its advertiser-sponsored programs, NBC now says, in its "tenth anniversary" statement, that its program-origination point has been extended from the single small New York studios of 1926, to five such points, including Hollywood, where complete broadcasting facilities are maintained such as those in New York, Washington, Chicago and San Francisco.

The competition which, exhibitors claim, comes to their business from radio is 71 per cent sustaining (non-advertising) programs and 29 per cent sponsored (advertising) programs. NBC said that it "acknowledges this invaluable contribution (by advertiser sponsors) in providing many of the most popular entertainments on the air"—of which so many feature motion picture stars.

Allied Offers a "Solution"

Allied States Association of New Jersey is but one of the many state and city organizations now studying the radio problem in its relation to broadcasts by film stars and the theatre box office. They have concluded that the control of hours on which picture stars broadcast may be the solution, claiming that the stars should broadcast only during those hours when the box office is less likely to suffer. Max Cohen is chairman and Maurice Miller and Dave Snaper are members of a committee appointed by the organization to study exhibitor complaints and suggested corrections.

Several state exhibitor organizations have flatly demanded that the studios contractually or otherwise prohibit their star employees from broadcasting.

The suggestion that there should prevail a close scrutiny of the material broadcast and also active supervision of stars' appearances comes from the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

That distributors in New York are conferring on the idea of establishing a radio advisory council to supervise broadcasting activities of their stars became known last week.

Walter Reade Stops Show

Probably the first tangible action to go out and meet the socalled competition of radio was taken the other day by Walter Reade, who stopped his motion picture performances at the 30 Reade theatres in New York and New Jersey, and broadcast through a radio on the stage the campaign speech of President Roosevelt to the audiences in front.

Mr. Reade declared that henceforth this will be a definite policy of his theatres, believing, as he does, that the competition can not be eliminated and in order to save the 50 per cent drop suffered by his box offices during important national broadcasts—entertainment, political or otherwise—he will widely publicize the fact that the patrons need not stay at home nor miss the broadcast.

The performances stopped at the Reade theatres, in 19 cities, during the Roosevelt broadcast and remained so for the full hour of the speech.

Mr. Reade said that he has learned that his theatres suffer especially in those communities where there is no morning newspaper and where the public ordinarily would have to wait until the evening paper on the following night for news of important topical broadcasts if they missed the broadcast at home. He further discovered that Sunday evening business is hurt most by radio, due to the numerous outstanding entertainment programs broadcast on that evening. He will broadcast the principal Sunday night entertainment from his stages.

Sets Empire Hearing

Referee Oscar W. Ehrhorn in New York has set October 30th as the date for a hearing to determine whether the amended petition on the reorganization plan submitted by the Empire Theatre Supply Corporation should be approved. The application was filed on August 21st.

Republic Starts School

Republic has organized a stock school for young contract players in Hollywood under the direction of Ned Dobson, studio talent scout. Twenty contractees will present plays weekly on a specially built stage for the benefit of executives. The players also will be used in supporting roles in pictures.

Screen Profits by Production Trend Abroad, Giannini

Mounting European interest in motion picture production was described as the most significant development confronting the industry by Dr. A. H. Giannini, president of United Artists corporation, in a press conference at the company's New York headquarters on Tuesday. Dr. Giannini arrived in New York October 3rd on his first visit since accepting the presidency and will remain for "three or four weeks to get fully acquainted." Will H. Hays announced on Wednesday that the Cinema Club will give a dinner in honor of Dr. Giannini's arrival.

Arrival of Carl Laemmle, Jr., at the Giannini office while the press conference was in progress was said to be without import in relation to a reported possibility that Mr. Laemmle may enter into a distribution affiliation with United Artists. Dr. Giannini said the visit was to be, so far as he knew, a purely personal one.

Dr. Giannini's observations on the increased production activity in Europe were in the nature of an analysis. Citing England and Italy in particular, he pointed out that one effect of world wide popularity of American made pictures has been to impose American modes and manners, in a degree, upon the peoples of the world. Recently heightened effort to produce in Europe motion pictures susceptible of world wide exhibition was attributed by the speaker to a natural and normal impulse to record and safeguard culture.

The English are deeply pleased, he said, with the trend toward production of Shakespearean and other works which are of English setting and portray the British people. The wish to bring about equivalent representation of Italian settings, institutions and traditions was alluded to as responsible for the erection of a $10,000,000 studio in Rome and the sending of an Italian emissary to Hollywood for the purpose of interesting American producers in its use. He specifically stated that he had "not a nickel in that proposition."

Asked whether he saw in the rising tide of European production for the world market a threat to the American motion picture ascendency, Dr. Giannini replied firmly in the negative. On the contrary, he said, Hollywood is doing the job for Europe better than Europe has done or is likely to do it for herself. He indicated that in his opinion the trend is altogether favorable and is conducive to the further expansion of the screen audience.

Dr. Giannini declined to express an opinion regarding the employment of motion picture stars for radio programs and its effect upon box office receipts, referring to the survey of the situation undertaken by the MPPDA and professing no first hand knowledge of the question. Recounting his own experience as program guest of Cecil B. DeMille on a sponsored air program recently, for which he received no compensation, the alumnus of two major universities and noted after-dinner speaker revealed that he had been harassed for ten days following the broadcast by an elocution instructor who boasted of having coached a number of screen players "into the big money" and offered to do the same for him.

Postpone Discount Meeting

The Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association has set back the Chicago meeting which was scheduled for a discussion of the Robinson-Patman Law on discriminatory discounts, from October 14 to October 17 at the Congress Hotel.

Most of Thalberg 10 Million Estate To Norma Shearer

The will of Irving Thalberg has been filed for probate in Los Angeles. Leaving a fortune unofficially estimated at $10,000,000, the late producer designates as co-executors and trustees without bond, Norma Shearer, Edwin J. Loeb and Bancamerica National Trust Savings Association. The disposition of the estate is as follows, according to the text of the will:

After 50 per cent community property deductions, the wife is bequeathed the residence occupied at the time of Thalberg's death together with all furniture, automobiles, jewelry, boats and personal effects. Bequests of $10,000 each are left to Hattie Heck, Abe Heymann, Dora Heymann, Jetchen Maier and Morris Heymann. The will states that a trust fund has been created for William and Henrietta Thalberg, the producer's parents, and that this trust will be enlarged to have a value of $150,000. This is in addition to other generous life endowments for the parents.

The residue estate is to be divided into several funds which will be administered by the trustees. A fund consisting of the income on property valued at $100,000 will be paid monthly to Silvia Weingarten, Thalberg's sister, as long as she lives.

Fund two, consisting of property equal to one-third of the entire balance after the establishment of the first trust fund, will be paid to Norma Shearer as long as she lives.

A third fund will consist of equal allocations to each of the Thalberg children living at the time of the distribution of the estate, and another fund to the descendants of any child dead but survived by descendants.

The net income of each fund will be paid monthly or quarterly.

The witnesses to the will were Goldie Appleby of Culver City, Vivian Newcomb of Hollywood, and Earl R. Levy of Los Angeles. The will was dated June 12, 1935, and was drawn by attorneys Loeb, Walker and Loeb.

Would Restrict Building, Limit Juveniles' Hours

Legislation adversely affecting theatres appeared this week in Minneapolis, Detroit and Pittsburgh. In the Minnesota metropolis, legislation was proposed restricting the building of new theatres and in Detroit the police are endeavoring to find a means of keeping children out of all-night shows. In Pittsburgh, the Sunday show vote taken at nearby Waynesburg, Pa., was declared illegal.

An ordinance restricting the building of new theatres until the Minneapolis population has reached 550,000 and which would put motion picture theatres in a sort of public utilities class, was introduced at a public hearing before the city council committee on ordinances and legislation. Following heated debate, the matter was referred to the legal department for an opinion as to constitutionality. Further discussion of the matter will be held at the next committee meeting in about two weeks.

Alderman Edwin I. Hudson, chairman of the committee, introduced the proposed ordinance. In reply to the question of who proposed and prepared the action, Mr. Hudson said that "a group of people went to the theatre men" and started the idea. The proposal is reported to have sprung from "this group of theatre men," whose names were kept secret.

Detroit police department heads and theatre owners are endeavoring to find a means by which minor children may be kept out of all-night motion picture theatres, and are considering an ordinance to this effect.

The new ordinance to be sought will ban minors during school hours and children under 14, unless accompanied by an adult, after 10:30 P.M., and between the ages of 14 and 18, after 12:30 A.M.

Because the Sunday film vote in nearby Waynesburg, Pa., was not submitted to the voters on a separate ballot, Judge Challen W. Waychoff of the county court at Pittsburgh has held the ban on Sunday films illegal. According to his decision, the local option results in Waynesburg cannot stand and another vote must be taken at the election next month.

Judge Waychoff ruled that the placing of the question on a separate ballot was mandatory. Thus Waynesburg will vote again on the question next month, instead of waiting five years, as usually required by law. Among the other boroughs and townships in Pennsylvania which will vote on the question of Sunday shows during the November 3 election are Burgettstown, Centerville, McDonald, Finleyville and Cecil Township in Washington county and Export and Suterville in Westmoreland County.

In Austin, Texas, Governor James V. Allred's recommendation for a 10 per cent state tax on film admissions would require theatre owners to pay one-fifth of their gross intake in taxes, former Senator J. J. Strickland, theatre attorney, declared this week. He cited the federal levy of 10 per cent on tickets of over 40 cents.

Major distributors in New York have notified exhibitors operating in the metropolitan area, outside of New York City proper, that they must continue to pay the city's two per cent sales tax pending determination of an appeal to be heard by the court of appeals at Albany this month. Due to misinformation, "a small number of theatres" beyond the city limits have ceased paying the assessment, it was said.

INDEPENDENT INTERESTS TO BUILD CIRCUIT IN CITIES UNDER 100,000

Exhibition, Equipment and Banking Interests in $5,000,000 Project to Erect 100 Theatres in Five Years

Convinced, after a year's study, that this country is ready for a wholesale theatre building project for motion pictures, interests identified with independent exhibition, theatre equipment manufacturing and private banking are combining resources to erect in the United States, in each of a number of cities having more than 5,000 and less than 100,000 population, a theatre of modern construction to compete with present obsolete buildings.

The project is advanced as a $5,000,000 privately financed program, aiming at construction of two new theatres each month for five years, for a total of 100 houses, the number to be expanded at the end of that time as conditions warrant.

Heading the venture are Walter Reade, independent theatre owner for 30 years and now operating 30 theatres in New York and New Jersey; the American Seating Company, one of the country's largest manufacturers of seats, as represented by L. N. Olmsted, its vice-president; Frank V. Storrs, private banker and owner of large blocks of real estate throughout Trenton and New Brunswick, N. J.; Carl E. Schuster, a statistical financial expert and an associate of Mr. Storrs; and Charles J. Bryan, associated with Mr. Reade in theatres for 30 years. These, together with Walter Reade, Jr., constitute the directors and the stockholders of American Community Theatres Corporation, which will undertake the construction and operation.

Call 60 Per Cent Obsolete

The project announced calls for the first wholesale construction of theatres in the motion picture business since the heavy expansion programs of the large circuits in the building race of pre-depression days, at least from the standpoint of individual circuit enterprise. Construction has been marked of late, but only as single projects, and not by circuits to any extent.

The new program is prompted by the belief established after checking the country, said the sponsors, that 60 per cent of the theatres in America's lesser cities are obsolete, mechanically and otherwise, and that at least 30 per cent of the nation's film houses are of the worn-down and antiquated "opry" house style, with three floor levels.

"The average annual gross business now done by theatres operating a full week, in towns of between 5,000 and 100,000 population, is running between $50,000 and $60,000, giving the owner or operator a net profit of from $20,000 to $25,000 a year," according to Mr. Reade. "Those exhibitors are, on the average, profiting to a greater comparative degree than other merchants in any other line in town. Yet, their patrons are being neglected, in some cases cheated, by the obsoleteness of the theatres in which they are compelled to seek entertainment. Small-town citizens are entitled to as many conveniences and as much comfort in their playhouses as those living in the larger towns where theatre structures are more modern."

Mr. Reade explained that each theatre will be built "entirely of steel and concrete, modern in type, with chairs, carpets and heating and cooling of the 'de luxe' type usually known only to the de luxe large properties in the key cities."

WHITES TAKE ROLES FROM INDIANS IN FILMS

Jim Thorpe, famous Indian athlete and more recently employed in Hollywood's studios in minor roles and extra parts, has taken up the fight of his people and presented his case to United States District Attorney Pierson M. Hall, who promises to lay the whole matter before officials in Washington. The trouble started, according to Mr. Thorpe, when the 250 Indians in Hollywood, who make their living playing in pictures, found the studios hiring white actors to fill the roles. Thorpe said he thought perhaps the federal attorney could stop the studio practice of impersonating his people.

"Balconies will not be built in any of the properties, in order to meet the requisites of television, if and when television is ready for public exhibition," he said. "Projection booths also will be wired for television."

It is the intention of the company to start building within the next 30 days in ten cities within 200 miles of New York, and to continue to expand as rapidly as is possible until the program of at least 100 units has been built in the first five years. The program will be extended from New York to the Coast. The first theatre, on Market Street, in New Brunswick, N. J., opened last Saturday. Seven additional sites already have been purchased.

Each theatre will be built to allow for wide range projection and public broadcasting, from radio or otherwise, in addition to television. The broadcasting of radio programs of important events from the stage will be a definite part of the program to offset the competition of the radio as complained of by exhibitors everywhere, especially as it pertains to the "competitive" appearances on the air of Hollywood motion picture stars.

He said that every inch of the buildings will be given over to the comfort, entertainment or relaxation of the townsfolk. For instance, space ordinarily made available for stores or other commercial sidelines in the theatre building will be adapted to reading and rest and cosmetic rooms, playrooms and recreational halls.

The idea was conceived after a survey by Mr. Reade and Mr. Olmsted with Thomas W. Lamb, theatre architect, who also is associated in the venture. Mr. Lamb has designed, among other theatres, the Broadway Capitol and Loew's State, in New York; Pantages, Toronto; Fox Capitol, San Francisco; Empire theatre, London; Metro theatre, Johannesburg, South Africa; Keith Memorial, Boston; Mayfair, New York; Loew's 72nd and Loew's 175th Street theatres, New York; Loew's State, Kansas City.

The number of seats in the new theatres will be restricted to 600 to 1,000, to insure a "community intimacy," according to Mr. Reade.

Having in mind pending legislation in the states and at Washington (the Patman Bill) to force manufacturers and producers to divest themselves of holdings in the retail field, the American Community Theatres will turn over part of their ownership to local representatives who will operate on a profit-sharing basis. While theatre circuits do not necessarily come within the category of "manufacturers" or "producers," some of the legislation is expected to result eventually in heavy local taxation on each unit of chains whose headquarters are removed from the local point of operation. To meet this contingency, the local Reade representative will be the legal operator for American Community Theatres.

Survey Showed 60 Per Cent of Theatres in Lesser Cities Obsolete in Structure and Equipment, Says Walter Reade

Another reason advanced for the program "is the result of the tremendous gross increase of box office receipts in the motion picture business during 1936."

These community theatres will be devoted entirely to the projection of motion pictures. There will be no stage or dressing rooms in any of them for any traveling theatrical attractions. The sponsors, according to Mr. Reade, believe that the stage show is a "dead issue" for film theatres for all time.

Negotiations for most of the sites will be opened as rapidly as possible, with a concentration pointed to "main street" locations only. As each unit is completed, there will be no financing of the individual structure in the form of mortgages and no standing indebtedness; thus the theatres will not be burdened with heavy carrying charges.

Mr. Reade advanced as another reason for the venture the fact that his survey had established that all the profit from productions in this business comes from subsequent runs—second, third and fourth runs. The negative cost comes from the large de luxe runs.

"It is the intention of American Community Theatres Corporation to enter into the subsequent run field, to secure product franchises and book the product," he explained. "The source of supply of motion pictures will be the major companies."

Some $500,000 paid-in capital of the corporation's $5,000,000 capitalization under New York State laws is already in hand, and this sum will be used for the 25 theatres to be built in the first year, averaging $20,000 a building. Some, however, will cost as much as $75,000. The initial invasion will be in New York, New Jersey and Connecticut.

The attorneys representing the American Community Theatres Corporation are: Turchin and Brown, 2 Lafayette Street; Schlesinger and Schlesinger, 17 East 42nd Street, and Solomon Goodman, 152 West 42nd Street, all New York.

Mr. Reade, who is the president of the company, with offices in the Mayfair Theatre building, New York, has built and still owns and operates the following theatres:

Mayfair, City, Savoy, New York City; Mineola, Mineola, Long Island; Paramount, Mayfair, St. James, Lyric, Asbury Park, N. J.; Paramount, Strand, Long Branch, N. J.; Carlton, Strand, Red Bank, N. J.; Paramount, Oxford, Strand, Plainfield, N. J.; Majestic, Strand, Crescent, Ditmas, Perth Amboy, N. J.; Strand, Freehold, N. J.; State, Rivoli, Albany, New Brunswick, N. J.; Capitol, Lincoln, State, South Broad Street, Trent, Trenton, N. J.; Broadway, Kingston, Kingston, New York.

Some of these theatres are operated in conjunction with Radio-Keith-Orpheum. The Mayfair theatre, New York, is operated in conjunction with Loew's, Inc.

MPTOA AND PHILADELPHIA UNITS ACT ON TRADE PRACTICE ISSUE

United Owners at Philadelphia Agree to Use "All Resources" to Protect Members from Unfair Treatment

Exhibitors concerned with the hardy perennial issue of unfair trade practices turned their attention to New York this week.

Arrival of leaders of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America for "showdown" meetings with the distributors on the organization's 10-point trade practice program was followed on Tuesday by a formal announcement from the United Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, South New Jersey and Delaware, that "it will employ every active resource at its disposal to defend and protect any member of this organization found to have suffered any aggressive or unfair act or acts, by any other exhibitor, film company or distributor."

Meanwhile, it was established that many of the frequently protested "unfair" trade practices such as cut-rate theatre admissions, double features and giveaways are being eliminated, or curbed, in 50 cities where first-run theatres are applying the distributors' contract rider regulating trade practices in subsequent runs in their relations to the pictures mentioned in the contract.

It was revealed on Wednesday that the distribution executives at the home offices will probably notify the MPTOA officials just what stand they will take in connection with the trade practice program before the end of the week. It is reported that definite concessions will be made by the distributors on the three main phases of the program: (1) increased and unconditional cancellation programs; (2) elimination of score charges, and, (3) establishment of experimental conciliation boards for the settlement of local trade problems.

The MPTOA president, Edward Kuykendall, reiterated Monday that officers are of the opinion that the next move should be made by the distribution companies, to whom the program was presented last June.

"If the distributors fail to act on the proposals which have been made," he said, "or if they act unfavorably, I will call a special meeting of the MPTOA board to define further course of action.

"We are sincere in our belief that the program we are seeking involves no concessions which are unfair or unreasonable.

"If the program cannot be attained by the procedure we have followed, the MPTOA definitely will call for legislation which will provide the same or greater trade practice reforms. The directors' meeting would define our procedure under this policy."

The exhibitors' program calls primarily for elimination of the score charge, an increased and unconditional cancellation privilege and establishment of local conciliation boards for settlement of local trade problems.

Mr. Kuykendall intends to remain in Manhattan at least a week, when he expects the fate of the trade practice program will be known.

In a letter to MOTION PICTURE HERALD, George P. Aarons, secretary of the United MPTO, says "the enclosure is a copy of the cardinal principle of this organization as adopted and enunciated at a meeting of this organization through its board of managers." The copy follows:

"The United MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware establishes, adopts, sets forth and affirms as the cardinal principle of its right for existence and usefulness, that it will employ every active resource at its disposal to defend and protect any member of this organization in good standing, found to have suffered any aggressive or unfair act or acts, by any other exhibitor, film company or distributor in this territory, after the same shall have been so determined by the Grievance Committee of this organization.

"More specifically it will affirmatively and aggressively defend:

"Any attempt by any film company to exact film rentals from a member in good standing, greater than called for by the national policy of such company.

"Any move to increase unjustifiably the accepted clearance previously established for a member of this organization.

"Any attempt by a film company against a member of this organization, to use the threat of selling away from such member if he be a regularly established account in good standing, in order to compel such member to accept any film rental or run determined by this organization to be unfair."

Rider First Used Year Ago

The new contract rider now being used to regulate trade practices in subsequent runs was first utilized about a year ago by the Hoblitzelle circuit in Texas and has been upheld by the state courts there as legally enforceable. Increased application of the device this season is reported. The terms of the rider follow:

The first run theatre employing the rider agrees with the distributors to maintain an advanced minimum evening adult admission, in return for which the distributor agrees to sell the same picture only to such subsequent runs as will agree to charge no less than an agreed upon minimum, usually 25 cents in all cases where the first runs' minimum is more than 40 cents.

The rider also provides that the specified minimum evening adult admission for the subsequent runs shall not be modified by the showing of a second feature on the same program with the one covered by the rider, or by the use of giveaways or any other form of gratuity constituting a bargain admission. The distributor agreeing to the use of the rider safeguards its provisions by including the necessary restrictions in the contracts for the subsequent run engagements. Failure of the distributor to do so permits the first run either to cancel its contract or bring action against the distributor in the courts. Breach of the agreement by a subsequent run makes it liable either to an action for breach of contract or the loss of further film service.

3 Films Planned By Laemmle, Jr.

Carl Laemmle, Jr., plans to produce from three to four pictures the first year under his own company banner, Laemmle Productions, Inc., which is to be formed shortly, he revealed this week when he returned on the Queen Mary after a four months' vacation in nine foreign countries. His father, Carl Laemmle, former head of Universal, accompanied him.

The story for the first picture has been purchased, options have been obtained on three other literary pieces and James Whale has been signed to direct at least one picture. "Nine Officers," a play dealing with the Boxer rebellion, by George Frasier, is the initial acquisition. This also may be put on as a play in New York, but Mr. Laemmle said he was not certain of this move at the present time. Options have been taken on Alfred Neuman's next novel, a new play to be written by Thomas Mann, winner of the Nobel award, and "Soul Without a Face," an anti-war story by Friges Karinthy.

Mr. Laemmle, Sr., will not be associated with the new company, it was revealed. He has retired and will leave for his coast home shortly.

Distribution has not yet been set, according to the younger Mr. Laemmle, who said he was negotiating with several companies and hoped to close a deal before he returns to Hollywood in six or eight weeks.

No stars were signed while Mr. Laemmle was in Europe, but he has options on the services of several, he said. Each production will cost about $500,000 and will be "A" type product. Studio space will be rented, but Mr. Laemmle did not know as yet where he would make his headquarters.

20,000 Fox Shares Sold by Zanuck

Heavy individual transactions in the common stock of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation especially by Darryl F. Zanuck, production head, were among the highlights of the Securities and Exchange Commission fortnightly report of security transactions and holdings made public in Washington this week.

Reports received by the commission between September 1-10 disclosed that Mr. Zanuck sold 20,000 shares of common, which reduced his holdings to 162,130 shares.

It was also revealed that Edward Alperson, president of Grand National, had disposed of 16,850 shares of that company's stock, leaving him still holding 26,546. Carl M. Leserman also sold 2,500 shares of Grand National stock, leaving him with a total of 2,900 shares.

14 PRODUCERS BUY 74 BOOKS AND PLAYS FOR 1936-37 PRODUCTION

Paramount Leads with 23 Purchases, Warner Next with 9; "Everyman," Medieval Play, To Be Directed by Reinhardt

Story buying activity in Hollywood continues at a steady pace. Fourteen producers purchased 74 stories in September for 1936-37 production, compared with 73 in August.

Production in Hollywood last week progressed at top speed with 14 pictures going into work before the cameras and the same number of completed films passing into the editing stage. With the acquisition of additional material by the production units it is expected that work will continue at top speed in Hollywood until studios are well ahead of their 1936-37 commitments.

Paramount, which led the producers last month when it bought three novels and nine originals, again was in the vanguard this month with a total of 23 purchases. Warner was next with nine, followed by RKO Radio with eight and Twentieth Century-Fox with six. The other studios and their purchases were Universal, six; Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, five; Columbia, five; Grand National, four; Monogram, three; Walter Wanger, one; General Pictures, one; Charles Chaplin, one; Gaumont British, one, and Halperin, one.

Again this month the list of purchases showed a marked absence of Broadway stage vehicles. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is understood to be financially interested in several current Broadway productions, but no announcement has been made thus far as to plans to transfer these productions to the screen.

Prominent among the group bought by Paramount are works of Owen Wister. The group includes nine novels, to be assembled into a story on the order of Mr. Wister's "The Virginian," which has been filmed before. Randolph Scott, teamed with a leading feminine star, quite possibly Irene Dunne, will be featured.

Studio staff writers also contributed their share toward the total number of stories, having 40 of their works accepted by the production heads. Several of these original stories are already before the cameras. Books and novels contributed 32 more purchases toward the grand total of 74, and of this number seven were stories published in such widely read publications as Collier's Magazine, Red Book, Cosmopolitan and The Saturday Evening Post.

"Everyman," the medieval morality play, has been presented in practically every country of Europe and last summer was staged in the Hollywood Bowl. Max Reinhardt produced it at the Salzburg Music Festival in Austria last summer and with the acquisition of the work by Warner Brothers comes the announcement that Reinhardt will also handle the screen version, on the comprehensive plane of "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

The two classics, "Pride and Prejudice" and "Dombey and Son," the first from the pen of Jane Austen and the second by Charles Dickens, also appear on the list, with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer acquiring the first-named and Warner the other. Norma Shearer and Clark Gable are tentatively set for the leading roles in "Pride and Prejudice." No production plans have yet been announced for the Dickens work.

The complete title list of the 76 vehicles acquired by the studios in August, with all available screen credits, is as follows:

Adventure's End, story by Ben Ames Williams, published in Saturday Evening Post, bought by Universal to star John Wayne.

A Man and a Woman, acquired by B. P. Schulberg to produce for Paramount and to star Gladys George and Edward Arnold.

American Plan, play by Manuel Seff, bought by Paramount.

Arizona Mahoney, written by Joe Cook as an original, acquired by Paramount to star Robert Cummings under direction of James Hogan. June Martel, Larry Crabbe and Dave Chasen also in cast.

Breezy Kid Steps Out, The, original by Damon Runyon published in Collier's Magazine, acquired by Halperin Brothers for distribution by Television Pictures, Inc.

Case of the Dangerous Dowager, original by Erle Stanley Gardner, writer of Perry Mason mystery stories, bought by Warners. Ricardo Cortez will have the lead. This is fifth Gardner story to be made by Warners.

Caviar for His Excellencv, unpublished novel by Charles G. Booth, bought by Paramount. Cary Grant and Akim Tamiroff tentatively slated for leading roles.

Jane Austen and Charles Dickens Classics Acquired; Paramount To Make Nine Owen Wister Novels Into One Film

Convention in Paris, story about American mayors convening abroad, bought by Edward Small to produce for Radio.

Dombey and Son, one of Charles Dickens' greatest stories, bought by Warner.

Easy Living, original story by Vera Caspary, dealing with a young girl who sought and found "easy living" in a strange manner. Bought by Paramount to star Jean Arthur.

Everyman, famous medieval morality play, bought by Warners, to be made into a picture by Max Reinhardt.

Story on Medical Practices

Exposure, original story by Dr. Frank J. Clancy and William J. Murphy, dealing with medicine, acquired by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Fly By Night, magazine story by Eric Hatch, bought by Paramount to star Bing Crosby. No other cast assignments as yet.

Four Men and a Prayer, Cosmopolitan Magazine novel by David Garth, bought by Twentieth Century-Fox. Adaptation for screen will be by Sonya Levien.

Free Woman, Red Book magazine story by Katherine Brush, bought by Paramount. Jean Arthur will probably be starred.

French Quarter, The, forthcoming novel by Herbert Asbury, author of "Barbary Coast" and "Gangs of New York," bought by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Gold Bullets, epic story of Death Valley, by Charles G. Booth, bought by Paramount. Cary Grant, John Howard and Randolph Scott tentatively set for the leading roles.

Grand Passion, original by Norman Krasna and Zeppo Marx, bought by Mervyn LeRoy as his first picture as an independent producer. Fernand Graevey, French star now under contract to LeRoy, will be starred. Warners will release the picture.

Great Laughter, story by Fanny Hurst, acquired by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Gray Parrott, The, sea story by Vivian Gaye, bought by Paramount to star Akim Tamiroff and John Howard.

Western Vehicle

Heading for the Rio Grande, original by Robert Emmett, acquired by Ed Finney as a western vehicle for Tex Ritter in the series he is making for Grand National release.

Heart Flush, original by William R. Lipman and Houston Branch, acquired by Columbia.

Hell Is Above, original by Robertson White and Ben Grauman, dealing with airships and zeppelins, bought by Warners to star Boris Karloff.

Roxy Reorganization Plans Filed in Federal Court

More than half a dozen plans of reorganization for the Roxy theatre, New York, were expected to be filed in Federal Court on October 9th, the date set by Judge Francis G. Gaffey for that purpose. Several film companies are reported to be interested in the rehabilitation of the house. It is expected that it will be several months before the court approves any plan for the reorganization. Howard S. Cullman, trustee, is expected to have a plan incorporated in the bondholders' report.

Theatre Dealers Plan To Discuss Patman Act

Members of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association will hold a special three day meeting, starting October 14th, at the Congress Hotel, Chicago, to discuss the Patman act which prohibits discriminating discounts and provides that a uniform plan of discount must prevail for all dealers and their accounts. The act has been in effect since June 29th. George Graham of Denver, president, will preside.

Mack Weinberger Heads General Pictures Sales

Mack D. Weinberger, well known in the independent sales field, has been appointed general sales manager of General Pictures. The company, which originally announced a program of 24 features has increased its schedule to 34, including one group of eight outdoor musicals in color. Fenn Kimball is president and Robert E. Welsh is vice-president in charge of production.

Court Fines Theatre Operators for "Ecstasy"

Judge Thomas V. Holland in the north side municipal court at Kansas City has fined Breckenridge Fagin and Robert F. Lakenan, Jr., $250 for showing "Ecstasy" at the Royal theatre September 22 without a license.

Roy W. Rucker, attorney for the defendants, appealed the fine to the circuit court.

Referee Impounds Business Records Of All-Continent

As the bankruptcy hearing on the business affairs of William Fox continued this week in Atlantic City, Federal Judge John Boyd Avis, in Camden, N. J., ruled that Mrs. Eva Fox, wife of the former motion picture magnate must place all records of the All-Continent Corporation in a neutral place where they will be available to Referee Robert E. Steedle before whom the bankruptcy hearings are being conducted. Mr. Fox testified last week that although he was worth "about $100,000,000" in 1930 all that he owns now are a "few odds and ends."

In the ruling on the All-Continent Corporation, a trust fund set up by Mr. Fox for his wife and daughters which his creditors contend is really an asset, Judge Avis qualified the decision with the provision that the books must not be opened by Referee Steedle except in the presence of a representative of Mrs. Fox.

Judge Avis denied the application of All-Continent Corporation for a restraining order against Hiram Steelman, trustee in bankruptcy in Fox case, who, upon order of the United States district court in New York paid a judgment of $297,412 against Mr. Fox to John S. Wynn, operating as the Capital Company. Judge Avis ruled that Mr. Steelman was not responsible, as he followed the mandate of the court.

Mrs. Fox had sought a restraining order against Referee Steedle stating that he had no right to examine the records of All-Continent during the Fox litigation.

Asked as to details of his financial affairs on the stand last week, Mr. Fox said he "never looked at the books" and referred his questioners to Herbert Leitsteen, his bookkeeper. "My recollection," he testified, "is that when I created All-Continent I had $21,000,000 or $22,000,000 exclusive of my rights in patents known as the Tri-Ergon Company, which others estimated as worth up to $100,000,000. Out of that $21,000,000 or $22,000,000 I turned over to All-Continent approximately $7,000,000." He later said that today he possesses nothing save a "few odds and ends."

Albert M. Greenfield, Philadelphia banker and realtor, testified this week that "Fox was, and All-Continent still is," the largest stockholder in the Bankers' Security Corporation and that Mr. Fox still is one of its directors, although he has not attended a meeting in several years.

Jesters Elect Officers

The directors of the Jesters Club of Charlotte, N. C., met this week and the following officers were elected: J. E. Hobbs, president; R. C. Price, first vice-president replacing L. C. Sipe, resigned; John H. Vickers, second vice-president to replace M. E. Wiman, resigned. George Roscoe was elected to fill the vacancy on the board of directors caused by the resignation of Philip Longdon.

National Decency Legion Reviews 11 More Films

Of 11 new and reissued pictures reviewed and classified by the National Legion of Decency during the current week, seven were listed as unobjectionable for general patronage and four were classed as unobjectionable for adults. The pictures reviewed and their classification follow.

Class A-1, "Unobjectionable for General Patronage": "Alibi For Murder," "Bulldog Edition," "The Captain's Kid," "Daniel Boone," "The Gay Desperado," "The Longest Night," "Undercover Man." Class A-2, "Unobjectionable for Adults": "Accusing Finger," "Ein Walzer Fuer Dich" (German), "Informer" (Reissue), "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town" (Reissue).

Universal Raising Output to 52 Films for 1937-38 Season

An increase of 10 pictures, from 42 to 52, in Universal Pictures' production schedule for 1937-38 has been announced by R. H. Cochrane, president, following his return from a visit to the company's studio. The list will include 46 features and six westerns.

Mr. Cochrane was enthusiastic over the progress made at the studio under the direction of Charles R. Rogers, vice-president in charge of production, and William Koenig, general manager.

"The studio completed 24 pictures in the past six months of operation," Mr. Cochrane said. "In addition 22 scripts are complete and ready for shooting. We will meet every release date this season, something that Universal has been unable to do for the last four or five years, principally because the company was not properly financed. Last year, for example, we announced 36 features but delivered only 22. This year we will deliver every one of the 36 features and six westerns which have been announced, and we will deliver them on schedule."

The Universal president said that he was impressed by the number of new personalities at the studio being groomed for feature work and he sees the solution of the company's casting problems and the loss of time and money resulting from them.

"The studio is also ahead on stories for the first time in several years," Mr. Cochrane said. "All this means economy of operation, insurance against waste, and deliveries according to schedule. I am grateful for the fine spirit of cooperation shown the company by other studios and also by the theatres. Our studio reorganization has been completed and its executive personnel is on a permanent basis except for the fact that an assistant to Mr. Rogers and Mr. Koenig will be named in the near future in order to relieve them of some of the excess work both are doing."

Preview Ad Ban Discussed

Banning of advertising for previews was discussed at the last meeting of the Producers' Association in Hollywood. It is claimed that the present system prevents natural audience reactions.

Musicians Plan Picket Campaign In Philadelphia

While musician members of Local 802 picketed New York motion picture houses with banners urging the public to demand "living entertainment" in addition to film programs, Philadelphia's Local 77 prepared to pattern after this precedent a campaign of similar character and objective.

The Philadelphia crusade will be directed primarily against the Warner circuit in an attempt to force adjustment of labor difficulties between the union and that organization. This impasse dates from early September when a contract by which men were paid $9 for one day's work each week (Saturday) in the 12 neighborhood key houses expired. Anthony A. Tomei, union president, is seeking to obtain two days' work for its 68 members in these houses, at $15 for the two days. As a result of the strained relationship, Warners' first run Earle and Fox theatres have gone on a straight picture basis.

While limited funds preclude a campaign as extensive as the one being waged in New York, the Philadelphia fight will get under way at a mass meeting at which time Mayor S. Davis Wilson will be called upon to address the assemblage. Plans have been made to picket those houses which have had live entertainment in conjunction with the film showings at any time during the last three years. Joseph Sharfsin, city solicitor, has promised the union that there will be no police interference in their picketing activities.

The union officials contend that Warner Brothers, in an attempt to keep picture rentals on a higher level, are taking over the operation of every available theatre and putting all on a straight picture policy, causing a loss of employment opportunities to their members and the actors. Mr. Tomei declared that he would permit members of the musician's union to play on a percentage basis for any exhibitor who will add live entertainment to his bill.

Local officials for the Warner Brothers circuit maintain that it is the unreasonable demands of the union that are creating a loss in employment opportunities for their members.

In New York, Edward Canavan, president of Local 802, announced that he will not be a candidate for reelection, and David Klein, fusion nominee for delegate to the A. F. M. convention and the executive board of the New York local, announced that he would leave on October 8th for Los Angeles and continue campaigning for Selig S. Liese and the fusion group for the 802 elections in December.

Planes Welcome Powells

Several bannered airplanes, bearing the inscription "Welcome Dick and Joan" and chartered by the Warner home office publicity department, met the incoming Santa Paula Wednesday morning to welcome the honeymooning Dick Powells to Manhattan. Mrs. Powell is better known as Joan Blondell.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

The tragedy that stalked Pawnee Bill the other day in his native Oklahoma caused old-timers to remember that Major Gordon W. (Pawnee Bill) Lillie played no small part in the very beginning of the feature motion picture.

In the fall of 1909, Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, of Vitagraph fame, produced "The Life of Moses," in five reels. But it was released a reel at a time, one reel a week for five weeks, beginning in January, 1910. No theatre would present a full five-reel show. They did not consider even Moses a big enough drawing card.

P. P. Craft, however, with Colonel William (Buffalo Bill) Cody, thought he saw the opportunity, in the same 1910, for motion picture entertainment on a grander scale. He arranged to put out a screen road show. The plan was fine, but pictures of quality and length to support a road show charging 50 cents admissions in legitimate theatres were not to be had.

Mr. Craft's next step was to plan production. If he could not buy the long pictures he wanted he would proceed to make them. The decision brought the inspiration that "The Life of Buffalo Bill," in many reels, would draw, and so he pursued the Buffalo Bill Wild West Show on the road, overtaking it on the home lot at Williamsport, Pa. Colonel Cody was willing to make the film, but Major (Pawnee Bill) Lillie, Cody's manager, was reluctant, until Craft shoved a thousand dollars in paper bills across the ticket wagon counting table, and Pawnee Bill agreed. That was "big" money then.

The other night Pawnee Bill, he's now 75, and his wife, re-enacted their marriage ceremony in a golden wedding celebration at Taos, New Mexico. Friends at the celebration presented the old couple with a gold-tinted automobile. Mrs. Lillie took the wheel and started down the road for home. There was a crash. Mrs. Lillie died, old Pawnee Bill was cracked up.

The world's well of information can never be fully plumbed, as witness the knowledge advanced by Motion Picture Daily from an Associated Press interview with Director Ernst Lubitsch, anent the highly pleasing subject of Marlene Dietrich:

> "It's all very well to speak of her legs. They are very beautiful, very, very beautiful, and they haven't been a detriment to her. Maybe they've even helped her a little bit, but—
> "She has something else—something we are going to show in her next picture."

Walter McFadden, browsing about his native haunts in Long Island, was flabbergasted to see advertised on the marquee of Loew's Triboro theatre in Astoria, a double bill of the following complexion:

The enterprising Louie Charninsky had in mind a bit of exploitation for "Bengal Tiger" at his Capitol theatre in Dallas. Accordingly he visited the Texas Centennial and requested that the Centennial cooperate in conjunction with its "Hollywood Animal Show," by advertising Charninsky's "Bengal Tiger" film to the Centennial audiences. They thought they stopped Louie when they told him they would publicize the picture if he would appear in a cage with a wild tiger. Mr. Charninsky accepted the proposition, the photograph above indicating the great pleasure he received from the experience—note his wide smile.

Trem Carr's position in Hollywood today as one of the film capital's successful independent producers, is far removed from the days when, as a producer of "quickies," some 15 years ago, he inveigled the fire department in those parts to let a whole studio burn the while he shot a fire spectacle for a picture he had in work. Grover Jones, the scenarist, writes about the incident in the Saturday Evening Post.

Mr. Jones, along about 1923, was writing an occasional "quickie" scenario for Mr. Carr's admittedly "shoestring" productions. One was a fire story in which Cullen Landis was being featured. Mr. Jones finished the script and was commended for his efforts, but, as Trem said, "We haven't the money properly to produce a fire spectacle, and I hate like hell to make a picture like this with nothing but flares and torches."

However, the second night, while Mr. Carr was sweating over the possible outcome of his venture, the old Universal studio caught fire and burned throughout the night. Instantly the little company gathered together its studio crew and its actors. Mr. Carr, with keen presence of mind, rushed a fire chief's helmet out of the property room and on to the head of Cullen Landis, and set about shooting scenes. The real firemen believed only what they thought they saw in the dark and took orders from the wildly gesticulating "Chief" Landis. At early dawn they discovered their mistake. It took a great deal of forceful oratory, and then some, to save the scalp of Landis.

A Chicago music firm is the recipient of an order for music from Al Capone in Alcatraz Penitentiary, in San Francisco Bay. The now docile Alfonse particularly requested the complete collection of the songs of our own Shirley Temple.

The motion picture business could even go further and have Will Hays send Mr. Capone a nice library of its latest motion pictures, selecting, for instance, such touching film documents as "Don't Turn 'Em Loose," "Blackmailer," "And Sudden Death," "Murder in Chinatown," "Crime and Punishment," "Counterfeit," "You May Be Next," "Racketeer in Exile," "Shakedown," "Bullets or Ballots," "Tough Guy," "The All-American Chump," "Preview Murder Mystery," "Suicide Squad," "Federal Agent," "Grand Jury," "The Witness Chair," "We Who Are About To Die," "Show Them No Mercy," "Invitation To a Murder."

Or maybe Al would rather see Warners' "Jailbreak"; or, better still, Universal's "Parole."

The Federal Writers' Project in New York of the Works Progress Administration is doing nicely, thank you. A "clip sheet" of news of the project's progress announces two worthwhile accomplishments this week: (1) The reading and outlining of 200 books for a motion picture bibliography; and, (2) The discovery of the remains of Black Diamond, the buffalo which served as the model for the design on the buffalo nickel. All that is left is his head, which the WPA found nailed to the wall of a chicken market at 414 West 14th Street, N. Y.

A feline example of the power of suggestion is Queenie, the Strand theatre cat in Pittsfield, Mass., who, after walking around the lobby for several days eyeing the posters for the Dionne quintuplets in "The Country Doctor," strolled nonchalantly into the Strand checkroom and had quintuplets herself—just like that, so help Francis Faille, the Strand manager.

Manager Faille has, of course, named the kittens Marie, Yvonne, Cecile, Emelie and Annette. There's a slight discrepancy there, since a couple of kittens are boys. "But," chirped Faille, "that's a minor point."

THE CUTTING ROOM

Advance outlines of productions nearing completion as seen by the Hollywood staff of the Motion Picture Herald

Reunion

(20th Century-Fox)

Comedy Drama

Headed by Jean Hersholt, this production, which features the Dionne Quintuplets, presents four additional members of "The Country Doctor" cast, Slim Summerville, Dorothy Peterson and John Qualen, in the roles they created, and Helen Jerome Eddy. The locale is practically the same, but there the similarity ceases. Everything else, especially the story idea, is different. Essentially the five children, who not only act but now talk as well, are the outstanding exploitation potentialities. Yet the substantiating story, which literally and actually makes good the title, is unique in character. Serving as a background for human interest drama, comedy and romance, that story has to do with the reunion of all the 3,000 persons that Dr. Luke has brought into the world. Rich men, poor men, beggar men, thieves, and all the rest of the doggerel rhyme, are included.

The production is based on a story by Bruce Gould. Sam Hellman, Gladys Lehman and Sonya Levien did the screen play. Norman Taurog, who has directed many of the screen's prominent child actors in their most popular pictures, is the director. Rochelle Hudson and Robert Kent, the young lovers of "The Country Beyond," are similarly cast. Helen Vinson, in her first domestic picture in some time, is the menace to their romance. Strength of cast is seen in assignments, in less important roles, of Alan Dinehart, J. Edward Bromberg, Tom Moore, Sara Haden, Montague Love, Esther Ralston and Hattie McDaniels. In minor parts Julius Tannen, George Chandler and Edward McWade will be seen.

While it is natural to expect the patron interest will most quickly settle on the babies, this, coupled with the fact that the story tells a strong, even if semi-episodic, series of dramas, romances and comedies, plus the angle that so many of "The Country Doctor" cast again are presented, should stimulate showmen to interesting exploitation.

The Depths Below

Drama

Until this story comes to its climax, there is little in it that gives literal meaning to the title. Prior to the closing episode, it is essentially human interest romance drama. The first parts of it tell how a heartless woman married a man and, by cheating on him with his pal, made bitter enemies out of two onetime deep sea diving buddies. The drama of this situation makes possible a partial regenerating confession by the woman, which makes her husband see everything in its true light and effect the rescue of his friend, who has been trapped in a sunken submarine.

The material chosen for the three leading players, Richard Dix, Chester Morris and Dolores Del Rio, seems particularly adapted to their screen talents and personalities. Dix and Morris are rough, rugged, he-men sailors, ready for any dangerous adventure. The only way in which they differ is that Dix wants marriage and a home ashore, while Morris prefers to go roving over the world. Miss Del Rio is a cunning, malicious, voluptuous gold digger, ambitious only for security and having no regard whatsoever for marriage vows.

ANTICIPATIONS—BUT NOT REVIEWS

Discussions of pictures in this department are based entirely on the aims and anticipations of the producers on the basis of negative in the editing process. In no sense are these attentions to be considered reviews or in any terms evaluation of the finished product as it may subsequently emerge from the Cutting Room to the market.

This department is conducted solely for the information of exhibitors, many of whom have indicated to Motion Picture Herald their necessity for the earliest available information on the product which they are to play.

Quotation of this material, covered by the copyright of Motion Picture Herald, by reviewing services, magazine and news digests and the like, without specific written permission is expressly forbidden.

—THE EDITOR

Situations precipitated by her promise to be of higher dramatic quality than usually found in action films. Bringing this quality out of the players was the intention of producer Edward Chodorov when he selected Liam O'Flaherty (author of "The Informer") for them. It is marked in the adaptation by Dalton Trumbo and Jerry Chodorov.

While the three principals carry almost all the story, players to be seen in supporting parts include Pierre Watkin, Ward Bond, Marc Lawrence and Ron Rowan. Direction is by Erle Kenton, maker of "Counterfeit" and "The Devil's Squadron."

The Jungle Princess

(Paramount)

Dramatic Romance

Since Edwina Booth and "Trader Horn" there has been no exotically fantastic jungle woman. True, the Tarzans have held sway, but in Dorothy Lamour, newly from radio and stage, Paramount believes it has the unique type of personality so combining natural charm, savage wildness and allure as to make the jungle woman again appealing to theatre goers and exhibitors.

The story, an original by Max Marcin and prepared for the screen by Cyril Hume, Gerald Geraghty and Gouverneur Morris, is romance and drama in the Malay Jungles. The tiger woman is regarded as an evil spirit by the natives. A party of white hunters find her. One falls in love with her, arousing the fury of his civilized sweetheart. The tiger girl and her companion pursue an idyllic romance in the animal infested jungle. To free the white man from her supposed fatal charm, his friends, allied with natives, would kill the girl. But love triumphs. The tiger woman's animal friends rout the attackers and the civilized girl surrenders her lover to the jungle creature.

Ray Milland is the hunter who loses himself in the jungle to find love. With Molly Lamont, Lynne Overman, Akim Tamiroff and Hugh Buckler, he and Miss Lamour are the important principals. Mala, of "Eskimo" memory, is leader of the natives.

The film is being made with musical background important to the motivating drama and the romance, directed by Boris Morros.

Black Legion

(Warner)

Topical Drama

For background this production adapts the widely publicized activities of the Black Legion in Michigan. Extremely topical in nature, the feature first seeks to be dramatic entertainment but also endeavors to become a document outlining the true meaning of Americanism and excoriating false patriots who play on national and racial prejudices.

From a story standpoint, the motivation, with due recognition of theatrical requirements, treats of events and incidents that in current weeks have made sensational headline news.

A 100 per cent American, ambitious for factory advancement but disappointed, is a ready victim of the blandishments of furtive agitators, first committing an act of depredation against his favored opponent, this followed with portrayals of further Black Legion mischief. Finally, infuriated beyond control, he kills his best friend. Though the Black Legion attempts to manipulate the courts, the murderer, becoming aware that he has been used as a tool, confesses everything and identifies the members to bring about their arrest.

The story, an original by Robert Lord, was adapted by Abem Finkel and William Haines. It is being directed by Archie Mayo.

As the story deals with many individuals, the cast necessarily is large. Among the more prominent players are Humphrey Bogart, Dick Foran, Ann Sheridan, Erin O'Brien-Moore, Dickie Jones, Joseph Sawyer, Harry Brandon, Eddie Acuff, Egon Brecher, Samuel Hinds and Henry O'Neill.

Night Waitress

(Radio)

Drama

Deep melodrama, with romance, is the idea behind this production. A girl, suspected of criminal implications but released on probation, is working as a night waitress in a rough San Francisco waterfront cafe. She becomes the central figure between two mysterious forces. One is a roustabout sea captain, awaiting an unknown cargo; the other is a band of crooks determined to get the cargo before the captain. As much that is highly dramatic, including several killings, ensues to cause trouble for the girl and bring her under more rigid police watchfulness, dramatic suspense builds. The girl does not know which way to turn.

IN THE STUDIO CUTTING ROOM

The story used is one suggested by Golda Draper. The screen play is by Marcus Goodrich, and Samuel J. Warshawsky contributed added dialogue. Direction is by Lew Landers, who was in charge of the current "Without Orders."

Margot Grahame, remembered for "The Informer" and later seen in "Three Musketeers" and "The Arizonian," is starred. Gordon Jones, featured in several recent Radio films, plays the part of the ship captain, sharing most of the drama and all the romance with Miss Grahame. Vinton Haworth, who made a promising screen debut in "Without Orders," is the heavy. Supporting players include the newcomer Donald Barry, Marc Lawrence, Billy Gilbert, Arthur Loft and Otto Yianaoka.

The Cowboy Star

(Columbia)

Comedy Drama

The story idea and title of this production, rather than personalities, seem to be the outstanding exploitation assets. As conceived into screen play form by Frances Guihan, the premise seeks to introduce something fresh in many ways into standby western yarns. Novelty is evident at the outset. A cowboy picture star, tired of all the make believe film adventures, romances and heroics, decides to go out incognito and live a regular western life. He is partly recognized by a hero worshiping boy and his elder sister. He pledges his new found companions to keep his secret. The aliased star becomes involved in a real life drama and romance that takes the most approved western formula for its basis. A real life hero, his exploits are widely heralded, he returns to the films a great popular figure with a new and more lucrative contract. And the girl is with him.

Built upon a unique idea, substantiating phases of the story carrying the full quota of thrill action, romance and comedy, the picture places in the hands of exhibitors specializing in western entertainment some unusual angles with which to intrigue their patrons.

Charles Starrett portrays the screen star who goes native. Si Jenks is his bosom pal in screen as well as real life adventures. The girl is Iris Shunn, and Wally Albright is the avid juvenile western picture fan whose recognition of Starrett sets him off on his sideline job of being an actual hero.

The production is being directed by David Selman, recently credited with making "Killer at Large."

Once a Doctor

(Warner)

Dramatic Romance

With romance and drama blended in straightforward fashion, this production has the earmarks of a different kind of doctor picture. It concerns two young fellows, apprentice surgeons, both seeking the rewards of their profession yet unable to withstand the temptations of love and romance. One is a scapegrace, continually getting into trouble only to be saved by his foster brother. Dramatically, while once again fronting for his companions, the good doctor gets into serious trouble as a result of which he is debarred from his profession. Attempting an heroic but unethical brain operation while working in a tenement district clinic, the hero's patient dies and he is jailed. Paroled through the influence of his patron, he goes to Cuba. Enroute there, later, his patron suffers a skull fracture. With amazing skill the under-the-cloud doctor saves his life, is restored to his profession and claims the hand of the girl who stood by him.

The story, an original by Frank Daugherty and Paul Perez, was adapted to the screen by Robert White and Ben Grauman Kohn. Direction is in the hands of William Clemens.

It will be brought to the screen with Donald Woods as the hero and Gordon Oliver the weakling doctor. Woods' patron, who is also Oliver's father, is Henry Kolker. The girl is Jean Muir. As this group, aided principally by Louis Stanley, carry the brunt of the story, the supporting cast includes Joseph King, Gordon Hart, Cy Kendal, Ed Stanley, David Carlyle and Thomas Pogue.

Rose Bowl

(Paramount)

Comedy-Romance

As the seasonal football fervor mounts, Paramount is coming up with something totally different in the line of topical films. Of course, it has a title which in connection with football probably is more associated with the fall sport than that of any other stadium. Naturally there's a football game in it, but there, for all immediate attachments to football, the association ends.

Basically the story is a five sided comedy romance. In it an ordinary football player wins the girl of his dreams away from a big headed national star. This worthy is solaced by the affection of a movie struck miss who thinks the only thing he needs to put him on his feet is a haircut.

Just how completely the producers have got away from the featuring football players in the cast idea is noted in the name assignments. Tom Brown and Benny Baker are the mainstays of the little Coast team that makes the January 1 Rose Bowl date. Larry (Buster) Crabbe is the triple threat menace of the opposition. Eleanore Whitney and Priscilla Lawson are, respectively, the home towner and the movie struck girl.

The principal supporting cast is limited, listing only William Frawley, Nydia Westman, Adrian Morris and James Conlin.

The purpose of the story by Francis Wallace and screen play by Marguerite Roberts, certainly not sports writers, as well as the guiding idea behind the efforts of producer A. M. Botsford and director Charles Barton, is to present topical backgrounded entertainment that gets out of the rut.

Newsreel Suits Settled

Stipulations were filed in the New York supreme court Tuesday in connection with the settlement and discontinuation of two suits alleging wrongful use of the plaintiff's photographs in newsreels. One was an action of Sidney Franklin, bull fighter, against Fox Film and Fox Movietone News, and the other suit was one brought by Siegfried Steinwell, ski jumper, against Movietone News, Inc. Notice discontinuing the actions was filed by Attorney Percy Heiliger on behalf of Movietone News.

Deal with Gaumont Is Affirmed Here; Denied in London

With Sidney R. Kent, president of 20th Century-Fox, arriving in London this week to carry on the negotiations in the Gaumont-British, 20th Century-Fox, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer agreement, Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the Fox board, emphatically said in Hollywood that the negotiations have not been terminated. Reports from London continued to state that the three way agreement will not be consummated and that it will fail, over the issue of British control.

Mr. Schenck hit at the Ostrer brothers for their reported consideration of a competitive bid from a source believed to be John Maxwell of British International Pictures, with the statement that the same opposition company had offered £1,750,000 for the interest of 20th Century-Fox in GB. "We refused," Mr. Schenck said, "because we had committed ourselves to go through with the original deal."

The Fox chairman continued that Isidore Ostrer had told him that Mark Ostrer felt that the competitive concern's bid should be considered inasmuch as it was higher than the American offer. However, Mr. Schenck said, since 20th Century-Fox had initialed the final papers, it is ready to carry out the terms of the agreement.

A cable from Bruce Allan, Motion Picture Herald correspondent in London, reported the story there was that Mr. Kent is prepared to sell the Fox GB shares if necessary before their value falls after the balance sheet, which must be published before December 31st, is issued. The report continues that fear of domination by the Maxwell interests is an admitted factor against the outright sale to him but it is possible that Mr. Maxwell would buy out the Ostrer brothers and agree to the present or a closer tie with Fox and Metro subject to control remaining with him.

Under this arrangement Fox would hold the present shares, either splitting with Metro or carrying out that part of the agreement on another basis. "It is believed," the cable continues, "that the Government has requested Mr. Maxwell to buy to keep Americans out and has promised aid. The government wants the American sale to fail in any case."

Bernard Granville Passes

Bernard Granville, comedian and best known for his work on the New York stage, was found dead of natural causes in his apartment in Hollywood late Monday. He was 50 years old. He started his career with "Al G. Field's Minstrels" and appeared in New York in "The Little Blue Devil," "The Midnight Whirl" and Earl Carroll's "Vanities."

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

48 Films in Work

Production was accelerated last week when thirteen pictures were sent into production and eleven taken to the cutting room, netting a neat forty-eight pictures in work as of the end of September and the onset of October's bright blue weather.

Warners started three features. In "Ready, Willing and Able" Ross Alexander, Ruby Keeler, Louise Fazenda, Carroll Hughes, Winifred Shaw, Lee Jenkins and Allen Jenkins will be seen. Ray Enright is directing. The cast for "Another Dawn" is headed by Kay Francis and Errol Flynn with Ian Hunter, Frieda Inescort and Herbert Mundin featured. William Dieterle is the director. The third picture, "Penrod and Sam," has Billy Mauche and Harry Watson in the title roles with Spring Byington and Frank Craven heading the support. William McGann directs.

Three productions also got under way at Twentieth Century-Fox. "Banjo On My Knee," which John Cromwell is directing, will present Barbara Stanwyck, Joel McCrea, Buddy Ebsen, Walter Brennan, Katherine DeMille, Helen Westley, Tony Martin, Marguerite Hamilton, Minna Gombell, Walter Catlett and Spencer Charters. Shirley Temple is the star of "Stowaway." Her support lists Robert Young, Alice Faye, Arthur Treacher, Helen Westley, J. Edward Bromberg, Allen Lane, Astrid Allwyn, Robert Greig, Julius Tannen, Eugene Pallette and Willie Fung. William A. Seiter is directing. "Crack-up" features Brian Donleavy, Thomas Beck, Helen Wood and Peter Lorre. Malcolm St. Claire directs.

Paramount started two pictures. Under James Hogan's direction, "Arizona Mahoney" lists Joe Cook, John Miljan, Marjorie Gateson, Richard Carle, Frank Mayo, Jack Perrine, Charles Williams, Frank McGlynn, Jr., and James Mason among its players. "A Man and a Woman," a B. P. Schulberg production being directed by Richard Wallace, features Francine Larrimore with Edward Arnold and George Bancroft supported by Jonathan Hale, Stanley Andrews, Harry Hayden, Robert Strange and Fern Emmett.

Columbia, likewise, started camera work on two films. Jean Arthur and George Brent head the cast in "Safari in Paradise," which also includes Ruth Donnely, Lionel Stander, Raymond Walburn and Thomas Mitchell. Alfred E. Green is directing. Featured players in "Dodge City Trail" are Charles Starrett, Marion Weldon and Donald Grayson. C. C. Coleman is directing.

At Radio "Street Girl" (tentative title) went on the stages. Lily Pons and Gene Raymond are teamed in the leads. The cast lists Jack Oakie, Herman Bing, Mischa Auer, Frank Jenks, Lucile Ball, Patricia Wilder and Harry Jans. Leigh Jason is directing.

Walter Wanger resumed production with "You Only Live Once." Sylvia Sidney and Henry Fonda are starred, supported by William Gargan, Jean Dixon, Barton MacLane and Ward Bond. Fritz Lang is the director.

SINGLE STAR NOT ENOUGH

Coupled only as signifying a trend, contemporary announcements by Twentieth Century-Fox and Grand National emphasize the passing of the single star system. The first named company has decided that Janet Gaynor will not be starred individually henceforth. Douglas MacLean, producer of the James Cagney features, will place opposite the star a feminine player of top flight name value.

The tendency toward a multiple star policy dates from the production of "Grand Hotel" by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. David Zelznick's "Dinner at Eight" was interpreted as substantiating the indication that box office appeal as well as salary overhead is susceptible of mathematical enhancement. At this time, as inspection of product schedules will attest, the studios are practically unanimous on the subject.

Last of the newly started group is "House of Secrets," Chesterfield. The cast includes Leslie Fenton, Morgan Wallace, Ian MacLaren, George Rosener, Holmes Herbert and Claude King. Roland Reed is directing.

Four finished films give Paramount the leadership for completed pictures. Most important of the group directly sponsored by the studio undoubtedly is Cecil B. DeMille's "The Plainsman." With Gary Cooper as Wild Bill Hickock, Jean Arthur as Calamity Jane and James Ellison as Buffalo Bill, the cast is studded with known screen names. Included are Helen Burgess, Charles Bickford, Porter Hall, Robert Barratt, Bruce Cabot, John Miljan, Frank McGlynn, Sr., Granville Bates, Frank Albertson, Purnell Pratt, Fred Kohler, George Hayes, Charles Judels, Stanley Andrews, John Hyams and Edwin Maxwell among many others. In "Hideaway Girl" Robert Cummings, Shirley Ross, Martha Raye, Wilma Francis, Louis DaPron, Elizabeth Russel, Monroe Owsley, Ray Walker and Ed Brophy will be seen. George Archainbaud directed. Rivaling "The Plainsman" as an object of attention is the major production, produced by Emanuel Cohen, starring Mae West and tentatively titled "Go West Young Man." Supporting names are Warren William, Randolph Scott, Lyle Talbot, Alice Brady, Isabel Jewell, Elizabeth Patterson, Margaret Perry, Etienne Girardot, Maynard Holmes, Alice Ardell and Nicodemus. Henry Hathaway directed.

Columbia checked in three pictures. "Theodora Goes Wild" heads the list. Irene Dunne is starred, supported by Melvyn Douglas, Rosaline Keith, Mary MacLaren, Thomas Mitchell, Elisabeth Risdon, Margaret McWade, Thurston Hall and Nana Bryant. Richard Boleslawski directed. In "Lady From Nowhere," which Gordon Wiles directed, Mary Astor, Charles Quigley, Norman Willis, Gene Morgan, Spencer Charters, Rita LeRoy and Thurston Hall will be seen. The third finished film, "The Cowboy Star," features Charles Starrett, Iris Shunn, Cy Jenks, Wally Albright and Marc Lawrence. David Selman directed.

Radio completed "Make Way for a Lady," previously titled "Daddy And I." Herbert Marshall, Anne Shirley and Gertrude Michael are starred in a cast that includes Margot Grahame, Clara Blandick, Maxine Jennings, Willie Best, Helen Parrish, Mary Jo Ellis, Taylor Holmes and Frank Coghlan. David Burton directed.

"The Mask of Zorro" was finished at Republic. Directed by Wells Root, the cast lists Robert Livingston, Heather Angel, Emily Fitzroy, Ian Wolfe and Walter Long.

At Twentieth Century-Fox, "Pigskin Parade" moved to the cutting rooms. A unique sort of football story, it will present Arline Judge, Johnny Downs, Stuart Irwin, Betty Grable, Patsy Kelly, the Yacht Club Boys, Jack Haley, Tony Martin, Fred Kohler, jr., Dixie Dunbar, Bob McClung and Judy Garland. David Butler directed.

"Come and Get It," a Samuel Goldwyn production for U. A., rounds out the list of completed pictures. Edward Arnold, Joel McCrea and Frances Farmer are featured. Other names are Francis X. Shields, Walter Brennan, Mady Christians, Mary Nash, Andrea Leeds, Clem Bevan, Edwin Maxwell, Harry Bradley, Rollo Lloyd, Al K. Hall and Charles Halton. Howard Hawks directed.

Paragraphically

Universal has purchased George Murphy's term contract from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. The actor had previously been borrowed for the lead in "Talk of the Town," and studio executives believe the part will be so important they want the player under permanent contract to their studio. Doris Nolan has the feminine lead opposite Murphy.

The newly formed Jewish Art Film Company in Hollywood has named Sid Blake as supervisor, Dick L'Estrange as production manager, Sidney Zeibel as technical advisor, Jack Kenny as director, Harry Jones as assistant director and Henry Rogers as publicity director. The company will make pictures in Yiddish.

Julian S. Rifkin, son of Herman Rifkin of Boston, has joined the Republic Pictures studio staff in Hollywood.

The Gay Desperado

(United Artists)

Musical Romance

Quite some time before its completion, insiders in Hollywood were whispering that in "The Gay Desperado" Pickford-Lasky had a potential sensation. What came up on the screen when the picture was previewed at Warners Hollywood theatre, to be enthusiastically received by the audience, vividly indicated that the inside knowledge sharpers fell short in their advance estimations. Taking audience reaction as a tip, it would be good showmanship on the part of exhibitors to whom the film is available to start telling their patrons about it as early as possible. It looks like a box office bet.

"The Gay Desperado" is farce action packed comedy melodrama with romantic love interest embellished with beautiful vocal music. It is a show sparkling with no end of unique surprises. The theme and the way it is worked out are surprising. So is the action, acting and dialogue, the class of production support, photography and novel directorial technique. But most surprising of all is the music. With Nino Martini singing in full voice, music is of superior quality. He sings almost half the picture's running time. Yet he is seen singing for only about ten minutes. During the remainder of the time his voice is the background for action. Surprises cropped up often to cause audience applause to drown out sound. At the end it yelled for more.

Surprises start immediately. Briganza, "worst bad man in Mexico," and his bandits, all but sneering Campo and dumb Diego, are avid worshippers of American gangster methods as blood and thunder motion pictures portray public enemy tactics. Their enthusiasm for the gory film running away with them, the shooting gallery theatre is being turned into a shambles, when Chivo is summoned to sing them into submission. Briganza, loving music more than murder, decides Chivo must join his band "or else." As the latter only wants to sing, his new patrons commandeer and panic a radio station to let the troubadour sing. With the Rurales at their heels, the bandits ride to the hills, stopping monentarily as Briganza orders Chivo to put the "snatch" on lost-in-the-desert, eloping Americans Jane and Bill.

Eruptive fun, excitement and music of this episode set the stage for what is to ensue. To the tune of different comedy, Briganza sits down to write American gangster Butch a proposition that will get a big ransom for Jane and Bill. Singing Chivo, guarding the captives, falls for Jane and permits Bill, turned yellow, to escape. To the slapstick pace of throwing everything in the room at each other Chivo and Jane fall in love.

Briganza, returning with Butch and his mob, which includes burlesque prototypes of Robinson, Cagney, Raft and LaRue in best racketeer fettle, together with recaptured Bill, learns of Chivo's treachery. But in a farce execution sequence, in which Diego and Campo shine, Nino sings himself back into his chief's good graces. From then on the show rushes to its climax. Romantic, music loving Briganza, seeing Chivo and Jane making calf's eyes at each other, outwits the hijacking Butch, et al, when they attempt the double-cross. Making a deal with the Rurales for the repossession of Chivo, who has been sent to inform Mexican and American officers of his astounding coup, Briganza exchanges the mobsters for him, sends Bill safely home, gives Chivo to Jane and, with his followers, rides off to the hills to continue his old fashioned uncommercialized banditry.

The combination of Martini's singing in rendering classical, operatic and theme song numbers, together with the fun-laden quality of the story, in which dialogue and action are hilariously amusing, automatically recommend the picture to the attention of both class and mass audiences.

Reviewed at the Warner Hollywood theatre, where the film was enthusiastically applauded.

Kelly the Second

(MGM)

Comedy

Comedy of the type commonly associated with the slambang two-reeler is here presented in feature length proportion. Crammed with action and gags from start to finish and with an all-comedy cast, this production from the Hal Roach studios should please those who like robust comedy, with a ready-made audience in the juvenile trade.

The cast, studded with comedy names, consists of Patsy Kelly as the trainer of an ex-truck driver who turns prize-fighter, Guinn Williams as the prize-fighter, Charley Chase as the manager, and Pert Kelton as the feather brained girl friend of gangster Edward Brophy.

In the story, Patsy Kelly, en route to her job in Charley Chase's drug store, is delayed by Guinn Williams. An argument starts and when a group of men try to interfere Williams proceeds to beat them up. The police track Williams to Chase's drug store and arrest him. The judge frees Williams, placing him in the custody of Chase, with the stipulation that if Williams is arrested again the court will attach Chase's store.

To keep Williams from fighting in the street and at the same time to appease his pugnacious instincts, Patsy and Chase make a prize-fighter of Williams. He loses his first bout and Brophy, a prominent racketeer, who bet heavily on Williams, loses his money. Brophy, however, sees possibilities in Williams, and promptly makes himself a partner along with Patsy and Chase. Williams, after winning several fights, is matched to fight the champion. Williams wins but only after some comedy sequences in which all the principals are involved.

The Big Broadcast of 1937

Musical Comedy

A wealth of entertainment to amuse and thrill audiences, and plenty of production, story and name values for exhibitors are presented here. While the substantiating comedy romance story is rather thin, it serves as an acceptable background for the presentation of quite a number of screen, radio and concert stage celebrities. Production is high class. Music, both in accompaniment and as provided for specialty purposes, is of superior quality. In relation to those qualities the included comedy, romance, light drama, spectacle, thrill action and light drama have been intelligently combined to give audiences maximum entertainment value and exhibitors a similar quantity of exploitation availability.

Generally, though bringing in the specialty performers in rather episodic fashion, the story moves to the tune of hilarious comedy. All is occasioned by Burns and Allan approaching Jack Benny, radio station manager, to broadcast a golf ball advertising program. The fun of this situation, with both Miss Allen and Benny performing characteristically, takes a romantic conflict contrast when talent agent Ral Milland imports small town broadcaster Shirley Ross, for a spot on the program and both he and Benny fall for her. Pestered by Miss Allen and his comic secretary, Martha Raye, Benny goes about lining up the program. Ensues the presentation of Frank Forest in a modernistic singing, dancing rhumba feature, and Bob Burns comes in to continue through with running story-telling gags. Follows Benny Goodman and his orchestra, providing music for a spectacular Eleanore Whitney-Louis Da Pron whirlwind dance, a singing Benny Fields, and Sam Hearn in his unique specialty.

Meanwhile the story thread continues, turning lightly dramatic as Miss Ross, who, after singing, comes to feel that she is getting the run around, disappears after montage shots show her and Milland making the rounds of famous New York night spots. Classical outstanding feature is the presentation of Leopold Stokowski directing a beautifully played symphony. In this sequence, under vividly unique lighting effects, audience attention is concentrated on the famous maestro's hands and fingers. But the ace feature of the radio program was to have been the presentation of roundly ballyhooed radio wedding. Following a wild chase all over New York, Benny and Milland finally find Miss Ross and the latter pair are rushed to the broadcast studio, where the surprised girl, to the tune of lavish production, tingling music and hectic comedy, is married to an equally surprised Milland.

Possessed of the elements of a money-making attraction, the show opens the doors wide to spectacular, interest-creating exploitation. In comparison with previous "Big Broadcasts," the current one appears to be of higher grade as to entertainment and commercial worth.

Ladies in Love

(Twentieth Century - Fox)

Comedy-Drama

Adapted from a European play, this picture is continental in flavor. Though, as one story, it concentrates on the romantic adventures of four girls, it actually and simultaneously tells four separate and distinct stories. As such it is novel in formula and, while the four separate yarns sometimes fit none too snugly into the entire mosaic, the resultant entertainment is such that it has direct appeal to feminine audiences. Still, the whole picture has been given a unique showmanship coherence which, understood and properly handled, should cause the film to be of interest to general patronage.

The locale is Budapest. There live, in an apartment, tie-seller Martha, dancer Susie and model Yoli. All dream of and wish for happy, romantic marriages. Marie, a girl fresh from the country, joins the group. Martha, visioning home, security and babies, falls in love with Dr. Imre. Before she achieves her hope, magician Sandor gives all plenty to think about. Susie enjoys a thrilling romance with nobleman Lanyi, loses him to another regal lady and is prevented from destroying herself by Martha. Meanwhile sly Yoli and bashful Marie have been rivals for Barta's favor, but Yoli, who has loved just for the thrill of it, loses him to Marie just when she wants him most.

Despite the continental atmosphere of the show, it possesses considerable human interest content. Comedy, most of it light and gay, is the predominating quality. Yet the dramatic contrast, principally as it concerns the various rivalries and as it pertains to the shattering of Susie's dreams, is poignant. Dealing in material that is of pointed interest to women, the fact that it is played by Janet Gaynor, Loretta Young and Constance Bennett, personalities who have been long in the public eye, as well as Paul Lukas, Alan Mowbray and J. Edward Bromberg, Simone Simon and Don Ameche, it has a name value that cannot be overlooked in seeking general audience support.

Reviewed in Grauman's Chinese Theatre. Audience reaction indicated that the sophisticates grasped the meaning of the story, but that the masses had a little difficulty reconciling all that happened.

Missing Girls

(Chesterfield)

Melodrama

The opening sequences of this modern melodrama present the case of the girl who leaves home and the conditions that confront her when she arrives in the city looking for work. Then the subject is put aside without solution or further ado and assorted gangsters, federal men and casual inmates of a penal institution take over the screen and work out their own more or less familiar destinies. One of the girls presented in the opening scenes is still among those on hand at the finish, but unimportantly so, the gunfire and gumshoeing having obscured the character.

Roger Pryor plays the lead, impersonating a reporter and going to jail, as did the author, Martin Mooney, rather than reveal to a grand jury the source of material he has used in a series of newspaper articles. This factor, too, although given more attention than the missing-girl factor for which the film is named, drifts into the background as the action sweeps forward to the familiar raid-on-hideout finale.

The cast contains a number of names that have billing value. A number of incidents in the picture are, in themselves, substantial stuff. The title, conceivably provocative, applies only loosely.

Two in a Crowd

(Universal)

Comedy Drama

Comedy is emphasized in this light, reasonably swift little metropolitan story utilizing several elements of varied interest, horse racing, bank robbery, the coal business, theatricals and a spot of racketeering. The type of comedy varies from the mildly subtle to the outright slapstick material supplied by Andy Clyde. The romantic interest is carried by Joel McCrea and Joan Bennett, both discharging the assignment in characteristic fashion.

The story brings Boy and Girl together in a crowded street on New Year's Eve when each finds half of a thousand-dollar bill, a circumstance necessitating their continuing together until the bill can be cashed. Boy owns a one-horse racing stable and Girl hasn't any money either. Detectives, gangsters and the breaks, good and bad, shuffle their relationships until the horse wins its race and everything turns out as it should and, in this kind of picture, must.

The names of the players suggest the first step in exploitation. The nature of the story calls for definite identification of the film as a comedy.

Reviewed at the Palace theatre, where it shared a bill with "Thank You, Jeeves" and moved its beholders to intermittent laughter.

Without Orders

(RKO Radio)

Melodrama

A melodrama of aviation and human conflict, this looks like a sleeper that should do quite well with patronage that looks for this type of product. Primarily it's a hair raiser, and that quality is part and parcel of all the elements, whether they be romantic, comic, melodramatic or thrill action. As the story is well prepared, acted and produced, with thrills coming in almost every sequence, it's that kind of film that quickly sets off audience enthusiasms, and as it follows a theatric vein, permits them to cheer and hiss to their hearts' content.

Kendrick, air line owner, insists that Madison, dependable transport flier, take his cocky headline hunting son away from aerial stunting and guide him in the rudiments of safe passenger flying. The assignment is not particularly welcome to Madison and it is made further unpleasant when Len sets about swiping girl friend Kay away from his tutor. Through a well knit series of romantic and professional conflict, the yarn takes twists that make Len appear as a hero and Madison a heel. Building to its climax, Kay promises to marry Len, but not before Len beats up her sister to prevent her spreading news as to their former indiscretions. In a thrill packed finale, Len, flying a passenger plane through a terrific storm,

Without orders, Madison takes charge of the dispatching office, and after the ship's damaged radio receiver has been repaired, he wirelesses instructions and advice to Kay so that she may land the plane safely.

Fast moving, with action dominating dialogue or illusion in telling the yarn, the film has plenty of zip. Straight drama continually, the film makes only slight concessions to anything that might be considered propaganda for commercial aviation. Nevertheless, it is alive with exploitation assets than seem readily adaptable to assure above average patron interest.

Ein Lied Geht Um Die Welt

(Casino)

German Musical Comedy

The title of this importation from Germany translates as "My Song Goes Around the World." It is, of course, the story of a singer. The singer is portrayed by Joseph Schmidt, whose splendid voice is the picture's major asset and, no doubt, accountable for its production. The film is not supplied with English titles, which suggests that its usefulness lies mainly in cinemas supported wholly or in large part by German clientele, although the trend of the story is unmistakable in any case.

As to production quality, the film is not among the finer achievements imported from Germany. Adequate is about the word for it. Photographed in Venice, the scenic beauty of the spot appears to have been a little too much for the editor. There is much going to and fro, afoot and by gondola, with little save architectural interest to support it. A few sequences strive for the effectiveness dear to the German director's heart, but not many of them encompass it.

The story is about the familiar three musketeers of the attics, Ricardo, Rigo and Simoni, this time, and Nina, the girl in the case. In this version Ricardo is the principal character, an earnest fellow of great voice and insignificant stature. The radio takes his voice to the millions and becomes an unseen idol, beloved by and loving simple Nina, who, on seeing him and meeting his friends, falls in love with Rigo but pretends to care for Ricardo. He learns the truth on the eve of a theatrical engagement and wanders away in despair. A sympathizer counsels him to seek his happiness in music and he arrives at the theatre in time to save the premiere.

The Human Adventure

(Wendell G. Shields)

Educational

Produced by the Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago under the supervision of Dr. James Henry Breasted and recording, in the words of Dr. Breasted, "the most remarkable process known to us in the universe: the rise of Man from savagery to civilization," the production is notable for its educational value. It is entertaining in a sense but its entertainment value is limited commercially, for its deals with archeology, a not very widely appreciated subject, and consequently presents a difficult selling problem to the exhibitor.

With a running commentary throughout by Charles Breasted, the picture carries the audience by airplane through civilization's first strongholds of Egypt, Palestine, Syria, Anatolia, Iraq and Persia. The later sequences of the picture are devoted chiefly to excavations revealing 14 separate cities, each built one upon the other, with a Stone Age village at the bottom and the remains of an early Christian temple at the top.

Other archeological finds of importance are recorded, with the camera devoting special attention to Persepolis, the capital of the Persian Empire, built by Darius the Great about 500 B. C. Excellent photography and a good job of editing have enhanced the value of the production.

Previewed at the Plaza theatre, New York, where the picture is scheduled for a limited engagement starting October 16th.

Spy of Napoleon

(Twickenham-British)

Spy Drama, History, Costume

British-produced from a story by Baroness Orczy, author of "The Scarlet Pimpernel," this Julius Hagen feature offers a good many points of appeal which, though in essence and singly they may be old, are combined very originally and vividly, due in equal measure to good plot values, very efficient direction and a pleasingly varied range of characterization.

Combined are a spy melodrama with strong love interest, a costume play, period of Napoleon III, and a historical spectacle with the French surrender to the Germans at Sedan in 1870 as its highlight. Such characters as Bismarck and Moltke are reproduced with verisimilitude and the portrait of Napoleon III by Frank Vosper is the dominating feature of the picture, with Joyce Bland's study of the Empress Eugenie a worthy complement.

These angles of the picture and its ingenious plot, provide material for direction toward any type of public. It is, in fact, an easy picture to exploit, and it has color and action to repay the effort.

The story opens at the Court of Napoleon III, with the Emperor consenting to make a provincial tour, despite his fear of assassination by adherents of the old regime, because he wishes to see his natural daughter, a ballet dancer at Lyons. At the theatre there an attempt is made to kill him. Gerard de Lanoy, friend of the assailant, and the lover of Eloise, Napoleon's daughter, is arrested as he is destroying papers left in his charge by the attempted murderer.

Napoleon marries de Lanoy to Eloise in order that the latter, ennobled by the marriage, may be able to come to Court. De Lanoy, condemned to be shot, is put before a firing squad, with rifles containing blank cartridges, and secretly banished.

Eloise consents to do counter-espionage work. At Geneva she meets her banished husband. Jointly they achieve the defeat of a master-spy after a thrilling chase on a steamer on Lake Geneva.

First to be emphasized, it seems, is the historical picture of the outstanding events of Napoleon III's reign, but there are possibilities also in the situation of a girl who believes herself married and violently widowed within the hour. It is a point of interest that these parts bring together Dolly Haas, star of the British "Broken Blossoms," and Richard Barthelmess, prominent in the D. W. Griffith first version.

Viewed at night trade-show, Piccadilly theatre. It was enthusiastically received by an audience which it had held throughout.

The Man Who Lived Again

(Gaumont-British)

Melodrama

There is an original story idea here, lending itself to stunt exploitation and to various forms of effective tieups. That idea is that a doctor-scientist has invented apparatus whereby the personality of one living creature can be, as it were, decanted into another individual; a soul transferred from one body to another.

The change, effected with a considerable display of electrical pyrotechnics and a volume of sound suggesting the ascent of many giant elevators, and recorded by the sinking and rising of fluids in giant test tubes, is a striking, if crude, screen effect. It is most impressive, perhaps, in the original experiment with two chimpanzees: the amiable seeker of nuts in the scientist's pockets becomes a screaming and biting savage; the savage monk placidly seeks the nuts.

This is decidedly more convincing than the later switch of personalities between a warped cripple and a millionaire newspaper owner, and between the mad doctor and the young lover of the doctor's beautiful assistant, coveted by the scientist, but for not too skeptical audiences this last-named situation may be unusual and appealing entertainment.

Dr. Laurience, daring medical experimenter, has discovered a method whereby the transfer of personalities can be effected. His beautiful assistant is loved by the son of a newspaper owner. The father decides to exploit the scientist's discovery but, insisting on a premature disclosure to the Royal Society in London, sees his protege laughed to scorn, and decides to drop him.

The doctor tricks him into his laboratory and forcibly effects an interchange of personalities between the newspaper magnate and a cripple whom he has kept alive for purposes of experiment. The cripple's body, with the other man's mind, succumbs and the cripple's mind, in the newspaper man's body, is now at the disposal of the doctor, whose next plan is to steal the body of his assistant's suitor in order to take his place.

He succeeds in getting the young man into the chair and in effecting the change but the girl, knowing the secret, reverses the process. The doctor dies and the girl smashes his apparatus.

Boris Karloff is the crazy scientist and Anna Lee the girl. There is very good character work from Frank Cellier as the newspaper king and Donald Calthrop as the cripple. John Loder is the boy suitor.

Viewed at a trade show in the Piccadilly theatre. The thrills seemed rather a case of straining after effect, but the originality of the story and the incidental humour were reasonably appreciated.

Dusty Ermine

(Twickenham-British)

Comedy-Drama

Adapted from the play by Neil Grant, this British production provides a very pleasant blend of entertainment values. There is comedy, based on the character of an artist who becomes a forger more or less by accident, drama turning on the London search for a gang of counterfeit note makers who finally are run to earth in an Alpine resort, and some very well done stunt skiing in beautiful snow settings.

Ronald Squire's interpretation of the droll and essentially non-vicious forger is a highlight. Also outstanding is a comedy interpretation by Margaret Rutherford—a character find if ever there was one—of the role of an eccentric, middle-aged woman crook. Jane Baxter, known in America, is the girl in the case, and Anthony Bushell, also seen in American films, is her sweetheart.

After Jim Kent has served a four year sentence for forgery, he returns to the house of his very respectable lawyer brother. His young nephew, Gilbert, hating the idea of going into his father's office, takes seriously his uncle's semi-humorous lecture on the art of forgery and becomes involved with a gang which unsuccessfully has attempted to rope in the older man. The action shifts to an Alpine hotel, where Gilbert is engaged nominally to paint frescoes but actually to assist in production of counterfeit notes.

Forsyth, a young detective, tracks Jim Kent to the hotel, falls in love with Gilbert's sister Linda, and when Jim and Gilbert make for London succeeds in finding counterfeit notes hidden in the carriage. Jim is arrested, although Gilbert is the guilty person and the older man has only been attempting to shield him. Later it is discovered that Jim could not have drawn some of the notes in circulation and the capture of a woman member of the gang enables the police to trace the various intermediaries through whom the goods are circulated and to make their way to the Alpine headquarters. The climax comes when Forsyth and Linda come to grips with the gang which is carrying notes across the snow covered frontier and, after a thrilling ski-chase, in the course of which Gilbert, intervening, loses his life, the gang is rounded up and Jim's innocence proved.

The trade preview audience at the Piccadilly theatre found it very amusing, and the skiing scenes were highly praised.

Football Flashes

(Columbia)

Very Good

This is a well edited sport subject on football. Scenes of players in training precede some excellent action shots of former games, noted for the adverse weather conditions under which they were played. These include the professional New York Giants and the Chicago Bears game on a frozen field, the Army and Navy clash on a field of mud, and the Dartmouth and Princeton engagement on a snow covered gridiron. As a contrast shots of the thrilling battle between Notre Dame and Ohio State are shown as the teams struggled on a perfect field under excellent weather conditions. Running time, 10 minutes.

Stranger Than Fiction, No. 27

(Universal)

Of Interest

Seven "Stranger Than Fiction" items are presented in the latest of the series. They are: a windshield umbrella, a house built in a giant red-wood tree in California, an 84 year old wood carver, a church in New York State that has 72 doors and is more than a sixth of a mile around, a road that has old tin cans for a foundation, an $85,000 railroad terminal built in 1907 in Nevada that is completely deserted, and a dog who contributes to the newspaper sales in Kansas City. Running time, 8 minutes.

Pardon My Spray

(RKO Radio)

Sea Sports

In the second of his new series for Van Beuren, Bill Corum, the wellknown sports writer, brings the finer points of boating to the screen. While the camera grinds out scenes of some 300 yachts of various classes and design competing at the Larchmont Yacht Club, Mr. Corum paints a word picture of the events. The mechanical side of boat racing is illustrated with a race by a group of speedy bucking broncho outboards. Running time, 10 minutes.

Gus Van's Garden Party

Good

This is entertaining fare of vaudeville proportions with Gus Van as master of ceremonies. Van also sings two songs in his own peculiar style. Others who appear are Miller and Massey, dancers; the Eight Lovely Ladies, singers, and Bill Power's Pavillion Royal Girls, dancers. At the conclusion the ensemble join in "I Love a Parade." Running time, 11 minutes.

Pathe Topics, No. 1

Interesting

Some excellent shots of Mt. McKinley contribute to make this an interesting subject. The camera photographs all sides of McKinley while the plane, in which the cameraman is traveling, soars over a blanket of clouds. Also shown is a motion picture projector, which was used in 1750 and is still in perfect running order, and a training school for bird dogs in the north of Scotland. Running time, 8 minutes.

Vocalizing

(RKO Radio)

Excellent

An excellent short subject with Edgar Kennedy at his very best. Kennedy contributes some grand comedy to a story that allows him ample opportunity to display his talents. The subject begins with the usual pulling of hair and gnashing of teeth by Kennedy as he suffers through a piano recital. Induced to take the lady pianist home Kennedy finds on his arrival there a girl who had come to visit the pianist. He also takes her home. At the girl's house the grandmother is about to leave and Kennedy takes her home. On the way the grandmother becomes befuddled because of too much herb tea. Kennedy finally gets her home and starts homeward himself after being threatened by a servant with arrest. Running time, 21 minutes.

A Bully Frog

Fair

One of the "Terry-Toon" series, this subject has to do with an animated frog, who is pretty much of a bully in his own small pond. The frog sets out for larger waters but the reception he receives convinces him that there is no place like home. The frog returns to the small pond but minus his bullying tactics. Running time, 7 minutes.

Impersonations

This features Sibyl Bowan and her impersonations of Greta Garbo, Marlene Dietrich, Beatrice Lillie and Mae West. Miss Bowan as a publicity director agrees to get the stars to appear on a program in behalf of the company Miss Bowan works for. When the famous stars fail to appear Miss Bowan impersonates them. Others in the cast are Cappy Barra's Harmonica Swing Ensemble, Audrey and Wesley Catri and the Four Eton Boys. Running time, 11 minutes.

False Alarms

(Columbia)

Comedy

The familiar comedy style of Moe, Larry and Curly, commonly known as the Three Stooges, is the piece de resistance in this subject. This time the three comedians are firemen and as usual a headache to the rest of the organization. The boys always seem to miss the fires, they cut the fire hose and wreck the chief's shiny new car. In fact, the Three Stooges have their usual prolific aptitude tor getting into hot water. Running time, 20 minutes.

Going Places, No. 27

(Universal)

Very Good

A very good number of the "Going Places" series, chiefly because of the excellent shots of Crater Lake, in the Sierras of Oregon, the natural beauty of which has been reproduced in full on the screen. Other subjects include: tuna fishing by Sicilian fishermen in the Mediterranean, and bubble blowing as performed by a Buffalo expert in the art. Running time, 9 minutes.

Sports in the Alps

Very Good

Interesting scenes of the winter sports in the snow-capped mountains of the Alps are strikingly illustrated. Graceful skaters performing on ice, expert skiers riding the mountainside and bobsledders whirling through treacherous ice lanes all contribute to make this an entertaining subject. Not the least of the thrills are scenes of children trying their skill at bobsledding. Narration by Ed Thorgersen. Running time, 10 minutes.

2,500,000 SCRIPPS-HOWARD READERS TO HEAR ABOUT WORTHWHILE FILMS

The Scripps-Howard newspapers are undertaking promotion of worthwhile motion pictures among their 2,500,000 readers in 23 American cities, giving wide editorial attention in their publications to a "Picture of the Month," as selected by vote of their motion picture critics. The possibilities of exhibitors tying in locally with their Scripps-Howard newspapers on the pictures selected are obvious.

Although only one picture thus far has been selected as the "Picture of the Month" by the nationwide chain of Scripps-Howard newspapers over the country, the success of the new idea is already practically assured, according to executives of the company in New York. Response from exhibitors, independent and circuit members, and from patrons as well, has proved to Max Cook, editorial promotion chief of the chain, that the plan will work and prove not only advantageous to his newspapers but to the operators of the motion picture theatres and patrons of these theatres as well.

Conceived by Mr. Cook, the plan calls for every motion picture critic on the 23 members of the Scripps-Howard group to select, at the end of the month, what he considers the best picture of that period and to send in his choice to Mr. Cook at the New York headquarters. Mr. Cook then compiles the answers and selects the winner, which is designated the "picture of the month" and then is given special editorial treatment on the drama pages of the various newspapers in the form of a feature story written either in New York by the editorial promotion department or by the individual critics on orders from headquarters in Manhattan.

As Mr. Cook explains his plan, only 15 per cent of the total number of potential customers are able to see a motion picture during its first run, either because of limited seating arrangements, inability to reach theatres while the picture is being run, or because of financial reasons such as high admission price. By the time the same picture has reached the subsequent and neighborhood theatres, he says, public interest in the film has lapsed because of advertising campaigns intended to direct that interest at new offerings that are playing the leading first-run houses of the community.

Therefore Mr. Cook feels, if the public is reminded of a feature that is no longer at the de luxe firstrun theatres but it being shown for shorter periods at subsequent runs and even in some places in the smaller neighborhood houses, it will flock to the smaller theatres to see it, provided the interest in the puicture was great while it was it the larger houses.

Subsequent run and neighborhood theatres naturally do not advertise on the scale of the first-runs, Mr. Cook continues, and so are unable to direct attention to their product in a manner strong enough to attract audiences to compete with the powerful first-runs. "We do that for them in the particular case of the picture which our critics think is the best for the month," he said.

Get Release Schedules

In line with the instructions from the New York headquarters, the 23 Scripps-Howard reviewers receive a release schedule every month containing the pictures to be considered for that priod. After these, or as many as possible, have been seen, the critics make their choice, judging the work according to "box-office value, artistry and direction, artistic merit, public appeal, story, acting, photography and production values."

The newspaper chain, reaching approximately 2,500,000 readers daily, according to circulation records, has critics on the following papers in the communities named: Birmingham Post, Ray E. Glenn; San Diego Sun, Willis Werner; San Francisco News, Claude A. LaBelle; Denver Rocky Mountain News, Alberta Pike; Washington Daily News, Don Craig; Evansville Press, Evansville, Ind., Ed Klinger; Indianapolis Times, Joseph Collier; Covington Post, Covington, Ky.; Albuquerque Tribune, Irene Fisher; New York World-Telegram, William Boehnel; Buffalo Times, A. Started As Promotion Idea

Admittedly a promotion idea conceived by Mr. Cook, who at one time was connected with the advertising and publicity department of Universal Pictures in Hollywood, to aid the various Scripps-Howard newspapers in their territories by means of the motion picture, the idea grew to such proportions, he says, that response has been almost as great, proportionally, from exhibitors as from readers of the various publications. The plan was first announced September 1, this year, and, according to Mr. Cook, when the first winner, "Green Pastures," was revealed, box-offices were greatly aided in the communities playing the picture, all in subsequent-run houses by this time, when the special editorial treatment of the film was printed.

At the same time, it is revealed in Hollywood that Dan Thomas, chief of publicity for Walter Wanger, is trying a new service on some 900 motion picture and drama critics. He is sending them a weekly news column, dealing not only with productions from his own producer but those of other important companies. Mr. Thomas' name is widely known because of his long association with NEA as Hollywood correspondent.

Alumnae Praise Film Standards

In the same week that speakers at one San Francisco organization, the Motion Picture Research Council, were branding the modern motion picture as a danger to the youth of America, as reported in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, another group heartily applauded the statement of their educational director that "The American Association of University Women is grateful to the motion picture industry for its fine response to the public demand for better motion pictures."

More than 100 women university graduates and numerous local educators attended the luncheon meeting, at the Palace hotel in San Francisco, of the local section of the National Association of University Alumnae.

Disapproval of such legislative regulations as proposed in the Pettengill Bill was voiced by Mrs. Sylvain S. Abrams, president, when she said, "We believe in education, not legislation. Education, though a slower process, is a much safer one." Mrs. Abrams also emphasized four conclusions which, she said, were reached in a six year study of the motion picture as a cultural force in American life:

"The motion picture is a great force for education today, but the entertainment values must not be neglected.

"The social attitudes revealed in the motion picture exerted a definite influence on American life.

"Up to a few years ago 'false standards of living' were glorified on the screen, but these were just an expression of madness following the war.

"The industry is now giving the public the best possible type of pictures today."

The Ohio Motion Picture Council will meet in Cleveland October 28-29-30 at the Cleveland hotel.

Hirsch Succeeds Leonard at "U"

J. Albert Hirsch this week was appointed advertising manager of Universal Pictures, to fill the vacancy created by the recent resignation of Charles Leonard. The appointment was made by P. D. Cochrane, director of advertising. Mr. Hirsch has been Mr. Leonard's assistant for the past six months.

Before joining Universal, Mr. Hirsch was with Paramount for nine years as assistant to A. M. Botsford in the Publix Theatres advertising department. He was also a member of the Paramount eastern editorial board. Mr. Hirsch assumed his new duties Monday.

CANTON-NANKING ACCORD BRINGS HOPE OF REVIVED FILM BUSINESS

Abolishment of Many Local Taxes in Canton Also Favorable Sign; Government Extends Screen Education

by J. P. KOEHLER
in Shanghai

With political differences between Canton and Nanking rapidly being ironed out, and with the taking over of government activities in the South by the Central Government of China, the prospects for renewed cinema business are the brightest since the former Canton government started restriction of foreign film exhibition by what is now apparently recognized as an impossible quota regulation, and the institution last year of local Cantonese censor fees in contravention of the national law making one fee payable in Nanking for all China.

Reports from trustworthy sources say that the local Canton censor fee very shortly will be abolished, and that the quota will be lifted, so that cinemas again will be allowed to play foreign or Chinese product as desired by the exhibitors. As has been pointed out before, native product has not yet reached the quantity and quality level at which large first-run theatres can operate at a profit on a basis of 60 per cent Chinese and 40 per cent foreign film exhibition.

The relief measures will come at a time when the buying of new season's product is in full swing, and with the renewed activity of the distributors in the South, Canton, from being a headache and loss to foreign film distributors, again may take its place as the second best exhibition city in China.

However, until official decrees finally are announced, optimism must be restrained, since, in the past, unknown quantities suddenly have appeared and upset all calculations. The distributors' attitude seems to be a distinct "wait and see," with selling going on in expectation of the lifting of censor fees and quotas.

The abolishment of numerous local taxes in Canton also will have its effect on the cinema business. Local merchants having been taxed to limits of endurance, and the consumer having to pay the piper in the end, the relief afforded may well show itself at the boxoffice.

Training with Films

The Chinese government has announced an extension program of education via the screen for the masses in ports and hinterland. This is but a renewal on a larger scale of the activity carried on for the past two years. Millions of Chinese are not yet prepared to accept the motion picture screen as a source of amusement. These folk will require a gradual training into the possibilities of the motion picture.

The "electric shadows," as motion pictures are termed in Chinese, present to great masses here only a confused, and, in some instances, terrifying, form of activity. To give such untrained people the modern, high-power talking and action pictures would be a sheer waste of time and money, and might even endanger future popularity of the screen as a source of entertainment. By using the screen as a source of imparting knowledge of simple rules of health, civics and so on, the national government hopes to educate these backward peoples into seeing the value of the motion picture as a source of instruction, and it will follow in due course that entertainment will be accepted in its new forms.

Confiscation Warning

A new regulation has been issued by the Central Film Censor Committee in Nanking as regards films considered offensive to the Chinese people. The text of this regulation follows in a literal translation:

"Concerning films that are derogatory or insulting to China, the Censor Board has always taken a firm attitude in cutting or banning such films. Foreign producers do not seem to pay sufficient attention to this regulation, and offenses of this kind have lately been frequently found in foreign films.

"This Board has now decided to enforce the regulation as passed on the 86th meeting of the Censor Committee, and all films of offending nature, no matter how small the offense may be, shall be confiscated. Effective July 1st, 1936; a copy to be sent to all foreign distributors. It is hoped that such foreign distributors will notify their producing agencies accordingly to prevent further abuses. Dated August 10, 1936. Central Film Censor Board of China."

[The regulation is made retroactive 41 days! Such retroactive legislation was the cause of a strong protest in 1934-35. Also, heretofore, banned films were ordered re-exported at once under bond.]

It is difficult to see whether the regulation can apply to film distributors under extra-territorial protection in the confiscation of their property. Naturally, extra-territorial rights do not excuse offenses and no distributor has as yet endeavored to make use of such rights as means to cover up offenses, nor is it expected that such offenses would be condoned by any government whose citizens enjoyed extra-territorial rights.

The fact is, however, that "offenses"—per se—consist in nearly all cases of portraying a Chinese in menial position as a servant, table waiter, in a very few cases as gangster assistants, and never prominently featured. It is not believed the foreign distributors will do more than pass the regulation on to their home offices. Four years ago the writer warned American producers about portraying Chinese in menial positions, in old-fashioned clothes and pigtails of pre-Republic days. But patience is, in a great measure, a national characteristic of the Chinese people. So now this drastic measure, five years after its warning was published in censor regulations of 1931.

Move to Depose Myers is Denied

Despite current rumors of a movement allegedly underfoot to oust Abram F. Myers, national Allied general counsel, prominent members of the Northwest Allied States in Minneapolis denied knowledge of any definite action, but attributed reports to disgruntled individuals.

W. A. Steffes, national Allied leader and a Myers' supporter, said it was known that Mr. Myers was connected with several other firms but that his affiliations made no difference so far as the Allied was concerned.

"Certain individuals are responsible for talk regarding a movement to oust Mr. Myers, but there is no concentrated action in Minnesota or any other place. So far as we are concerned, the action might be originating in the Virgin Isles or Scandinavia. It's just talk, and that by a very few individuals."

Bennie Berger, Allied leader, likewise scoffed at such reports. J. P. Clinton, director of the board of governors representing the Duluth section, said he had "opposed Myers many times in the past when he thought he was wrong," but refused to credit rumors of definite action against the general counsel.

Warner to Make 20 in England

Warner Brothers will produce 20 pictures in England at the Teddington Studios next season, Sam E. Morris, vice-president in charge of foreign affairs, said this week as he debarked from the Queen Mary after a five-week visit to England and France.

The program is now being lined up by Jack Warner and Irving Asher, he said. A number of American stars and directors will be sent over to appear in the British-made films, Mr. Morris added. He could not state whether any of the pictures would be shipped over for American release.

No change in the distribution organization was made by Mr. Morris during his visit abroad. In England, "everything is fine, but the Continent is disturbed over the devaluation of currency," he said.

Mr. Warner has extended his vacation a few weeks, Mr. Morris revealed, to visit the William Randolph Hearst castle, St. Donat, in Switzerland.

Returns to Law Practice

George E. Quigley, former Warner executive, has resumed the general practice of law. Sidney R. Fleisher, who was associated with the late Joseph P. Bickerton, Jr., is continuing the office, with Edward E. Cohen as his associate.

BERNSTEIN IS ADDING 16 LONDON THEATRES

Circuit Will Be Increased to 40 Houses Under $5,000,000 Program; 10 Already Begun

by BRUCE ALLAN

in London

Bernstein Theatres, Ltd., has announced a building program which, by the end of 1937, will bring the circuit of large capacity "Granadas" in the Greater London area to more than 40. Involved in the plan is the expenditure of £1,000,000 ($5,000,000) and the addition of 30,000 seats, largely in rapidly developing new residential neighborhoods. Ten of the theatres are already in erection and the complete program involves the following new theatres with capacities and opening dates indicated:

Wandsworth, South West London. 2500. October, 1936.

Woolwich, South East London. 3750 February, 1937.

Cheam, South London. 2000. March, 1937.

North Cheam. 1500. March, 1937.

Greenwich, South East London. 2000. April, 1937.

Harrow, North West London. 2000. April, 1937.

Clapham, South West London. 3000. September, 1937.

Bow, East London. 3000. December, 1937.

Greenford, Middlesex. 2000. September, 1937.

Woking, Surrey. 1750. December, 1937.

Plumstead, S. E. London, Woodford (N. E.), Enfield Wash (North) and Gidea Park, Essex, are to have 1500 seaters. Houses are also scheduled for Welling, Kent, and East Molesey, Surrey. All of these theatres are to be completed in 1937.

Robert T. Kane and other executives of New World Productions, with Alexander Korda as an interested guest, saw a rough-cut print of "Wings of the Morning," the first all-color feature to be made in England, in the private projection theatre of the Denham studios this week.

An official statement from New World declared Mr. Kane to be satisfied that the picture "will reveal a further development of the Technicolor process," while Mr. Korda is reported as describing the results as "brilliant." It is common knowledge that Mr. Korda suspended his own color plans until he had seen the results of "Wings of the Morning," which is a racing picture; the first color shots ever taken of the race for the Derby and a sequence of Irish hunting scenes are its high spots.

Technicolor, Ltd., announced that it had assured the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association that a complete color record of next year's Coronation procession would be produced and that special arrangements would be made to rush prints so that theatres would be able to play the film as an all-color news feature.

Interest in this statement is keen, it being a matter of universal agreement that the Coronation will be the big newsreel event of the year in all parts of the United Kingdom and that color would further greatly increase its drawing power. Establishment on an efficient basis of the Technicolor London processing plant will be necessary; at the present moment processing is still centralized in Hollywood, which handled the "Wings of the Morning" print.

The report and accounts of General Theatres Corporation, Ltd., show a net profit for the year ending March 31st of £275,969 ($1,379,845). There is a carry-forward, after the allocation of £12,500 for a final 9 per cent dividend on the participating preferred ordinaries (making 12 per cent for the year) of £50,834.

The accounts show £1,450,833 written off as "capital lost or unrepresented by available assets," in accordance with the scheme of rearrangement which confirmed the Gaumont-British management of the company.

No provision, it is stated, has been made for the debenture stock sinking fund, which was suspended as part of the reconstruction scheme, but £20,000 has been credited to new reserve. Also part of the rearrangement, an issue has been made to Gaumont-British of £148,803 second debenture stock bearing interest at 5½ per cent. Reopening of the rebuilt Capitol, Haymarket, London, is announced for January, 1937.

The Kinematograph Renters' Society urges reduction of the distributors' quota to one-third and makes the general statement that the present quota obligation is "so heavy as to be practically impossible of effective performance."

The suggestions are embodied in two memoranda included in the second volume of the minutes of evidence heard by the Moyne Committee.

Oscar Deutsch, head of the Odeon Circuit, probably England's fastest growing chain, will invade the West End of London with acquisition of the Alhambra in Leicester Square. He plans to rebuild it into a deluxe theatre.

Earl St. John, director of Paramount Theatres in England, said Charles Penley, previously in charge of Paramount London Theatres, had been appointed general manager of all theatres. Tony Reddin has been transferred from the Paramount, Liverpool, to head office as circuit supervisor. Leslie Holderness, recently supervisor, is now controller for Union Cinema Co., Ltd., with which Paramount recently made a joint management deal.

Templin Shifted to London

E. W. Templin of the Hollywood staff of Electrical Research Products, Inc., has been transferred to the engineering staff of the London office.

Researchers To Make Preservative Tests

Arrangements have been completed by the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences to conduct a series of field tests on the various film preservative processes now available to companies.

Starting next week a test reel containing several 150-foot sections of film, each section treated by a different preservative process, will be taken into each of approximately 150 theatres and projected from three to six times to determine the comparative effects of field service

Membership of the committee handling the tests consists of Harris Ensign, chairman; George Crane, Fred Gage, Hugh McClung, Sidney Lund, J. M. Nickolaus, John Swain, A. U. Guerin and Gordon S. Mitchell.

Cinema Arts Appears In "Preview" Copies

A "Preview" issue of Cinema Arts, new publication of film activities and interests, has been published. According to its sponsors, B. Griffith Grey, president, and E. A. Tropp, publisher, the publication "aims to reflect the new mode of motion pictures" and will be a quality motion picture magazine for discriminating readers. A painting of Jean Arthur occupies the cover and 19 pictures receive special editorial treatment. There are articles by Rouben Mamoulian, Ralph Rolan, Benjamin de Casseres, Homer Croy and Norman Anthony, among others.

Stanley Hand Promoted On Erpi Sales Staff

Stanley W. Hand, until recently in charge of midwest activities for Electrical Research Products, Inc., has been made assistant general sales manager under C. W. Bunn, with headquarters in New York and Chicago. Mr. Hand has been associated with the industry for more than 20 years. He pioneered in the sound technique with Erpi and has held many responsible positions in the company.

New Firm Opens Offices

Hollywood Famous Pictures, Inc., which was recently registered by S.E.C., has opened offices in the Spring St. Arcade, Los Angeles. According to Henry S. Orozco, vice-president and director, the company will make no production plans for at least two months, the present concern being the sale of stock.

The regular dividend of $1.62½ a share was declared Wednesday by Loew's, Inc., on the 6 per cent cumulative preferred stock, payable November 14th to stockholders of record October 28th.

L. J. McCarthy, formerly associated with Fox Midwest at Kansas City, has joined Republic Pictures as production assistant to Nat Levine.

IN THE BRITISH STUDIOS

by BRUCE ALLAN

Anna Lee, Irish

Cast for an Irish part in the Gaumont-British adaptation of Sir Rider Haggard's "King Solomon's Mines," at Shepherd's Bush, Anna Lee has been taking lessons in the language revived by Mr. De Valera from Tony Quin, native of Kilkenny and ex-member of the famous Abbey Players of Dublin. Mr. Quin had a hit in BIP's Irish success, "Ourselves Alone." Between scenes he makes a specialty of coaching other players in his native language or in English with an authentic Irish brogue. It is that sort of Irish Anna Lee will use mostly.

Paul Robeson has a Zulu role and Roland Young and John Loder are the other big names.

The George Arliss vehicle, "The Nelson Touch," of interest as giving that star his first dual role, has been retitled by G-B. It is now "His Lordship."

Will Hay and the rest of the Gainsborough-G-B "Windbag the Sailor" unit, William Beaudine director, have returned from five weeks at sea in a 1,100-ton cargo ship.

Warner to Wilcox

H. B. Warner, signed by Herbert Wilcox for "The Navy Eternal," will play a British consul in a foreign city who becomes the storm center of a local revolution and is rescued by the British navy.

The big sea scenes which are likely to prove the high-spot of this H. W. production are already being shot. Herbert Wilcox and three camera units are at Scapa Flow, where they will be allowed to use as much film as they please during the autumn maneuvers of the Grand Fleet.

Norman Walker, the director, will take the company to Weymouth, in the South of England, after a week with the fleet in the far North of Scotland. Pinewood Studio will be used for interiors in due course.

The "Cheshire Cheese"

After a lavish use of Savoy hotel backgrounds, "Triangle," the Miriam Hopkins London Films vehicle, continued production against an even better known London setting, the "Cheshire Cheese" inn in Fleet Street with a legendary association with Doctor Johnson and a strong attraction for American visitors.

There is a very fine cast in "Triangle," Gertrude Lawrence, Sebastian Shaw and Lawrence Grossmith all having parts in current scenes, with the unrehearsed assistance the other day of Noel Coward, who "walked on" and said a small piece.

All that remains to be shot of "Fire over England" at Denham is the Spanish Armada sequence and the Victor Saville "Dark Journey," in its sixth week, is also well on the way to completion.

Two hundred and fifty extras are being used for four days in one set representing a Stockholm hotel in the days of Swedish war prosperity. Vivian Leigh, Conrad Veidt and Anthony Bushell are the principals. Gorges Perinal, recently on "Rembrandt," is the cameraman.

Paderewski, Actor

Promised for "Moonlight Sonata," Lothar Mendes Pall Mall production, in progress at Denham, is that it will reveal the statesman-pianist, Ignace Paderewski, as an actor of quality. Paderewski has completed the piano recordings. The set shows a suite of rooms in a Swedish mansion, with a noble music-room chiefly in evidence. Charles Farrell and Barbara Green, with others of the company, are going for a week's location in Northumberland immediately.

Bi-Lingual Started

A fortnight's exterior work in Belgium for Maurice Elvey, director of "Widow's Island" for Julius Hagen's Twickenham company, has preceded studio work, at Hammersmith, on this bi-lingual in combination with Franco-London Films. A story by Mario Fort and Ralph Vanillo is being interpreted, in the English version, by a cast including Marcelle Chantal (also playing in the French version), Paul Cavanagh and Garry Marsh. The male lead in the French film will be Pierre Renoir and its director is Claud Heymann.

Miss Dietrich to Ascot

Marlene Dietrich, for her second day's work on "Knight Without Armour" for the Erich Pommer London Films production, went to the race course at Ascot, where Jacques Feyder, the director, was handling a scene reproducing the spectacle of social gaiety as Ascot saw it in 1913. Five hundred extras lined the rails of the course and the Royal Enclosure, entry to which is so anxiously sought by the social climber, was a veritable fashion parade.

Lieut. Col. Sir Gordon Carter, Clerk of the Course, greeted Miss Dietrich at the Royal Ascot Hotel, temporarily a dressing room.

Back at the studio at Denham they have built sets of Trans-Siberian railway stations and a Siberian prison camp for later scenes.

The Laemmles

Carl Laemmle, Jr., while here with his father from Paris, disposed of stories that he proposed to center his independent production plans in London. His activities here were mainly an intensive study of current play productions and he also had conversations with British authors and playwrights. [The Laemmles arrived in New York Monday on the Queen Mary.—Ed.]

Laemmle production in Hollywood, said Mr. Laemmle, would commence in February. He confirmed that James Whale had been definitely contracted to direct one picture. Also planned is a screen version of the Continental play success, "Nine Officers."

Visiting States

Paul Soskin, who heads the producing company bearing his name, was to leave for America Wednesday on the Normandie. He will remain in New York one week and spend three in Hollywood lining up talent for the first of four films he will produce here for Columbia.

Dudley Murphy also was to sail on the Normandie in search of three stars and two directors for the program planned for Associated Artists in which Leslie Howard is a principal. He will also seek a lead for "Bonnie Prince Charlie" and "The Martyr."

It is understood Associated has closed a deal with United Artists for distribution.

10 AND 15 PER CENT QUOTA ASKED TO STIMULATE ARGENTINE INDUSTRY

Institute's Honorary Technical Director Advocates Financing of Private Companies Until Government Takes It Over

by NATALIO BRUSKI
in Buenos Aires

A quota system for Argentina, under which importers or exhibitors of foreign product would be required during 1937 to buy one Argentine film for each 10 foreign, or 10 per cent, and during 1938 15 per cent, has been proposed to the Argentine Motion Picture Institute by Sr. Juan A. Bracamonte, commissioned with the president of the Argentine Cultural Committee of the government to make a study of the rules and regulations of the Institute and of the present and future extent of the State's participation in the industry. Sr. Bracamonte, recently appointed honorary technical director of the Institute, made his report to the Minister of Justice and Public Education.

Sr. Bracamonte advised that national production should be governmentally controlled but warned that the State as yet could not undertake the making of features. He said that in the future the Institute should be in a position to make pictures for school and army and navy instruction as well as for foreign propaganda.

In this report, which was accompanied by a plan of the rules and regulations of the Institute, Mr. Bracamonte said that his recommendations were prepared separately and independently of any that might be presented by Dr. Matias Sanchez Sorondo, who had been requested to make a similar study.

[Later dispatches report that Dr. Bracamonte has resigned following differences with Senator Sorondo.—Ed.]

Mr. Bracamonte went on to emphasize the importance of motion pictures as a means of spreading education, and said that President Wilson, fully aware of the future importance of this industry, exempted from World War military service many persons who were connected with the motion picture business. This measure, adopted with the idea of safeguarding from possible death the pioneers of the motion picture art, "won for the country a more decisive and important battle than the one waged in the trenches," Mr. Bracamonte added.

Years later Germany was faced with a national problem of the motion picture, he said, and Italy deputized the "Instituto Luce" to represent the Italian government and industry. England, France, Russia, Czechoslovakia, Spain and Portugal in Europe and Brazil and Chile also faced the problem by adopting measures to safeguard their home production.

Foreign capital has a huge market in this country, he said. The film trade represents annually $35,000,000, seventy per cent on North American films, the rest on several European countries.

Foreign organizations, he said, whenever a move has been made in the Argentine to study national control, have presented every obstacle possible in fear that the State might limit their activities.

He said it is impossible to continue being indifferent while Argentine "cinemansions" are being used as lecture rooms and propaganda for foreign ideas and interests of no direct benefit to the Argentine nation.

In his opinion, complete independence, as far as management and development is concerned, should be accorded to the Institute organization.

The State, he said, is certainly not in a position to enter upon production of long features which would require the advantages of large studios properly equipped in regard to photography and sound, scenery, and equipment, and would involve an expense of over 1,000,000 pesos. Special legislative authorization would be necessitated. Not in possession of all these facilities, the Government, in his opinion, should not assume the responsibility of putting on the market pictures that would not be worthy of the art. Temporarily, he advised, the matter should be placed in the hands of private companies, with government assistance.

Allusion was made to a few Argentine productions, some of which have been shipped abroad, where they hardly could be expected to create a favorable impression. Nevertheless, there are innumerable subjects typical of the country which could provide worthy material for the screen, he said. To this end he advocated governmental financing and control of the industry.

Mr. Bracamonte said that the Argentine Motion Picture Institute should, in future, be able to produce films for school and military instruction, and foreign propaganda.

The Institute, in his opinion, should deny or accord exhibition licenses to foreign product through a sub-committee composed of an official from the Institute, an eminent writer or intellectual and two school principals of both sexes. Acting on a reciprocity basis the Institute should demand that each one of the importing or exhibiting organizations of foreign films should acquire during 1937 Argentine films representing 10 per cent of those imported and exhibited under license of the Institute, and during 1938, 15 per cent. Mr. Bracamonte opposed importation of short product, but considered a newsreel weekly, fortnightly or monthly, would be interesting.

He recommended that prizes be given to stimulate the production of Argentine films, and that a film colony be founded in the suburbs of Buenos Aires.

In conclusion, Mr. Bracamonte said that, although he has never visited a foreign studio, he feels he has a definite picture of the very complex film problem and is thoroughly aware of its great possibilities.

U. A. to Distribute 6 Argentine Films

A contract has been closed in Buenos Aires providing for distribution by United Artists in Argentina and abroad of six films, to be produced by Portena Films, new Argentine company, headed by Adolfo Z. Wilson. The six will be delivered at the rate of one every two months to July 1 next. United Artists also has an option on six more.

The first will be "Mustafa," an old and popular play produced many times on the stage here. It will be directed by Armando Discepolo, one of the authors.

Portena has enlarged its studio and plans the production of ten pictures up to next July, including the six for UA. The remaining four will be for domestic release.

During August, which is the height of the film season in Argentina, 41 features were shown in this city, 32 of them American, seven European and two domestic.

20th-Fox Gets New Sound

Electrical Research Products, Inc., equipment of the latest design will be used by Twentieth Century-Fox on all new units now nearing completion. The studio has signed contracts for the complete modernization of six truck recording channels and re-recording equipment. Delivery will mark the first installation in any studio, it is said.

Century Planning Six

Century Pictures will make a series of six action films starring Yancey Lane, produced by H. A. Wohl. Plans call for Spanish versions to be released through a major company, but that deal has not been closed. Dickie Jones, child player, will be featured in the series.

B. F. Williams Reelected

B. F. Williams of San Francisco has been reelected president of the California Theatrical Federation. It is his 16th term as head of the organization. M. J. Sands, of the M. P. Operators' Union, Los Angeles, has been reelected vice-president.

Greenhouse to Far East

Daniel Greenhouse, former Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer manager at Colombia, S. A., has been transferred to the Far East by Arthur Loew. He will make his headquarters at Batavia, Java, Dutch East Indies.

Warner Studio Buys Land

Warner Brothers have completed the purchase of 30 acres of property adjoining the studio in Hollywood. The space will be used for outdoor sets.

JAPAN TO FINANCE PRODUCTION OF PICTURES FOR USE IN SCHOOLS

Advent of New Distributing Company Welcomed; Police Aid Invoked to Put Halt to Bicycling of Pictures

by CHIKUSHI TANI
in Tokyo

Minister Hirau of Education recently called for close conversation leading men of the industry at the Imperial Hotel, Tokyo, to express his idea of giving definite support to the production of domestic pictures by various private companies. He told the gathering that the Educational Office will provide a surplus sum in its 1937 budget for motion picture production in aid of our film producing companies.

According to subsequent information, a concrete plan has been initiated by the same office to augment the thoroughness of the national cinema education in every primary school of the country. The plan, which is now under way and intended for the geographical, historical, scientific and social education of the nation through motion pictures, will be referred to the council of the Educational Office for assignment of the budget for this item, which was to be held the end of August. The amount so far reported as assigned for this objective in the 1937 budget is Y600,000.

Now that the government has launched out a step further in the way of realizing national cinema education at all elementary schools of the country, this plan is generally expected to lead our motion picture industry to come into closer contact with the national education of the children. The proposed plan of the Educational Office is itemized as below:

1. Formation of film distributing leagues in every prefecture throughout the country, thereby to promote on a magnificent scale the distribution of educational, cultural and amusement pictures, newsreels, etc.

2. Production by the Educational Office of the aforesaid sorts of pictures on a large scale. Such pictures are to be distributed through the prefectural distributing leagues, and if possible, free of charges.

3. Reproduction of various outstanding pictures into 16mm. films which shall be distributed free of rental to anybody who desires to play them.

The above is to be considered an indication of the so-called positive cinema plan of the same office, in which they have thus been necessitated to take the initiative, as there have been few pictures of such sort available for children's and social education. Thus it is reported that the long discussed national cinema education is now keeping in closer touch with the motion picture industry.

New Company Formed

With the birth of a new distributing company, Toho Eiga Haikyu Kaisha, which went through official procedure of registration on July 3rd, the exhibition field of Japanese pictures in this country now may be said to operate under three leading distributing circuits, apart from small ones. The fact is that the rumor long in the air that Mr. I. Kobayashi will establish a new big distributing company came out true in the appearance of this organization with the full-paid capital of Y500,000 by joint investment of Tokyo Takarazuka, P. C. L. and J. O. Studio.

OVERBUILDING LEADS TO FREE ADMISSIONS

With an increase of 80 theatres in Japan during the past year held responsible for forcing admissions down to such an extent that, in one situation, admittance to theatres was placed on a gratis basis, fifty exhibitors, members of the East Tokyo branch of the Japan Exhibitors Guild, met recently and established minimum prices below which, it was agreed, none should go. A minimum of 30 sen was set for A theatres, 20 sen for the B group and 10 sen for the C classification.

Naturally, the new distributing company identifies itself with these three firms, its board of directors consisting of Mr. T. Uyemura of P. C. L., as president, and Messrs. Y. Ohzawa and T. Ohashi of J. O. Studio, Y. Yoshioka of Tokyo Takarazuka and K. Mura. The aim of the new company is to distribute the assortment of pictures supplied by P. C. L., J. O. and some other associated studios, at the monthly rate for P. C. L. of 4, and for J. O. of 1. Quantity of additional supply from the small associates is not definite yet.

This appearance of a new firm in the distribution field of Japanese pictures can be considered a threat to other existing big companies, such as Shochiku, Nikkatsu and Shinko, since it aims to control more theatres than previously by extending its network of circuit theatres throughout the country.

In connection with the new organization, exhibitors in this country are generally considered to be now ready to turn to the new company, provided, as generally expected, it operates on a more mutually profitable basis of deals between exhibitors and distributors, since the majority of the exhibitors have experienced great difficulty due to the so-called "tokuryo," or extra rental system existing between exhibitors and distributors of Japanese pictures in this country.

Generally, the production, distributing and exhibition fields of Japanese pictures are still at a standstill, and it is now generally expected that, encouraged by the challenge of this new distributing company, the motion picture industry, particularly the distribution field, will come into very strenuous activity commencing in the early autumn of the year.

Discourage Bicycling

In Japan there exists a practice of the so-called "kakemochi" playing, which means a sort of alternate playing of one picture between two or sometimes among three theatres situated comparatively near to one another. Such practice is, of course, thought justifiable only in case there is a definite arrangement between the exhibitors and the distributor who supplies the picture. Generally, this sort of alternate playing takes place when the distributor has not a sufficient quantity of prints on a certain picture available at a time for playing at more than one theatre. Accordingly, in the case like this, the "kakemochi" playing is done on mutual agreement of the theatres and distributor concerned, and the practice is doubtlessly legal.

Policy of Uniform Admission Scale Gaining Popularity; Majority of the Circuits See Virtue in Stabilized Price

This method, however, is often apt to lead small or local theatres to play pictures without any proper agreement with distributors, and such is, no doubt, a stealthy practice. This practice has been an annoyance to every distributing company of this country; naturally efforts have been made by distributors to eliminate the "kakemochi" playing without the knowledge of the distributor, who is supposed to have provided some picture to a theatre in the regular way, in whose neighborhood the unlawful free playing is being committed. As times grew harder, this practice became gradually more prevailing, particularly at local or ill-off theatres which are situated far beyond reach of the watchful eyes of distributors, until many theatres in the Tohoku and central districts of Japan came to boldly venture such dishonest acts often in recent months. The Health and Sanitary Pictures Association, Tokyo, disclosed for the first time the dishonest practice before its happening by aid of the local police of Akita Prefecture where there were many cases of similar misdemeanor.

Uniform Admission Favored

The uniform rate system of admission fees which was put into effect by Takarazuka circuit theatres three years ago is now catching popular interest of our exhibitors at large. Though the 50 sen flat admission fee at each of the Takarazuka circuit theatres had once been laughed to scorn, the general trend of our exhibiting public is now leaning towards a uniform rate of admission charges. For instance, the Imperial theatre established a new flat rate of 50 sen effective with the admission fee to students and military men only, for second and third classes of seats, this being generally thought a tentative counter-measure against Takarazuka's system.

Marunouchi Shochiku and two other theatres of Asakusa under management of Shochiku Company then lowered their former rate to 50 sen for seats on first and third floors, following in the footsteps of the Imperial theatre. Shinko Cinema theatres also are reported ready to initiate the similar system before long, whereas Nikkatsu appears to show no inclination to the establishment of uniform admission rates.

ANSWER TO QUESTION NO. 39

Question No. 39 was: (A) What is the effect of resistance in conductors? What becomes of power consumed in overcoming resistance, and why do wires become heated when over-loaded. (B) Describe an electrolytic condenser and tell us why it cannot be used on an a.c. circuit. (C) Explain why working distance and diameter of projection lenses may be of large importance.

The following made acceptable answers; C. Rau and S. Evans; D. H. Danielson; W. C. Brown; G. E. Doe; C. Oldham; H. Edwards; A. L. Cooper; R. and K. Wells; W. Limmroth; J. R. Prater; also these: W. G. E. Doe replies to Section A, "Resistance in conductors has the following various effects: (1) Causes loss of power equal to voltage drop times number of amperes flowing. (2) Rise in temperature of conductor. (3) Drop in both voltage and amperage. (4) Adds load to generator if amperage flow be maintained. (5) Increases fire hazard if temperature rise is extreme. (6) Controls amperage flow, as in case of projection arc. Resistance is essential to use of electric power, since without it there would be a short circuit.

"I think, however, the question is meant to deal only with ordinary effects, such as rise in temperature and loss of power, which latter is dissipated in the form of heat."

W. C. Brown says: "Resistance in conductors causes loss of power. The lower the resistance, the less the loss, or vice versa. Power lost in overcoming resistance in conductors is dissipated in the form of heat. When conductors are overloaded the loss of power becomes so great due to excessive resistance generated, that resultant high temperature cannot be dissipated fast enough and the conductor becomes overheated." .

(B) J. R. Prater says, "Electrolytic condensers consist of a plate of aluminum coated with a layer of insulating material and immersed in a conducting liquid or electrolyte. Such condensers cannot be used on a.c. circuits for the reason that polarity reversal destroys the layer of insulation, which is chemical in its nature, thus permitting the electrolyte to come into direct contact with the aluminum, and thus short-circuit the condenser."

W. Limmroth puts it tersely, as follows: "Electrolitic condensers consist of a plate of aluminum coated with chemical insulation to separate the aluminum from the conducting liquid in which it is immersed. Reversal of polarity destroys the insulating material, therefore such condensers cannot be used on a.c. circuits."

C. Rau and S. Evans answer, "Electrolytic condensers are somewhat similar to wet battery cells in that both have an electrolyte. In electrolytic condensers a chemical layer deposited upon an aluminum plate serves to insulate the latter from the electrolyte, in which the said plate is immersed. Such condensers cannot be used on straight a.c. circuits for the reason that if the current be of wrong polarity, the insulating material will be destroyed and the condenser short-circuited."

(C) O. H. Schmidt replies to this one thus: "Working distance and free diameter of projection lens may be of large importance when using certain types of condensing lenses, for the reason that the light beam beyond the aperture may not all be admitted to the projection lens, thus causing both light loss and increase of unevenness of screen illumination. If the beam does not all enter, then a lens of larger diameter is required, although under some conditions lens diameter may be arbitrarily limited. A longer focal length converging element will increase the distance of same from aperture and thus decrease diameter of beam beyond it, but this will automatically increase distance of light source from collector, hence the gain may be in part or wholly counterbalanced. The fact remains, however, that any narrowing of the beam that affects better pickup of it by the projection lens automatically provides more even screen illumination."

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 44

(A) Name the different things that affect the reflection power of screen surfaces, and do all white surfaces have equal reflection power?

(B) What effect does wrong distance of light source from mirror have (look on page 396)? Also how may the spherical mirror be correctly located?

To join the Bluebook School merely send in answers. Place name and question number upon first sheet. Address F. H. Richardson, No. 3 Tudor Lane, Scarsdale, N. Y.

H. Jones says, "Diameter and working distance of projection lenses are of large importance when the projectionist is confronted with a condition that makes it difficult to get the entire light beam into the projection lens. If the beam does not all enter the lens, the condition should be, so far as is possible, corrected by use of lens of larger diameter, or possibly one that may be used at shorter working distance. [Probably having reference to the lenses having an added lens combination, a three-element lens.—F. H. R.] Light wasted by failure to enter the lens costs money and makes for inferior results."

H. Edwards says, "Working distance and diameter of projection lens i sof high importance, especially under conditions where a long e.f. lens is required. This is true for the reason that the light beam diverges between aperture and lens, and under different conditions different diameters of projection lens will serve best, that latter referring to free diameter, of course. But this involves other problems, such as, for example, width of shutter blades, distance of converging element from aperture and, as a consequence, distance of light source from collector. Using conventional projection lenses, the working distance is of course automatically fixed. To alter it requires special lenses having more than two elements, and that in turn sets up other problems, all of which might, it seems to me, be wiped off the slate were some means devised for paralleling the light beam from film to projection lens, and especially now that rear shutters have reduced the fierce heat, it would seem our optical gentlemen might be able to accomplish this very sadly needed improvement."

CHICAGO FILM DEALS AWAIT FILING OF SUIT

Independents Expect Action to Bring Federal Inquiry Breaking Up "Trust Combinations"

by WILLIAM F. CROUCH
in Chicago

The "lull before the storm" prevailed in Chicago film circles this week as everyone awaited the filing of the proposed suit by Chicago independent exhibitors against Balaban & Katz and the large distribution companies. The suit, which is being prepared by Rosenberg, Toomin and Stein, and is expected to be filed within 10 days, will be an anti-trust suit which charges that B & K and the distributors are in contempt of court because, the independents allege, B & K and the distributors agreed not to adopt, publish and circulate a uniform system of clearance and zoning, according to the Consent Decree handed down in federal court in 1932 in the case of the Marx Brothers vs B & K and affiliated distributors.

The independents feel that their appeal to the Attorney General will result in a federal investigation which will break up what they term are "trust combinations" between the circuits and distributors.

In the meantime film deals with independents are said to be at a standstill. Negotiations in many instances are being carried on but the signing of contracts has been generally avoided until some satisfactory agreement regarding the clearance matter is reached.

The Essaness circuit had "To Mary—With Love," the first of the new 1936-'37 product to reach an independent theatre, booked into the Sheridan theatre last Sunday. Because the Essaness contract for Twentieth Century-Fox new season product was unsigned, the picture did not play the theatre and "Walking On Air," a Radio picture for 1935-'36, was rushed in. Both the distributor and circuit executives said the picture probably would be set in at a later date. All Twentieth Century-Fox contracts have the clause regarding the extended playing time and it was this which caused the change in plans, as Essaness did not wish to buy the product on that basis and the distributor refused to sell on any other basis. The Sheridan is in the "B" week release classification and not the "C" week, which is the center of contention in the clearance fight.

The suit which the independents plan to file will also ask that B & K be restrained from starting double features here. They have announced they plan to do that within a few weeks.

The November releases which have just been announced for the "first week of release" theatres have four new 1936-'37 pictures slated. They are spread out over the month, however, and as a result the independents will not be pressed for product until December, from the looks of things. By that time it is expected that the clearance situation will be cleared up, or at least some understanding reached which will allow the independent exhibitors to get the new season's product when they need it.

John Balaban told the HERALD this week that B & K will carry out its plan to start double-features this fall, probably within the next few weeks, as enough pictures then will be available for the outlying theatres.

Inability to get all new product, and enough of it, to supply the B & K neighborhood theatres has been the cause of the delay in starting doubles here. Not since 1932 has Chicago had double features. The plan was dropped in October, 1932, after 18 months of operation interluded with bitter fights between circuit and independent theatremen.

New Product on 2,000-Foot Reels

Although the local operators' union and the city ordinance are both, for various reasons, opposed to the new 2,000-foot reel as adopted by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Chicago exchange managers have issued letters to theatre owners here that all new product will be sent to them on the 2,000-foot reels.

The city ordinance states that all reels must be small enough to allow one-inch clearance between the outer edge of the reel and the inner edge of the magazine. This makes it impossible to use the 14½-inch reel issued by the distributors with the standard 16-inch magazine. The films will have to be rewound on to 14-inch reels or new magazines of larger size used by the exhibitor. The exhibitors say both plans are unsatisfactory.

The Chicago operators' union prohibits its men from running reels of film over 1,000 feet in length. As a result the film must be cut, rewound and leaders added before it can be shown properly and according to the regulations. If this situation is allowed to exist it is expected that much film will be ruined through so much handling, and it is this that probably will force the issue between the union and the distributor. The city ordinance situation is expected to be ironed out satisfactorily before use of the long reels becomes general.

Last week the Chicago Motion Picture Operators Union and Chicago exhibitors, both circuit and independent, compromised their battle over a new contract for the coming year and made out a pact patterned after the one in force last year.

No increases or decreases in the wage scale were granted and the only changes in the contract, compared to last year's are of minor importance and concern only isolated cases. The operators at a general meeting last week ratified the contract and it was adopted.

Morris Leonard represented the Chicago Exhibitors Association and Aaron Saperstein the independent exhibitors. Frank Clifford represented the union.

Dennison Heads Publicists

Craig E. "Sonny" Dennison was elected president of the Chicago Amusement Publicists Association (CAPA) at its fall election last week. Dennison is an advertising man. James Luntzel of B & K was named vice-president; Irving Mack, of Filmack Trailers, secretary; Harry K. Smythe, treasurer; Ted Morris, theatre manager, director of publicity, and Calvin Hermer, tradepaper reporter, sergeant-at-arms.

The amusement men are planning a fall festival to start the season's social activities.

Midwest Theatre Supply Company after October first will occupy office space in the building at 1223 South Wabash avenue.

Mort D. Goldberg, Chicago attorney, has been named president of the G-C-S theatre circuit here. Goldberg replaces Leo A. Solomon, who has sold his stock in the company. Aaron Courshon is vice-president under the new arrangement and Arthur Greene and I. B. Perlman are directors.

Mr. Solomon will center his interests on construction of his new Stadium theatre in Evanston.

The sales force for Grand National pictures has been completed, said Earl Silverman, Chicago branch manager. Ben Eisenberg and Joe Hartman will do the city selling, while Harry Charness and Harry Lotz, Jr., will handle the country sales. William Lyman is office manager and Miss Ada Pearson is the PBX-pert.

THERE'S REAL COMPETITION AHEAD FOR U. S. NEWSREELS IN HOLLAND

Dutch Indian Newsreel Company Formed by Joint Effort of 15 Concerns; Films Are To Be Airmailed to Amsterdam

New Organization Also Plans to Start Feature Productions Immediately; Several Pictures in Work Show Improvement

by PH. DE SCHAAP
in Amsterdam

American newsreels always have met with a fair and successful interest on the part of the Dutch theatre owners as well as the public. Nearly all the Dutch cinemas weekly give their short picture news from American sources, especially from Paramount and Fox.

Now, however, Dutch business has brought a Dutch newsreel in sound into the field. Many efforts in the silent era to release a domestic newsreel failed because it lacked interest and technical perfection.

Fortunately for the foreign product, including the UFA newsreel, the Dutch coverage was only of Holland, and the necessity of foreign, especially European, news remained. Together with the weekly Dutch newsreel always an American or German one was booked by the theatre managers. The customers of an American production company ordered their newsreels from the same booking office.

New possibilities of heavy competition began with importation of a French newsreel, the "Eclair," but the popularity of the U. S. A. product continued.

Now the following newsreels are in circulation in Holland:

Fox and Paramount from America (by special arrangement between Fox and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, M-G-M did not release its Metrotone-news; the contract expired some months ago, but probably Metro will not release a newsreel here); UFA News (UFA has theatres in Amsterdam and The Hague, and also sells the newsreel to some of the Dutch theatres); Eclair News, of French origin, and two Dutch newsreels, "Polygoon" at Haarlem and "Profilti" at The Hague. "Polygoon" is the more important of these two.

Further competition is arising with announcement of Dutch Indian Newsreels. Although these would not cover general European or international fields, their influence should not be undervalued, the Dutch Indies being of great importance to the American companies. The Indies are extended Dutch colonies, and the existence of an Indian newsreel in Holland detailing Indian life, from Dutch colonies in which enormous Dutch capital is incorporated, in which many Dutchmen are living, is justified. Until now, only occasionally have Indian news pictures been seen in the Dutch theatres, but a regular newsreel is being prepared for early appearance.

In the Dutch Indies fifteen companies have joined to establish the Algemeen Nederlandsch-Indisch Filmsyndicaat (General Dutch-Indian Motion picture Trust) in Batavia, India's capital, with F. Brandenburg van Oltsende, managing also the Indian press office, Aneta, as its president. The producer will be A. H. E. C. Balink, who came to Holland to discuss the matter with several officials.

JAPANESE ENFORCE BAN ON KISSING

American and other films portraying kissing scenes "beyond official discretion" will be banned hereafter from Japan. The Government's order was the beginning of a campaign to purify motion pictures entering Japan which authorities feel have a tendency to degrade morals, create dangerous thoughts or misrepresent life, according to the authorities.

The results of his negotiations are as follows:

The company intends to produce pictures and will start with a weekly newsreel, especially made for the Indias and Holland, and with educationals and pictorials. Production of features also is planned.

Mr. Balink is well known in Holland for having made the feature "Pareh, Song of the Rice" in cooperation with M. H. K. Franken. The motion picture will be released here within a short time.

Other companies will be able to produce in the studios of the Alg. Ned. Indisch Film-Syndicaat, and this company will establish an exchange with Dutch or foreign pictures.

The studios are in Batavia. The staff will be formed of European and Indian domestic employees.

Filming India until now has been in the hands of America and Germany. But the new company will import pictures, newsreels as well as features, of technical value and of higher quality than the pictures produced by the Dutch domestic industry.

In December the first production results will reach Holland. The representative in Holland will be "Profilti," the same company now producing newsreels. This company will arrange distribution in Holland.

Forwarded by airmail, the Indian newsreels will reach Holland within a few days.

Stockholders of the Algem. Ned-Indisch Filmsyndicaat are the Koninklijke Paketvaart-Mij., a shipping company, the Ned.-Indische Escompto Mij. and Ned.-Handel-Mij., prominent banking firms, Bataafsche Petroleum-Mij., Ned-Koloniale Petroleum Mij., Ned.-Indische Levensverzekering en Lijfrente Mij. (N. I. L. L. M. IJ., a life assurance company), and Radio Holland, the Dutch Telegraph Company. The concern will cooperate with several other companies in India, especially for financial participation.

The Dutch domestic industry also began hopefully, but in spite of a successful start proved not to be able to compete with the foreign companies. However, with the new company producing short product and newsreels, its influence may be of more importance. The position of the American market will not become easier with the new competition.

Dutch producers now see new opportunities. Several pictures are in production, mostly based on well known stories or novels. This week, for example, the premiere of a new Dutch picture, "Rubber," took place in Amsterdam, The Hague and Rotterdam, in seven theatres at the same time. This should prove that the Dutch theatres are not pessimistic about Dutch pictures. Indeed, a small improvement in the quality of the Dutch productions is apparent. Besides, "Rubber" is a well known novel here; its story is centered in the Indias, and a stage play of the same title was well received about two years ago. Among other pictures in production or planned is "De Man zonder Hart" (The Man Without a Heart), to be played by Dutch actors and with Dutch dialogue, but to be produced in the Paris studio Photo Sonore by French Europe Film Company.

Others in production are "Een Zomerzotheid" (Summer Folly), a well known story, under the direction of Otto van Neyonhoff, with music from Leo Smit, the filming to be finished in October; "Amsterdam bij nacht" (Amsterdam at Night), director, A. Benno, who has made other Dutch pictures; "De comedie van het geluk" (Comedy of Happiness), under direction of Gerard Rutten, producer of "Dood Water" (Dead Water), the story of the disappearing Zuiderzea, shown at the Biennial in 1935). The continuity of "Rubber" was written by Hans Rameau, who wrote also the continuity of "Mazurka." "Amsterdam at Night" will be made in the Amsterdam Cinetone-studios.

Dutch Film Completed

Production of a new Dutch picture is just completed: "Merijntje Gijzen's Jeugd" (The Youth of Merijntje Gijzen), the story of which is a best seller here. The director was Kurt Gerron, former German actor (in "The Blue Angel," with Marlene Dietrich), shot in the Filmstad studio at Wassenaar. Max Tak, who had the musical direction of several preceding Dutch pictures, did the musical illustration. "Morijntje Gijzen's Jeugd" will have its first showing in the Amsterdam City theatre.

A Dutch picture completed some time ago and sent to the 1936 Venice Biennial is "Jonge Harten" (Young Hearts), undoubtedly one of the best pictures produced thus far and curiously not an "industry picture," but intended as an "avent garde" production.

The future of the domestic industry remains uncertain. Nevertheless, with a single exception the acting, direction and technical qualities are below average, but it should be possible that a change is coming.

Allied

LOCAL BAD MAN: Hoot Gibson—Gibson reissue that pleased. Sound a little spotty but not bad. Running time, 62 minutes. Played September 18-19.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

Columbia

AND SO THEY WERE MARRIED: Melvyn Douglas, Mary Astor, Edith Fellows—Just an average program picture. What comedy there was was supplied by a couple of clever kids, Jackie Moran and Edith Fellows. Miss Fellows is a cute little trick and the little lady can act. They really saved the picture, otherwise it would not have been much. Mary's diary was not apparent in the picture.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

AND SO THEY WERE MARRIED: Mary Astor, Melvyn Douglas—Picture title didn't sound too inviting, but after getting them in they enjoyed this rip snorting comedy yarn. Picture is well directed, good settings and well cast. The two juveniles cause all the fun and steal the show. Played September 20-22.—Donald Visger, Liberty Theatre, Kennewick, Wash. General patronage.

AVENGING WATERS: Ken Maynard—We have a good clientele for westerns on Saturday night. They are not hard to please but we had several criticize this attraction. No action until the last reel. Played September 19.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

CALLING OF DAN MATTHEWS, THE: Richard Arlen, Charlotte Wynters—This got by on Saturday. Readers informed me that it bore little resemblance to the original story.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

KING STEPS OUT, THE: Franchot Tone, Grace Moore—Good singing by good looking Grace Moore. Not a big draw here. When Grace Moore has her mouth open with song, a CCC boy hollers "Toss her a fish." Ride 'em, cowboy, suits more people than high C. Played September 26-27.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

KING STEPS OUT, THE: Grace Moore, Franchot Tone—If you can only convince your patrons that this is popular entertainment and can get them in, they will thank you. The picture has everything, grand comedy, entrancing music, and, being fast-paced, there is not a dull moment, but so many of our regulars sidestepped it that we played to the lowest Sunday business in six months. Too bad; it was a swell show. Running time, 86 minutes. Played September 20-22.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

LONE WOLF RETURNS, THE: Melvyn Douglas, Gail Patrick—Good Saturday melodrama.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MR. DEEDS GOES TO TOWN: Gary Cooper, Jean Arthur—This Capra masterpiece which I had heard so much about did not do the business I expected it to. I thought it rather slow to get underway. We did extra business, but have played to bigger crowds on a Monday-Tuesday.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

First National

BRIDES ARE LIKE THAT: Ross Alexander, Anita Louise—Lively comedy drama.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

EARTHWORM TRACTORS: Joe E. Brown, June Travis—Splendid entertainment. A riot of a comeedy. Running time, 68 minutes. Played September 18-19.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

GB

IT'S LOVE AGAIN: Jessie Matthews, Robert Young—Poorest Matthews' picture we have played. Have taken a beating on all GB product and this is no exception, notwithstanding it was supported by a strong action companion picture. Running time, 79 minutes. Played September 16-17.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

Grand National

TOO MUCH BEEF: Rex Bell—Not so hot. Not much story or action. Running time, 60 minutes. Played September 11-12.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

FURY: Sylvia Sidney, Spencer Tracy—This picture is mostly designed to show what mob hysteria can do if it goes unchecked. A gripping drama has been built around this theme. All the players do perfect work. A truly outstanding part is that of Walter Abel as the attorney. I do not recall more forceful work on the part of an attorney in a courtroom scene. This picture did below average at this theatre.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

GREAT ZIEGFELD, THE: William Powell—Maybe not the greatest film ever produced but it ranks right up on top. Some may think it too long but it should click in any situation. Business capacity. Played September 19-21.—H. A. Griswold, Sewanee-Union Theatre, Sewanee, Tenn. University patronage.

SMALL TOWN GIRL: Janet Gaynor, Robert Taylor—Very pleasing picture; Gaynor's best role in years. I wish some daring scenarist would evolve a plot which didn't hinge on a drunken scene; it might surprise the producers and make a hit with the populace.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SMILIN' THROUGH: Norma Shearer, Leslie Howard—Play it again. I doubt if this picture will ever grow old. It is still one of the five most beautiful pictures and did for us what many socalled specials didn't. Played August 17-18-19.—Mrs. E. L. Tait, Lauder Theatre, Mount Forest, Ontario, Canada. Small town patronage.

SUZY: Jcan Harlow, Franchot Tone, Cary Grant—It is a better picture than the title would indicate. A semi-spy story laid in France with some war sequences. It moves right along, mostly drama, no comedy. The audience liked the picture and that is all that matters.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

WIFE VERSUS SECRETARY: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy, Jean Harlow—Boy, how the ladies went for this one! It's a swell dish for any class of audience.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Paramount

AND SUDDEN DEATH: Randolph Scott, Frances Drake—Lots of exploitation possibilities on this one. Just fair business for us. Paramount went "softic" on it from the article the picture is taken from, but will do some business if it had good program support. Played August 18-20.—Donald Visgcr, Liberty Theatre, Kennewick, Wash. General patronage.

DESERT GOLD: Larry Crabbe, Marsha Hunt—Better than the average picture of this type and drew well against the worst kind of competition. Tent show here and big homecoming celebration in neighboring village. I believe Paramount makes the best westerns, considering a period of several years.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

EARLY TO BED: Mary Boland, Charles Ruggles—We struck a very hot period for "Early to Bed" and consequently business was off ten to fifteen per cent. Very satisfactory. Played September 23-24.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

GENERAL DIED AT DAWN, THE: Gary Cooper—Even some of the faculty are asking what it was all about. Cast will bring them in, however. Played September 16-17.—H. A. Griswold, Sewanee-Union Theatre, Sewanee, Tenn. University patronage.

HANDS ACROSS THE TABLE: Carole Lombard, Fred MacMurray—This pleased the Sunday crowd.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

LADY BE CAREFUL: Lew Ayres, Mary Carlisle—Good entertainment. Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 16-17.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

MARY BURNS, FUGITIVE: Sylvia Sidney, Melvyn Douglas—No comedy relief in this. Sylvia Sidney should not be forced into these sobby roles, for she isn't pretty when she cries.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MARY BURNS, FUGITIVE: Sylvia Sidney—Played this old, but not at all sorry, as business was a good average and picture very good. Had quite a number of fine compliments on this one.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

MARY BURNS, FUGITIVE: Sylvia Sidney—A very good action picture with a slant on the gangland and all that happens in a murder mystery. Good for any week night. Not recommended for Sunday. Business off. Running time, nine reels. Played September 23.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

RHYTHM ON THE RANGE: Bob Burns, Bing Crosby, Frances Farmer, Martha Raye—A natural for business. A star for every movie taste and grand work by all of them. A riot of fun and a picture that will go over if you do your part on the publicity. Played August 30-September 1.—Donald Visger, Liberty Theatre, Kennewick, Wash. General patronage.

SKY PARADE: Jimmy Allen, Katharine DeMille—Much better than I expected after reading several rather mediocre reports. In fact, a darn good little show and positively no kicks and a better than average midweek draw. What more can you want?—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

TOO MANY PARENTS: Frances Farmer, Billy Lee—An unusually fine attraction. I almost passed this up. Really one of the best pictures I have used midweek in 1936. The kind of a picture that is hard to get them in to, but how they love it. Not a kick in a million. Better small town entertainment than most of the super-specials.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE, THE: Henry Fonda, Sylvia Sidney—This is a beautiful picture with great box-office appeal. The only criticism came from book-lovers, who said that John Fox, Jr., wrote a much better story with the same title, locale, and some of the principal characters some twenty odd years ago.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

YOURS FOR THE ASKING: George Raft, Dolores Costello Barrymore—The supporting cast entitled to the honors, if any, in this picture. Only fair weekend business. Running time, 68 minutes. Played September 18-19.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

Puritan

KENTUCKY BLUE STREAK: Eddie Nugent—Fair racetrack story. OK for double bill. Running time, 60 minutes. Played September 9-10.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

Republic

GIRL FROM MANDALAY, THE: Kay Linaker, Conrad Nagel—Good picture for double bill. Jungle drama with a few thrill scenes. Running time, 63 minutes. Played September 9-10.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

LEATHERNECKS HAVE LANDED, THE: Lew Ayres, Isabel Jewell—Good action picture of the marines in China. You can't go wrong on this one. Played September 23-24.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

NAVY BORN: William Gargan, Claire Dodd—A lively action comedy that got by on Sunday.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

NAVY BORN: William Gargan, Claire Dodd—Good picture. Used on double bill. Running time, 66 minutes. Played September 16-17.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

TUMBLING TUMBLEWEEDS: Gene Autry, Lucile Browne—Just another western; O. K. for Saturday.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

BRIDE WALKS OUT, THE: Barbara Stanwyck, Gene Raymond—Good entertainment with a good cast. Picture not outstanding but leads are popular here, so played to fair business. Running time, 80 minutes. Played September 13-15.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

EX-MRS. BRADFORD, THE: William Powell, Jean Arthur—Not as good as expected. Some disappointed and a few walkouts. Recording not up to standard. Running time, 81 minutes. Played September 20-22. —M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinville, Ore. Local patronage.

FOLLOW THE FLEET: Ginger Rogers, Fred Astaire—Very good show with too many dark scenes that the light won't project any more than a mere ghost. Like figures in the dark. Otherwise OK. Running time, 12 reels. Played September 20-21.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

LET'S SING AGAIN: Bobby Breen—Good picture for any place, town or country. Wonderful singing by Bobby Breen. Interesting all the way through. Drew good attendance. Played September 5.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

M'LISS: Anne Shirley, John Beal—A good homespun movie, not too appealing to the younger class of patrons, but liked by the older folks. Bret Harte, author angle, will help to sell it. Sincere and good performance by the cast. Played September 1-3.—Donald Visger, Liberty Theatre, Kennewick, Wash. General patronage.

SILLY BILLIES: Wheeler and Woolsey—Poorest W. and W. ever turned out. Not nearly as many good gags as former attractions by these two stars and the laughs were considerably separated. However, the box office said, nice business. In fact, this outdrew pictures like "Under Two Flags," "Dark Angel," "Little Lord Fauntleroy," "Message to Garcia." Hope these boys get stronger material for their coming pictures.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

SPECIAL INVESTIGATOR: Richard Dix—A fair production. No special drawing power. Probably not up to the average Dix picture. Played September 19. —George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

SWING TIME: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—Picture not up to standard, business not up to standard. Played September 24-25.—H. A. Griswold, Sewanee-Union Theatre, Sewanee, Tenn. University patronage.

WALKING ON AIR: Gene Raymond, Ann Sothern—Good picture. No draw. Lost my socks.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

Twentieth Century - Fox

CHARLIE CHAN AT THE CIRCUS: Warner Oland—Drew a better than average crowd. Played September 23-24.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

CONNECTICUT YANKEE, A: Will Rogers—Drew well for us and was greatly enjoyed, judging from the applause. Not the best of his pictures, but full of fun and farce. Played August 29.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

COUNTRY DOCTOR, THE: Dionne Quintuplets, Jean Hersholt—A very entertaining picture that did good business against county fair competition.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

EVERYBODY'S OLD MAN: Irvin S. Cobb, Rochelle Hudson—One exhibitor reported (September 19) "a waste of film." For me. one of the best liked pictures of the year. Comments were numerous and all very favorable. Attendance was also a little above average, which is unusual on what is rated only a program picture. Same story as "The Working Man" by Warners about four years ago. When my "hardest to please" come and tell me "Swell Show" it must be very much OK. Come again, Cobb!—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

EVERY SATURDAY NIGHT: June Lang, Thomas Beck—A very good family picture which attracted normal business in spite of rain. Played September 12.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

GIRLS' DORMITORY: Simone Simon, Herbert Marshall—Simone Simon, a new star, the men went for more than the women. If she had a better story to work with than this one, she should mean box office. This picture lacks the zip to make it a real hit. Will do business on first day, but didn't hold up in this town of severe critics. Played September 13-14.—Donald Visger, Liberty Theatre, Kennewick, Wash. General patronage.

KING OF BURLESQUE, THE: Warner Baxter, Alice Faye—Lots of entertainment here.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

LITTLE MISS NOBODY: Jane Witbers—Jane's best yet, to mine and the customers' opinion. More of a cast story in this one for her to display her talent on. Played September 18-19.—Donald Visger, Liberty Theatre, Kennewick, Wash. General patronage.

MESSAGE TO GARCIA, A: Wallace Beery, John Boles, Barbara Stanwyck—Absorbing action drama; fair Saturday business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

O'MALLEY OF THE MOUNTED: George O'Brien —Best picture we had the pleasure to see George O'Brien in since "Whispering Smith Speaks." Good for any night including Sunday. Business fair. Running time, seven reels. Played September 25-26.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

O'MALLEY OF THE MOUNTED: George O'Brien, Irene Ware—Just an ordinary western. Hardly up to the average, and without much drawing power. Played September 12.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

PEPPER: Jane Withers—Just the type Withers fans like to see. Cobb and Summerville help put it over to good audience reaction. This kid will go places if they give her a chance.—E. C. Arebart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

POOR LITTLE RICH GIRL, THE: Sbirley Temple, Alice Faye—She still pulls them in, her appeal is still with her, but she is not doing the standout business that she did in her earlier pictures. I don't blame Fox for reaping the harvest while she still is small but I do think that they are giving her too many pictures each season.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

POOR LITTLE RICH GIRL: Shirley Temple—Another natural for business due to Shirley's name, but I can't say it is her best, nor do the patrons. Well done in every respect, but lacks some of the color of some of her others. Patrons losing their pep for Shirley unless they give her something new and different. Played August 23-25.—Donald Visger, Liberty Theatre, Kennewick, Wash. General patronage.

PRISONER OF SHARK ISLAND, THE: Warner Baxter, Gloria Stuart—A grim bit of realism. The school asked for a special matinee on this because of its historical accuracy and importance.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

PRIVATE NUMBER: Robert Taylor, Loretta Young—Good show enjoyed by everybody, with some comedy relief every now and then. Acting very good. You can always depend on Robert to please the cash customers. Running time, nine reels. Played September 18-19.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

PRIVATE NUMBER: Loretta Young, Robert Taylor—Here is a picture to gladden the hearts of romance lovers. The Rich Man marrying the servant in secret. With such perfect lovers as Robert Taylor and Loretta Young and the smooth, perfect villainy of Basil Rathbone, everybody had a grand time. Having seen it before showing it, I got behind it and the result was above average business.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

ROAD TO GLORY, THE: Fredric March, Warner Baxter—What its producers hoped would be a great picture turned out only fair, and it's difficult to tell just what's wrong with it. Perhaps it's the unnecessary inclusion of Lionel Barrymore's role into the story. Barrymore, himself, gives his usual creditable performance, but there seems to be little excuse for such a role. Even its intention as sentiment is not justified. Perhaps it's the picture's similarity, in some instances, to "Journey's End," yet not comparing with that production. Whatever it is, "Road to Glory" just fails to click. You look for something big, and it lets you down. Baxter is excellent. March doesn't have a meaty role such as he has had in his past few successes. The war angle made our patrons shy away from the ticket machine and, as a result, business was nothing outstanding. Running time, 101 minutes. Played September 27-30.—Ralph Cokain, Indiana Theatre, Marion, Indiana. General patronage.

SING, BABY, SING: Adolphe Menjou, Alice Faye —In my opinion, this is an excellent comedy, but much of its humor seems to be over the heads of the average small town audience. The resemblance in plot to a certain star's affair that was recently publicized on the front pages of newspapers throughout the country was especially strong, although the producers insist that the story and characters are entirely fictional. Those who had this recent affair in mind doubtlessly enjoyed the picture. Others just couldn't seem to grasp it. Regardless, the picture is excellent entertainment, and the Ritz Brothers are extremely funny. Either the picture is very good or very poor, depending on your audience. Running time, 87 minutes. Played September 20-23.—Ralph Cokain, Indiana Theatre, Marion, Ind. General patronage.

SINS OF MAN: Jean Hersholt, Don Ameche—Many tears are shed by the audience during the showing of this picture. Jean Hersholt sure takes a lot of grief in one picture, but the glorious happy ending more than makes up for all the grief. If ever there was a happy ending to gladden the heart after much suffering, you will find it in this. Don Ameche shows much promise. Jean Hersholt is, of course, perfect in the role. A small bit by Allen Jenkins is outstanding. Our Sunday business on this was a fair average; above average on Monday, due, no doubt, to word of mouth advertising.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

TO MARY—WITH LOVE: Myrna Loy, Warner Baxter, Ian Hunter—A picture very well done but not so good at the box office for us. Some thought it too extreme in places. Story drags in places and makes picture seem too long. This one should do better in larger towns. Played September 23-25.—Donald Visger, Liberty Theatre, Kennewick, Wash. General patronage.

UNDER TWO FLAGS: Victor McLaglen, Claudette Colbert, Ronald Colman—This pleased about half of the rather limited attendance. Any picture to be successful in a small town must please a lot more than half of the patrons. Personally I thought it very dull. The love scenes were too drawn out. Altogether one big disappointment. Running time, 110 minutes.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

UNDER TWO FLAGS: Victor McLaglen, Ronald Colman, Claudette Colbert—They tried to make one of the best of all time. Money, skill, talent, was poured out like water, but at this theatre it was a box office failure. When a picture flops a theatreman becomes a little more critical, so here are some of my criticisms. The sympathy of the audience was entirely with Claudette Colbert and the tragic ending was not taken kindly. The greatest part of the cast of the picture were for the battle scenes, but slaughter and courage were never entertainment. There is a good deal to entertain in the picture but we feel more kindly for a picture if it makes a little money for us. —J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

WHITE FANG: Michael Whalen, and the dog—The small town audience goes for these outdoor pictures and this was no exception. It was well liked and had the action that is so necessary for the weekend shows.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

United Artists

DARK ANGEL, THE: Fredric March, Merle Oberon—Our patrons like western and action pictures but they sniffed and sobbed at this one and enjoyed it. Good business for rainy weather. Running time, 102 minutes. Played September 23-24.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

LITTLE LORD FAUNTLEROY: Freddie Bartholomew, Dolores Costello Barrymore—Perfect acting, but disappointed us at the box office. Our weekend gross was down 30 per cent. Our farmers want their westerns.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

STRIKE ME PINK: Eddie Cantor—Excellent. Cantor always draws more than enough to pay the extra rental we pay for his pictures. Running time, 87 minutes. Played September 13-14-15.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

THESE THREE: Merle Oberon, Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea—A grand show for the better classes and satisfactory entertainment for the average fan. However, I heard a "low-brow" remark on the way out, "Worst show I ever saw." This was more than offset, however, by the numerous fine comments.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

THINGS TO COME: Raymond Massey—Not a known name in the cast that meant a thing to the public. A lot of money was spent on futuristic settings, and English made, besides. That tells the story and the business that "Things to Come" did, about half what an ordinary program picture would have grossed, besides not pleasing the audience that were inveigled into seeing it by the elaborate trailer. It is my understanding that the B. P. do make some good pictures.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Universal

LOVE BEFORE BREAKFAST: Carole Lombard, Preston Foster—Pleasing comedy drama; business just so-so.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

NEXT TIME WE LOVE: Margaret Sullavan, James Stewart—Too sad and sobby for my people; poor business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

REMEMBER LAST NIGHT: Edward Arnold, Robert Young—Remember last night? I'll say we do. We'll never forget it. Really, it's the most amateurish thing we have ever run. Scrap it by all means and be thankful that you did. Running time, 89 minutes.—Mrs. E. L. Tait, Lauder Theatre, Mount Forest, Ontario, Canada. Small town patronage.

SHOW BOAT: Irene Dunne, Allan Jones—Our business jumped up somewhat for "Show Boat," which our patrons did not hesitate to praise without stint. This is certainly a credit to Universal. Played September 16-17.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

STORMY: Noah Beery, Jr.—This picture pleased all who saw it. Ran it on a double bill but this was the one that was talked about. We can be truthful in saying this is one of the nicest program pictures we have ever run. Running time, 68 minutes. Played September 17-18-19.—Mrs. E. L. Tait, Lauder Theatre, Mount Forest, Ontario, Canada. Small town patronage.

YELLOWSTONE: Henry Hunter—The way this drew extra business was a pleasant surprise as I found so many patrons had traveled through this park and wanted to see the picture. Scenery swell. No kicks on the story. Nothing big, but satisfactory. Running time, seven reels.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

Victory

DANGER AHEAD: Lawrence Grey—Lots of action and comedy overcome weak story. OK for double bill. Running time, 58 minutes. Played September 16-17.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

Warner Brothers

ANTHONY ADVERSE: Fredric March—A natural for my community. It went over so well I am bringing it back for a repeat run October 5. Played September 3-4.—H. A. Griswold, Sewanee-Union Theatre, Sewanee, Tenn. University patronage.

BOULDER DAM: Ross Alexander, Patricia Ellis—Fair business on Bank Night. I was criticized severely because this didn't show more shots of Boulder Dam.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

COLLEEN: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler, Joan Blondell, Jack Oakie—Fair midweek business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

I MARRIED A DOCTOR: Pat O'Brien, Josephine Hutchinson—A very good dramatization of Sinclair Lewis' story; and just as in the original Dr. Will stands out like a lighthouse in a fog.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SONS O' GUNS: Joe E. Brown—While this may be somewhat below the average of the Joe E. Brown pictures, it is still mighty good entertainment, treating of the funny side of the war, and of a soldier's experience. Judging by the reaction of the audience they all seemed to enjoy it, but strange to say the drawing power of this was below the usual Joe E. Brown pictures. Maybe the title had something to do with it.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

TRAILIN' WEST: Dick Foran—I am not a western fan. I have always considered westerns the best example of the world's worst acting and poor direction. So it was with no little reluctance that I sat down to catch a few glimpses of "Trailin' West." I stayed to see all of it. Granted that all these Warner Brothers westerns are produced in the same manner, there is no doubt but that they are superior to others. "Trailin' West" has a logical story well developed, with suspense that builds to a smashing climax. Its characters are actors, not hams. It has an interpretative musical score that fits every mood of action. It has beautiful photography. It is one of the very few westerns that I have ever enjoyed. If other producers would put into their westerns what Warners have put into "Trailin' West" there would be more and better westerns. Business was outstanding. Running time, 56 minutes. Played September 25-26.—Ralph Cokain, Indiana Theatre, Marion, Ind. General patronage.

WALKING DEAD, THE: Boris Karloff—We played to as big a house on this picture as "Mr. Deeds," which played the two previous nights. These horror pictures seem to have a following that like them.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

FROM THE BRINK OF ETERNITY: Voice of Experience—Poorest of the series so far. Running time, nine minutes.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

NOVELTY SHOP, THE: Color Rhapsodies—A fine colored cartoon. Will rank with the best.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

PLAYING POLITICS: Scrappy cartoon—A good black and white cartoon.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SHARE THE WEALTH: Broadway Comedy—A very good two-reel comedy.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Educational

HAPPY HEELS: Buster West, Tom Patricola—Best two-reeler we had for a long time. Full of music, dancing and laughter. Play it and smile. These two boys are sure the knockout for entertainment. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

KIKO AND THE HONEY BEARS: Paul Terry-Toon—A very fine black and white cartoon.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

OFF TO CHINA: Terry-Toons—Good cartoon. Will please the junior audience anytime. Running time, one reel.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

RADIO RASCALS: Song and Comedy Hits Series—Extraordinary one-reeler with lots of talent to put on a good entertainment. Running time, one reel.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

SEEING NELLIE HOME: Song and Comedy Hits—An excellent Saturday filler. Barn dance, hunting

CRITICS ACCLAIM FRED SCOTT IN SPECTRUM'S NEW MUSICAL WESTERN
"ROMANCE RIDES THE RANGE"
A CALLAGHAN-BUELL PRODUCTION

HERE'S WHAT THEY SAY!

Film Daily—NICELY PRODUCED MUSICAL WESTERN WITH ENTERTAINING STORY AND INTERESTING ACTING AND ACTION . . . Audiences liking clean-cut yarns of ranch life will enjoy this feature whose story gives Fred Scott, singing western star, ample opportunity to show vocal, pugilistic and riding skill.

Motion Picture Herald—Scott has a good voice and an agreeable personality, auguring well for favor with western adherents, as this is the first of series of six productions starring him.

Box Office—In addition to a pleasing romance, some fast riding and several most realistic set-tos, this first western in a new series follows the present popular trend by providing two spots for the handsome young star, Fred Scott, to display his baritone voice to advantage.

Hollywood Reporter—FRED SCOTT OKAY AS WESTERN STAR . . . He speaks his lines and rides a horse well and is a good mixer in the rough and tumble fisticuffs which are an essential part of these opuses . . . This leads to a goodly amount of six-shooting, fast riding, plenty of acrobatic fist fights, plus a number of songs.

Showmen's Trade Review—Good performances by Scott, Marion Shilling and Cliff Nazarro and some excellent baritone singing by Scott. Film is paced swiftly and goes places in a hurry . . . Plenty of riding and shooting and interesting horse "White King."

Motion Picture Daily—Scott's voice is good, the song numbers are effective.

Film Curb—Plenty of fights, hard-riding, gunplay and a bit of romance . . . Scott has a pleasing voice and there are two rather catchy numbers.

the red ear, and sale of lunch baskets, with good singing.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

AIR HOPPERS: Pete Smith—As many laughs as you find in most two-reel comedies. Running time, 10 minutes.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

FITZPATRICK TRAVEL TALKS: Eighteen of these a year aren't enough; they should make fifty-two. One issue a week. They are masterpieces of art and dialogue. Running time, 10 minutes.—Mrs. E. L. Tait, Lauder Theatre, Mount Forest, Ontario, Canada. Small town patronage.

GREATER MOVIE SEASON, THE: MGM trailer to accounts—From the opening scenes of the giant Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios in Culver City, Cal., through the parade of hits to be produced by that company during the new season, this trailer is both interesting and seat-selling. Patrons are given glimpses of what they may expect to see in the near future, and the reel is so edited that it holds the attention throughout. As I understand it, this reel is furnished gratis to all MGM accounts. It should be given space in any program, even though it may be necessary to eliminate a short subject, because it is a valuable piece of merchandise. In addition to this, MGM has also issued an institutional press sheet, which contains a wealth of material for an exhibitor to map out a campaign heralding the future showing of this company's product in his theatre. It looks as though MGM not only leads in the quality of its product, but also in its live-wire promotional suggestions to the exhibitor in helping him to sell it to his patrons. Running time, 7 minutes.—Ralph Cokain, Indiana Theatre, Marion, Indiana. General patronage.

HONEYLAND: Harman-Ising—Very good cartoon. Running time, seven minutes.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

HONOLULU, PARADISE OF THE PACIFIC: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—Another very interesting colored FitzPatrick worth playing.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada.

LIFE HESITATES AT 40: Charley Chase—Charlie seems to be slipping badly. There are still a few laughs left, but don't take like "Three Stooges."—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

LITTLE BOY BLUE: Chic Sale—Very good Chic Sale subject. Running time, one reel.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

MASTER WILL SHAKESPEARE: MGM Miniature—There is no question but what this reel is rank propaganda for Metro's Romeo and Juliet and they make you pay for it. It is of no interest except for those that are interested in Shakespeare and not many of our audience ever heard of him.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana. General patronage.

METROTONE NEWS: Interesting and up to the minute. In recent issues, though, there have been too many political sequences. These should be deleted from the Canadian issue.—Mrs. E. L. Tait, Lauder Theatre, Mount Forest, Ontario, Canada. Small town patronage.

OLD HOUSE, THE: Harman-Ising—Another dandy colored cartoon.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

OUR GANG COMEDIES: There should be Our Gang Comedies in every theatre, they are that good. The kids would rather miss a meal than miss "Spanky." Running time, 18 minutes.—Mrs. E. L. Tait, Lauder Theatre, Mount Forest, Ontario, Canada. Small town patronage.

PAN HANDLERS: Patsy Kelly Comedies—A very funny comedy.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

PINCH SINGER: Our Gang—It's worth anybody's money to hear Alfalfa sing "I'm In the Mood for Love." Running time, 18 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

PUBLIC GHOST NO. 1: Charley Chase—Good comedy that falls flat at finish. Many thought some of it was missing. Running time, 17 minutes.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

TODD-KELLY COMEDIES: The best of these are never even fair and their current one, "Hot Money," is by far the worst. Running time, 18 minutes.—Mrs. E. L. Tait, Lauder Theatre, Mount Forest, Ontario, Canada. Small town patronage.

TWO HEARTS IN WAX TIME: Musical Revues—Not the best of a series of Musical Color Revues that are remarkably well done. We like them and so do our patrons.—Mrs. E. L. Tait, Lauder Theatre, Mount Forest, Ontario, Canada. Small town patronage.

Paramount

COUNTRYSIDE MELODIES: Paramount Variety—An excellent colored reel with fine music.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

PARADE OF THE MAESTROS: Headliners—A very good one-reeler, full of good music from start to finish. Just the type to go with the feature "Mary Burns, Fugitive," and this makes a very good program. Running time, one reel.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

PARAMOUNT PICTORIAL: No. 7—Our criticism of these subjects is the picking up of shots from past features to help fill out the reel. The last two Pictorials had scenes from "Rose of the Rancho" and as we have played the feature this makes three times Gladys Swarthout has been presented to our patrons in the same songs. Running time, one reel.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

SOMEWHERE IN DREAMLAND: Color Classics—This deserves a report and a good one at that. Its music and color are the smartest we have heard and seen in any cartoon. Running time, nine minutes.—Mrs. E. L. Tait, Lauder Theatre, Mount Forest, Ontario, Canada. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

BAD MEDICINE: Headliner—An excellent comedy that had our house in an uproar.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

LIVING JEWELS: Struggle To Live Series—An excellent nature reel. These reels would be knockouts if they would get an announcer they could understand.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MARCH OF TIME: No. 1—Just another two-reeler that will not increase your business. Some parts good, others just waste of film. Our first reels shown and can't see where anyone should pay such a price for this news-stuff old. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

PATHE TOPICS NO 7: All about Harvard Centennial. Slow and uninteresting. Pulled it after first show.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

TOO MANY SURPRISES: Smart Set Comedies—Just fair, nothing to get excited about. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

United Artists

BAND CONCERT: Mickey Mouse—Lots of laughs in this one. Running time, seven minutes.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

BROKEN TOYS: Silly Symphonies—Good cartoon. Will make good Christmas booking. Running time, eight minutes.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

MUSIC LAND: Silly Symphonies—Very poor. The poorest we have played. Put it back in the can. Running time, nine minutes.—M. W. Mattechcck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

Vitaphone

CHANGING OF THE GUARD: Sybil Jason—This is a beautiful colored short that will fit in any program.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

CHAS. AHEARN AND HIS MILLIONAIRES: Pepper Pot Series—Excellent. Rates top spot and extra billing. Running time, one reel.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

FOR THE LOVE OF PETE: Shemp Howard, Robert Norton—This is the first of the Joe Palooka series and looks like a drawing card.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

I'M MUCH OBLIGED: Broadway Brevity—Good entertainment but very poorly recorded. No excuse for poor recording. Running time, 22 minutes.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

RED NICHOLS AND ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—A very good band number for the younger patrons.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

SUNDAY GO TO MEETIN' TIME: Merrie Melody—A fine colored cartoon. Tells what happened to the colored man who did not go to church.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Serials

Universal

ROARING WEST: Buck Jones—This starts off with a bang; hope it holds up as well.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Miscellaneous

LOUIS-SHARKEY FIGHT PICTURE: Not much draw to this.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

YES, HOURS SHOULD BE REGULATED

Time clocks may be all well and good in a factory or office where there are many employed to do certain daily tasks and where profitable production depends upon a set amount of work turned out within the established limits of a working day.

But not in this business of properly running a theatre.

It's a cinch that a real showman won't work any harder nor become more productive overnight because he is instructed to arrive at a certain time and to stand by until closing.

If your manager is a real showman, and if he'd rather run a theatre than do anything else, then the wisest thing to do is leave the lad to function in his own way and not worry whether or not he is around when the boss calls. For it's dollars to doughnuts that, wherever he is, the manager who is wrapped up in his work is out digging up some campaign or promoting for the good of his boxoffice. And having the interests of his house closest to heart, your dependable theatreman will also be found around at opening time, at peak hours and at the final break to greet patrons, to square the squawks, to bid the folks a cordial goodnight.

No, the answer is not the time clock to regulate hours of men who, because they want to be, are usually at the wheel from early morn to much later at night than they should be.

The industry would be better served if the hours of all good men were so regulated that they would not be permitted by far-visioned superiors to burn up invaluable dividend-paying energies in unnecessarily long hours on the jobs.

This department knows of theatre executives (and there should be more) who look with less than full approval upon managers who won't knock off at night and those "too busy" to take a day off each week.

TO THE MAN, TO HIS THEATRE

Completing his thirtieth year in showbusiness some weeks back, Round Tabler Al Hamilton, of the M. & P. circuit Empress Theatre in South Norwalk, Conn., marked a circle around the anniversary date and prepared to leave it go at that. But not so his neighbors, for, headed by the Mayor, district manager Hy Fine, state and city officials, 150 of Al's friends gathered at a dinner to honor the showman and to heap high praise upon him, all of which being duly front-paged with Hamilton's picture in the local press.

Recently, on this page, your chairman discussed the value of participating in community activities, declaring that how far a manager should go depended upon his own situation. The turnout of so many important representative citizens to hail this highly-held theatreman in so certain a manner is proof enough that, in Hamilton's case, civic "mixing" has brought him the highest returns in esteem of his townsfolk and by the same token invaluable prestige to the theatre.

From the Warner office comes a story of the Swedish newspaper critic in Stockholm who, so impressed with "Pasteur", offered a money-back guarantee to patrons who did not like the picture. . . . Which thought is tendered to publicity men seeking a "natural" to tie up traffic on their attractions.

And while bows are being taken for snappy house organs, an extra one is indicated in the direction of Dean Hyskell, Fox West Coast ad head, for his weekly "Beat Par" which has to do with the low-down on managers' contests and exploitation highlights around the circuit.

It's an emphatic and effective job of work.

TO THE INDUSTRY'S CREDIT

Covering a wide and wild territory north of Sudbury, Ontario, there are scores of mining camps where paydays are many, entertainments few and immediate contacts with the outer world made only by air. So Manager Sid Scott moved right in, put out a monthly "Capitol Theatre Air News," sold the local aeroplane transport company which carries supplies to the camps on leaving copies of Sid's paper at each stop. What clinched the deal was Scott's argument that the plane people could look for extra business from miners who perusing the list of coming attractions might conceive a sudden yen to fly a coupla hundred miles to catch the last show.

Whether they be situated in the most congested neighborhoods or far up in the sparsely settled woods country it is to the eternal credit of the industry that theatremen avail themselves of every means to publicize their attractions over the greatest possible area.

CHARNINSKY AND LIMERICK VOTED QUIGLEY PLAQUES FOR SEPTEMBER

Texans Awarded the Silver and Bronze; Only First Mention in September Taken Down by Round Tabler W. Clyde Smith

by A-MIKE VOGEL

Ring bells for the Lone Star State.

For the first time in the history of the Quigley Awards Competitions both the monthly plaques, the September Silver and the Bronze by majority vote of the judges go to Texas theatremen.

The Silver Plaque is awarded to Manager Louis Charninsky, for his excellent campaign at the Capitol, Dallas, on Warner Bros.' "Bengal Tiger."

The Bronze Plaque is voted to Manager George Limerick, Yale Theatre, Cleburne, for a well conceived and executed campaign on Paramount's "Texas Rangers."

Immediately following the Border State showmen and finishing but a short step behind, comes Manager W. Clyde Smith, of the Paramount Theatre, Hot Springs, Arkansas, who for his entry on RKO Radio's "Swingtime" received the only First Mention Certificate given in September. Smith was right up there at the tape and made it a mighty close decision.

Readers of the Round Table are of course familiar with Charninsky's exploitations in Dallas, for the Texas Round Tabler has been a regular contributor to these pages. Louie has tried for Plaque honors a number of times and now clicks for top honors, which again may prove that it pays to stay with it.

George Limerick is also a first-timer and his Award is another indication that theatremen in the smaller spots are given their share of consideration by the Judges in the monthly Competitions. Clyde Smith is not a newcomer, having clicked before, and his solo winning speaks for itself.

Twenty entrants share in the 15 Honorable Mentions voted in September with four campaigns giving equal credit to both manager and publicist. The winners represent situations from de luxe to the lesser spots and product from many companies.

As has been the case in other months a few of the names in the winning column are newcomers entirely to these honors and among other of the entrants there was noted a number of theatremen who had sent in their first campaigns for Awards consideration. The first-timers include George Bannan, Arthur J. Wartha, Sid Dannenberg, Ed Miller, Glen Fannin, Bill Nasses, Kroger Babb and Jay Golden. Of interest also is the name of Ken Grimes in the "Honorables" column, as Ken was the very first manager to win a Quigley Plaque, winning his honors in January, 1934.

All in all, the September results were gratifying both in numbers and quality of the campaigns entered. Some of the entries on "Bengal Tiger" and "Swingtime" are also set for the managers' contests.

Further announcements on the big Hollywood party for 1936 Grand Award winners are detailed on this page, which should stimulate the efforts of those who have not as yet finished in the money.

United Air Lines to Transport 1936 Award Winners to Hollywood

The response to the previous announcement some weeks back that for the second year the Quigley Grand Award ceremonies are again to be held in Hollywood and the 1936 winners conveyed to the Coast by air indicates there are sure a lot of he-showmen rarin' to become eligible for that Big Week of entertainment in Studioland.

Final arrangements for the journey are now set. The winning showmen are to be transported to Hollywood and return via United Air Lines in what is reported to be the most powerful land plane flown on this side—the new 12-ton, twin-engined Douglas transport, the last word in comfort and luxury. Traveling via United's midcontinent airway, the winners will receive the great thrill of flight over the Great Lakes region, Great Plains, the Covered Wagon Route, Great Salt Lake and other of the nation's wonder scenic spots, including a trip around Boulder Dam.

And Hollywood will be all set to give the winners the biggest kind of a party. The folks out there sure went to town last year to welcome Harry Goldberg and Les Pollock and are waiting to turn over the keys of the city to the 1936 winners.

Remember, showmen who take down the monthly Silver and Bronze plaques are eligible for the Big Prizes and, with the September judging completed, there still remain three months to qualify. So if you haven't clicked yet, you have time enough to get aboard that Gravy Special out to Studioland where those stars twinkle and say "howdy".

Are you a-comin'? —A-MIKE.

THIS COMPLETE 'SHOOTING' SCRIPT ON 'MY MAN GODFREY' HAS BEEN MADE AVAILABLE ON REQUEST OF NUMEROUS PATRONS WHO HAVE MISSED SOME OF THE WITTY GAG LINES BECAUSE OF THE CONTINUED HILARIOUS LAUGHTER OF THE AUDIENCE.
Carole Lombard

FOR THOSE WHO MISSED. It seems that due to uproarious laughter of the audience, patrons at Keith's Baltimore missed many of the gag lines, and their complaints caused manager J. L. Schanberger to make available in the lobby copy of the shooting script with poster alongside explaining its purpose.

Mort Plugs Special Show With 'Homemade' Radio Gag

Up at the suburban, subsequent-run College Theatre, in Toronto, Mort Margulies, recently stepped up to the post of manager from Jim Nairn's department at the Famous Players-Canadian home office, conceived the idea of advertising a midnight showing for "Sing, Baby, Sing" by means of what he terms a "Radio Preview" with everything used dug up and promoted by Mort. He first went to the Fox exchange and obtained a number of extra punchy shots for trailer use, then promoted a radio-transcription record on the feature, had the operators readjust the non-sync equipment to the slower speed necessary. Margulies further dressed the stunt with special stage lighting when the record was put on and toward the end faded the house lights before showing the special trailer that advertised the midnight show.

"Are You Ready for Football?"

Ray Holloway's "Swingtime" Girl Bally

Stunt created a lot of talk as it was quite different from the usual straight film shows at the house and as the material was the same that the patrons were accustomed to hearing on the radio, Mort says there were many inquiries on how it was done.

Being without a slide machine, this Round Tabler promoted enough material to make one, then had the operators tear up some old single reels and with gelatin construct color wheels put on both projectors as well as the slide machine. For the latter, lens was obtained by removing the rear lens of a discarded movietone lens. Unusual slide pattern effects are obtained with wire netting, paper doilies, lace, etc. Total investment was $1.50.

"Rhythm" Campaign Topped With Kid Rodeo Tiein

Assisted by the mayor, secretary of chamber of commerce and other local notables, Manager J. A. Sanders and assistant Marlin Butler, Westex, Olney, Texas, staged a kid rodeo for children under 14 as the highlight of the drive on "Rhythm On the Range." Twelve contestants entered for the main prize of five dollars and other prizes of guest tickets. Yearling calves for the riding were promoted and the winner was a 10-year-old girl. Rodeo was advertised heavily with cards and banners plus street bally of two youngsters in costume. The first led a bannered cow and played a guitar while he sang cowboy numbers.

Lobby decorations stressed the picture's atmosphere with a rail fence inside the foyer decorated with cutouts from one-sheets and 11 by 14's. Saddle equipment, riding habit, guitar, branding iron plus cutout of Bob Burns and his bazooka were also used.

Swinging Girls Above Marquees Plug 'Swingtime'

They're swinging 'em literally on "Swingtime" to judge from shots forwarded by some of the men on campaigns for the Astaire-Rogers feature. On this page are illustrated two of the swing-stunts. The one below is the work of Rodney Pantages and Lloyd Dearth at the Hollywood Pantages, the unusual angle shot taken from below showing a girl on trapeze above the marquee. The other traffic-stopper was conceived by Ray Holloway, at the Ellanay, El Paso, Texas, with the girl on a 50-foot swing attached to a pole from the roof of the theatre, the swing over the sidewalk.

Down in Frankfort, Ky., for the date at the Capitol, Jim Diller sponsored a "Swingtime Dance" with the Lions Club and Packard dealer for the benefit of local milk fund. Added attraction was a special showing of the picture at the theatre at midnight with the dancers carried in a fleet of Packards supplied for the occasion. After the showing, at the ballroom, there was a special "Swingtime" dance contest and invited guests included the Governor of Kentucky.

Friedman's Endurance Stunt

In Amsterdam, N. Y., at Schine's Strand, Ben Friedman, tied in his Packard dealer on a 100-hour endurance drive in one of the new models bannered with theatre copy. After the run, driver caught up on his sleep in the dealer's window. Ben also arranged for the automen to supply free transportation to the theatre for those who wanted to see the picture.

Distribution of 25,000 heralds with the aid of Liberty magazine carriers was one of the slants arranged by Bill Brown for the date at the RKO Albee, Providence, R. I. An auto parade was another idea and in addition to a lot of smart window tieups, Brown planted advertising on hundreds of newsstands through tieup with distributor.

Myers Enters Float In City Celebration

In connection with the recent annual Territorial Days Celebration to relive the days of pioneer Oregon, Al Myers, Star Theatre, Oregon City, entered an attractive float (see photo) in the parade, which was constructed and designed by him.

Float measured 30 feet and depicted the progress of the country from early frontier days to present mode of living. Al used a covered wagon and airplane to designate time periods with large hand-painted pictorials on either side representing Territorial mothers and fathers of Oregon. Float was covered with evergreen and fir boughs which were airbrushed in eleven bright colors and then highlighted with metallics. Children on the float were dressed each to represent a particular era in western history, and Myers reports that the stunt brought much favorable comment.

Merchants Aid Egan On Anniversary Week

The mezzanine of the Palace Theatre, Calgary, Canada, was turned over to a display of latest styles in connection with Pete Egan's tieup to celebrate the theatre's anniversary. Full co-op ad page was taken in leading paper by merchants, center two columns of which were devoted to the exhibit and theatre copy. Entire display was held for a week, each merchant's ad calling attention to his goods on the mezzanine.

When Pete played "Green Pastures" he garnered some extra publicity when the wife of the former Governor General attended the theatre with a party.

Merchant Holds Style Show On "Mary of Scotland"

For "Mary of Scotland" Joe Wolfshol, Rialto Theatre, New Braunfels, Tex., tied up with local merchant handling velveteen dresses and promoted a style show in advance of showing. Merchant displayed models in theatre lobby and trimmed entire front store window with material pertaining to the picture. Practically every woman in the city was invited to attend the style show at the theatre.

In addition Joe had a well dressed couple visit leading cafes, girl audibly asked the man to take her to see the picture and the style show. Merchants also permitted cashiers to wear models of featured dresses during showing.

Henger Plants Bally On Library Lawn

A huge open book, seven feet high by five feet wide with six-foot tinted blowups of Randolph Scott and Binnie Barnes on either side was planted a week ahead on the lawn of the public library as one of the highlights of George Henger's campaign on "The Last of the Mohicans" at the Criterion in Oklahoma City, Okla.

For his bally, Henger cut out a 24-sheet, placed the art on either side of truck (see photo) and gathered plenty of attention in the Labor Day parade. Driver was in Indian costume and was accompanied by man dressed in frontier style. Picture got big play from leading merchants, particularly dress and fashion shops which featured "Mohican red" and George also covered the schools inviting teachers and other officials to a special screening and having them recommend picture to the students.

Mayor Mason, Ex-Follies Girl and Cooper

Press Club Cooperates On "Earthworm" Parade

Through tieup with Pittsburgh Press Lyle Harding, Regent Theatre, secured their uniformed drum and bugle corps, the only organization of its kind in the city, for a street parade (see photo) in connection with "Earthworm Tractors." Movies were taken and shown before members of the press club, and stories run in the paper.

Contest was run in which thumbnails of five of the leads in the picture were run on front page of program and to those identifying the stars guest tickets were awarded. Bannered tractor toured the streets and through tieup with the tractor agency, costless roto sections were inserted in newspapers, and local nut shop distributed cards to which peanuts were pasted, copy reading "You'll find no earthworm in these, they're fresh at," etc., etc.

Former Follies Girl Ushers for "Ziegfeld"

For the road show engagement of "Great Ziegfeld" Max Cooper, Cove Theatre, Glen Cove, L. I., engaged extra attractive girls dressed in evening gowns and wearing corsages to act as usherettes and seating patrons. For head usherette, Max arranged to have an ex-Follies girl, who upon arrival was introduced to Mayor Mason, who welcomed her to Glen Cove. Accompanying photo shows Mayor Harold Mason, the Follies gal and Cooper; papers carried stories and photos.

Besides regular box-office, a special "Ziegfeld" box-office was constructed, decorated with enlargements and stills from the picture and attractive girls also dressed in evening clothes, selling tickets for the advance sale. Front was decorated with flags and pennants and special window displays planted in leading merchants' stores.

Plane with Sound Effects Sells "China Clipper"

Ray Holloway, Ellanay Theatre, El Paso, Texas, for "China Clipper" promoted an airplane for display in front of his theatre with a dummy pilot. On each wing a speaker was attached with wires running to his office and a turntable where airplane records with effects of real plane in air were used. Mike was also attached from which feature starting time was announced, coming attractions, etc.

First Time Editorial Secured on "Death"

A reported first time editorial in the Hampshire Gazette was landed by Walton B. Howe, Calvin Theatre, Northampton, Mass., in connection with his "And Sudden Death" engagement. Members of the local and state police as well as judges of the courts were invited to attend a preview and newspaper came through with excellent plugs.

On "Suzy" Walton ran story in papers, inviting all ladies with the name Suzy to bring the proper identification with them to the theatre and be admitted as his guest to see the picture.

London as Theatre Center Called 20 Cities in One

British Metropolis Covers Wide Trade Territory; "West End" Situation Unusual

by BRUCE ALLAN

from London

Most varied as well as biggest city in the world, a centre of government, business and manufacture, it is understandable that London should not fit easily into any of the accepted categories of theatre classification. In an entertainment as in most other senses it is, in fact, in a class of its own. There is not one London but twenty Londons.

At once explaining and illustrating the complexity of the civic situation is the fact that Greater London, with a population of 7,000,000—8,000,000, is actually a combination of a number of smaller communities very like towns. Some of them were towns less than a life-time ago, and before London grew out to and beyond them. They are still more or less self-contained, according to their industrial or commercial conditions. and to a large extent self-governing. There is a Lord Mayor of London, but he actually rules only in the square mile or so of the City; each London "borough,"—St. Pancras, Westminster, Islington and the rest—has its own Council and its own Mayor.

A majority of residents in a thirty miles circle are commuters who get their livings in London proper, but in any of the London neighborhood districts it would be easily possible to find thousands who see much less in a year of the West End which Americans know as London than many of these Americans see on an annual trip.

This is true although the old meaning of "West End" has largely been lost since means of communication were speeded up. A West End theatre, is not, with some exceptions, nowadays an ultra-fashionable, ultra-expensive resort of the few but just a theatre situated in the West End and, in the case of cinemas specially, drawing its patronage very largely from the neighborhoods. Nevertheless, the bulk of neighborhood business stays there.

London Ranks as a Territory

The lack of unity in London as a civic centre, its big distances, the enormous diversity of occupations, in many cases localized away from the centre; these influences have helped to create special film industry conditions. London does not rank as a City but as a territory. It contains more people than Scotland and it offers much bigger revenue to the film distributor.

There is a broad division of London cinemas into West End and suburban (neighborhood). The West End is a pre-release area; first run neighborhood houses get the pictures on general release, which may be six months later, though this period is being progressively reduced.

Following the completion in August of the first series in the Round Table's Showman's Travelogues, the second series of these interesting articles is inaugurated on this page with an able description by Bruce Allan of motion picture showbusiness in London and conditions as affect various phases of theatre operation in the English capital.

Listed for early publication in the Travelogue series are articles on Tokyo, Bombay, Sydney, Warsaw, Vienna, Nanking, Berlin and representative American cities such as Indianapolis, Washington, Columbus and Cleveland.

General release is a week later for theatres South of the Thames than for those North of the Thames. This is a distributors' print saving expedient and the geographical division is arbitrary, more or less accidental and is the subject of controversy with exhibitors, who urge a first or late run classification of all London houses on a capacity-quality basis. Whether or not this happens, the definite division of theatres into pre-release and release houses will persist as a fundamental feature of London trade organization.

Pre-release Dates in the West End

By "West End" is meant, geographically, the district enclosed by a circle centered at Piccadilly Circus and with a circumference approximately drawn through Marble Arch on the one hand and Aldwych, Strand, on the other. All theatres in this area do not play pre-release, and a recognized West End theatre may fall outside a strict geographical limit, but there is great jealousy about the extension of the pre-release privilege to new theatres. After the Paramount, Tottenham Court Road, little more than a stone's throw from the Dominion (second pre-release G.-B. house) had played a pre-release, there were warnings that any future pictures so booked would be barred by major circuits.

The West End pre-release houses are for the most part producer-owned, or have producer affiliations and of course are used for the national exploitation of big pictures. Though the day has passed when producers were prepared, as a regular policy, to lose from $5,000 a week upwards in the West End box-office in order to establish a "West End Success" for sale to provincial exhibitors, the scale of advertising still shows the influence of this practice. Big spaces in national dailies, evening, and Sundays help to create goodwill for a picture on general release and are justified on that ground. The fact that West End advertising is often partly paid for from distributors' appropriations means that those theatres which have only box-office receipts in view are often out-shouted. It also means, sometimes, that to get a West End run in a circuit house distributors will face a publicity bill leaving them very little return from a success bringing in a considerable profit to the theatre.

Against this is to be set the fact that films get very big space in all the national London papers. A premiere is definitely news and, if the picture is good enough, gets special coverage in next day's issues as well as reference in the weekly motion picture features which appear in the Sundays and in the dailies and evenings, on Friday and Monday. These features, carrying the theatre advertising, run to one or two pages and cover, as a matter of routine, every change of programme in West End houses. Throughout the week, news stories about motion picture matters are a big feature of the London papers; definitely this press eagerness can be associated with the big pre-run exploitation campaigns.

Chief Theatres Listed

Alphabetically listed, the chief theatres in the West End are:

Astoria, Charing Cross Road: Gaumont-British. Regular change house running second pre-release.

Carlton, Haymarket: Paramount. Long run house, for Paramount (e.g. "Lives of a Bengal Lancer") and other producers' special features. Has a particularly good class clientele.

Dominion, Tottenham Court Road: Gaumont-British. Second pre-release. Specializes in stage shows on top of a double-feature programme.

Empire, Leicester Square: Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. The M-G-M shop window and one of the most consistently successful theatres in London, due largely to the fact that it is run for box-office on a regular change policy, only occasionally modified to a limited hold-over even for outstanding pictures.

Leicester Square: Jack Buchanan owned, and used as shop window for the Universal and British pictures of General Film Distributors. Long run house.

London Pavilion, Piccadilly Circus: United Artists. Long run house for U.A. One of the most famous variety theatres in the world in its day and occupies a site which is "the centre of the universe" to many expatriated Britishers. Recently modernized and reconstructed.

Marble Arch Pavilion: Gaumont-British. Second release. One of the original constituents of the G.-B. circuit, with a very faithful public of its own.

New Gallery, Regent Street: Gaumont-British. Pre-release house, in which recently an all-British policy was experimented with by G.-B. A class theatre, enlarged from an early house which did a good deal to attract "carriage business" to the cinema, it still has a faithful high class following.

Paramount, Tottenham Court Road. Just out of the West End in the trade sense and, as indicated, a cause of controversy on that account, it is run on the usual lavish lines of the Paramount British chain and, less than a year old, is established as one of the most successful of central theatres.

Plaza, Piccadilly Circus: Paramount's regular change house and very successfully institutionalized from its first days, when it inaugurated a stage-presentation policy since modified.

Regal, Marble Arch: Associated British Pictures. As well as acting as shop-window for the B.I.P. Elstree product, it was until lately the West End outlet for Warner and First National features. The first semi-atmospheric theatre to be built in London and definitely an institution with a faithful patronage, though the policy is one of varying runs.

Rialto, Cranbourn St., Leicester Square: Associated British Pictures. Once the "West End Cinema" and one of the very earliest class cinemas in London, has at various times been a Universal shop-window, a foreign language and "specialty" house and is now a channel for unusual features from Wardrour Films and outside distributors.

Tivoli, Strand: Gaumont-British. Built on the site of one of the most famous of old-time variety halls, and essentially a big feature house, with "Ben Hur" as its historic success. Has lately finished the premier British run of "Modern Times."

Art Theatres Important

Falling outside the strict West End classification and yet deserving in every way the description of London theatres are such establishments as the New Victoria, the Metropole, and the Stoll Picture Theatre. The latter, a conversion of Hammerstein's London Opera House in Kingsway, is one of the most consistently successful theatres in London, though it is run on a regular change release policy without a neighborhood population. The Palace, Cambridge Circus, and other variety and legitimate houses, as the Piccadilly, scarcely come within a film classification on the score of occasional seasons, though the Piccadilly has a place in trade history as the theatre which made London talkie-conscious through "The Singing Fool."

"Art" theatres such as the Academy in Oxford Street, the Curzon, in Mayfair, and Studio Number One at Oxford Circus (the latter a rebuilding of Cinema House, another of the early all-film theatres in London) also do not come strictly in trade listings. They play an important part, however, in the entertainment field, and in the press, through their policy of specializing in foreign language films previously only accessible to members of Film Societies. To the Academy belong the distinction of introducing Elisabeth Bergner in "Dreaming Lips" and the famous "Maedchen in Uniform." "Studio Number One" is interesting also as a piece of construction, the Art theatre on the street level being above a basement News Theatre known as "Studio Number Two."

News Theatres Popular

Another special feature of the field, and a new one as a wholesale development, is the News Theatre. The pioneer establishment is the Movietone-G.B. reconstruction of the old Shaftesbury Pavilion in the Avenue of that name. Other veteran London halls which found a new lease of life in a similar change of policy were the Windmill Street theatre just off Piccadilly circus, the Cameo at Leicester Square, and the Agar St. Cinema, a stone's throw from the Tivoli. More recently there has been a series of specially built News Theatres, the most notable being the Monseigneur in Piccadilly; the Piccadilly, in the famous Circus, and the Victoria Station theatre of the Capital & Provincial organization, recently (like Jack Davis of the Monseigneur) credited with planning a tie-up with Trans-lux. Big developments in the News Theatre field are certain. Offering, for 6d or 7d to 1/- a show varying between an hour and an hour and a half, these theatres have supplied a very definite public need. Equally popular is the Tatler, once the Super Cinema, Charing Cross Road, an "interest" theatre, playing shorts.

Prices generally in the West End range from a practically universal one shilling, six pence bottom to a top of five shillings, nine pence, six or eight shillings. The Carlton, two shillings, six pence, has the highest "low" in town, and originally had a Royal Circle at 10 shillings. Its top is now eight shillings, six pence (approximately two dollars), like that of the Tivoli, Plaza, New Gallery, and most other "presentation" houses. The Regal and Leicester Square top at six shillings.

IMMENSE BANNER. 100 feet long by 40 feet high was banner planted on raised building in Oklahoma City by city manager George Henger of the Standard Theatre to sell "Anthony Adverse".

Important as a public amenity and also for its bearing on the economics of the theatre situation is the morning opening now universal in the big West End theatres. The Empire leads the way with a 10 a.m. schedule, but all the others are busy from 11 onwards, operating on a one shilling, sixpence flat until one o'clock, and playing to capacity with the right picture.

Generalization in regard to theatre operation and publicity is difficult in regard to a 500-theatre territory in which variations of patron demands and patron resources range almost over a national scale. District classification is misleading; presentation and exploitation better than the West End average may be found in a neighborhood super-theatre flanked by a 500 seater conducted by small town methods on small town takings.

In certain particulars, however, the London area does show a tendency to a uniform theatre practice, and this standardization is governed by two main factors: the number of halls controlled by circuits, leaving a very limited freedom of action to individual managers, and the attitude, general among theatre owners, that the prevailing rental basis makes it impossible to budget for other than routine exploitation. Stunt methods, discouraged by these circumstances, are also severely limited by police regulations, which make effective street parades, and in fact any outside stunts likely to create obstruction, difficult to carry through.

An important factor in limiting special campaigns is undoubtedly the lack of financial resources due, say exhibitors, to the fact that renters will make no adequate publicity allowance even for a picture which may be playing on a 40 per cent of takings basis. Some exceptions to this general situation are noted later, but that the economic factor is important is shown by the universal insistence, in the recent Eastbourne Conference discussion of Mr. Simon Rowsons plan for Communal film publicity, that distributors as well as exhibitors must provide the finance.

Publicity Shows Improvement

Front of the house publicity has greatly improved of recent years with the practically universal use of neon signs and of the very effectively hand lettered and stencilled posters, in many cases practically supplanting the material supplied by distributors, which the exhibitor buys from his supply house. Three sheet, six sheet and twelve sheet posters from the distributors' range are used on the theatre front and on a limited number of outside stations, but the specially ordered poster is, deservedly, favored by most exhibitors. One sheets and half-sheets are most frequently used for advertising on tube and other railways by West End houses or those in the nearer neighborhoods, and are generally specially printed.

Window bills in local stores, program

WEST END STORES OPEN TO TIEINS

house organs of various types regularly mailed to a request patrons' list, and display advertising in the local press, are the other items in the exhibitor's printing bill, with the important addition in the case of super-theatres in the chief neighborhood districts, of a regular announcement in the "Amusements" column of national dailies and evenings; soundly based on the consideration that the majority of neighborhood residents work in central London, this practice indirectly points to one of the difficulties in the way of institutionalizing on "local" lines which face London exhibitors.

In the West End, there is a fair use of the tie-up, big stores being very willing to give window space and the distributor-theatres having the resources to exploit the opportunity. In the neighborhoods there is less than in many provincial towns and there is also less frequent dressing of the theatre foyer and attendants.

A tendency to re-introduce variety turns and stage presentations has been very noticeable of late in the case of big capacity halls. The stage acts at the Dominion and Paramount Theatres in the Tottenham Court Road, are undoubtedly largely responsible for the popularity of these theatres; a popular Band, dance turns or vocalists are a draw to a special public, and there is just as definitely a public which wants nothing but pictures.

In certain areas the films-variety combination is, entirely from competitive reasons, general. Hammersmith is one of these strongholds, with the Gaumont-British 3,000 seater running musical acts and frequently personal appearances of the Gaumont-British stars, the Associated British Pictures' Commodore also running film-variety and even small halls in the district offering a single feature and a few turns. Throughout its circuit, Gaumont-British is increasing the proportion of variety.

Star Organists Featured

The Metropole at Victoria and the chain of H & G (Hyams and Gale) London supers, which include the biggest capacity houses in England in the four-thousand seated Trocadero and Trocette on the South Side, also use the stage regularly, the Trocadero on one occasion staging a complete production of "Pagliacci." The Paramount-Astorias at Brixton, Streatham, Finsbury Park and Old Kent Road, are other houses with a stage show policy.

In very many London theatres the organist is an important programme item, featured by name. "Star" organists are toured in some instances, as in that of the Odeon circuit.

Occasionally, special publicity of an outstanding character is undertaken by London exhibitors, though brilliant sensationalism of the type associated with the name of Castleton Knight (now in charge of "Gaumont-British News") is rare. Knight is the man who kidnapped Chaplin in the interests of his audience. Sidney Bernstein, who runs the Granada Tooting and other London theares at Bow, Willesden, Edmonton, Walthamstow, Leyton, Enfield and Wandsworth is famous for his Questionnaires. At long intervals he asks his patrons to give detailed opinions on programs and stars and information about their own cinema habits and, apart from acquiring a lot of data of general value to the trade, obtains enormous publicity for his theatres in the national press.

Car parks are a common amenity of new supers in the neighborhoods. In the West End the best the exhibitor can do for his patron is to advise him that special rates may be obtained at certain garages.

It is an important aspect of the entertainment situation that London, Empire capital though it be, is an "early town." Among European centres of comparable importance it is probably the first to go to bed and the last to get up. The mass of the population is at home, and perhaps asleep, well before midnight. It begins its office day at nine, 9:30 or 10 A.M. Manual workers, of course, start much earlier.

The transport situation, arising in the first instance from the habits of Londoners, has developed on lines rendering these habits compulsory. It is difficult to reach many of the more distant neighborhoods after 11 o'clock. If a show runs late, quite a number of people may have to cut to make the "last train," or put up with a slower method of road transport. Even where the underground ("Tube") railways operate, some services stop at about 12:30, with omnibuses and tramcars perhaps available a little later. On Sundays, these last times are approximately an hour earlier. There is, of course, a night life in London, but to use the clubs and hotels in which it is centred demands a fuller purse than the average working inhabitant possesses. For one thing, in the absence of all-night transport, a stay in town after midnight implies ownership of a car, or involves a taxi fare of, perhaps, five dollars if you live any distance out. Saloons close at 10:30 p.m., even in the West End. Cinemas must, by law, close before midnight, unless a special extension permit has been granted.

SUDDEN DEATH
Pictorial Review Contest

STREET PARADE. Fred Perry, Capitol Theatre, Binghamton, N. Y., staged a street parade in connection with his "Sudden Death" opening. Boys carrying banners marched behind band.

Control of places of entertainment is close in all other ways. Under the Cinematograph Act of 1909, they must be licensed by the County or Borough Council, the effective authorities for the London area being the London County Council, the Middlesex County Council and the Surrey County Council. The West End and all the central area falls within the L.C.C. territory and this authority has taken the lead in imposing very strict conditions of control which tend to become the standard for the rest of England.

Licenses Renewed Yearly

The licensing authorities dictate hours of opening, control Sunday Opening subject to the provisions of the Sunday Entertainments Act (which included provision for a public ballot for or against Sunday films) and possess the power of censorship, which they operate by a license clause making their written consent necessary to the exhibition of any film not passed by the British Board of Film Censors. They also apply Safety Regulations laid down in great detail by the Home Office, and apply stringent requirements of their own before issuing a license for a new theatre. This license has to be renewed every year.

Sunday Opening operates in most of the London area, but not in the whole of it. Until quite recently it was not permissible in Middlesex, with the curious result that in such near neighborhoods as Islington and Hornsey a theatre on one side of the road was open while another across the street was shut. "S.O." is surrounded by various conditions, the most important of which forbid opening before 5:30 P.M., and impose a contribution to a special "Charity" fund established by law. London exhibitors almost universally run special Sunday programs. In some districts this is a Sunday license condition.

Neighborhood conditions vary considerably as regards admission rates, opening hours and other matters. Once again, it must be understood that London will not fit into unit classification. Within the area, probably, is to be found every variation of these details which is shown in the U.K. as a whole. There are, side by side in the same district, small houses with a sixpence to one shilling sixpence range and super theatres with a two shilling sixpence or three shilling sixpence top, sometimes combined with a sixpence and sometimes with a ninepence bottom. There is also a rough district classification understandable in view of the fact that in the term "London" is included the working class district of Barking and the fashionable district of Mayfair. The recent theatre erections in the London neighborhoods compare more than favorably in all respects with most of the West End houses. With capacities in the 2,500 class they are also architecturally years ahead of all but the latest of the pre-release houses.

LAUREL-HARDY CLUBS HOLD PARIS MEETING

French Provinces and European Countries Send Delegations to Party Sponsored by MGM

Started two years ago and now counting thousands of children from many European countries as members, activities of the continental Laurel & Hardy Club reached a new high in August when delegations from most every local chapter gathered in Paris for three days to celebrate the first European convention of the organization.

The Club idea was conceived by E. Lapinere, European MGM publicist and recent Quigley Plaque winner, with the thought that as a large part of the comics' film audiences are children a properly sponsored organization of juvenile enthusiasts would build up a lot of important coverage for the team. Results, reports Lapiniere, have gone beyond the fondest expectations with each of the team's new pictures greeted in the different situations with festivities, street demonstrations and such like. In every country arrangements have been made with the largest children's paper to become the official Club publication with unusual and consistent publicity forthcoming.

Dates for the convention were set just in advance of the "Bohemian Girl" opening at the Olympia Cinema, Paris, and the front page attention obtained in local papers on the activities of the visiting members was of much assistance in breaking records for the premiere.

Paris Members Meet Arrivals

First day of the convention was devoted to meeting the arriving delegations at the different Paris railroad stations, members coming from Spain, Czechoslavakia, Austria, Netherlands, Belgium and French cities, etc. Special guard of honor recruited from among the Paris club members met the visitors, children's orchestra extending further greetings at convention headquarters with the official club song, "Dance of the Cuckoos." Games were also held in nearby park with local station broadcasting the activities and in the evening screening held of a Laurel-Hardy feature.

On the second day, the delegates were brought to the gathering place by a fleet of bannered Renault automobile busses and then escorted by the guard of honor visited the Louvre museum. From there the children were taken to the City Hall for an official reception. Newspapers and newsreel were on hand. The Mayor made an address of welcome and heads of the various delegations signed the City Register. Special luncheon was held at the Eiffel Tower restaurant by the Commissioner of the 1937 French International Exposition in conjunction with "Cri-Cri," the official Laurel & Hardy Club paper in France. All children were given copies of welcome cable from the comics.

Further direct advertising was turned loose for the "Bohemian Girl" date when the children from the roof-terrace of the Intransigeant, leading evening paper, flew toy balloons carrying theatre advertising.

On the morning of the opening of the picture, the delegates met on the steps of the Paris Opera House at the city's busiest corner and organized a parade to the theatre to see the picture. Procession was headed by brass bands and attention was drawn to the date by the Club banners carried by the children. At the theatre other ceremonies were held, the program including a contest for the best "Laurel & Hardy" couple among the members, winners (see photo) belonging to the Paris branch.

Tieups were arranged with prominent organizations and department store, to act as hosts to the delegates and continuous publicity for the picture was obtained by the travels of the children about the city in the bannered busses in keeping with the entertainment schedules.

Not only did the Paris papers cooperate in giving the convention much more than the usual picture publicity. The press in the provinces and foreign countries represented were also generous in reporting the Club activities and Lapinere reports a special press service organized weeks ahead of the meeting to send out daily stories to interested papers. According to Lapinere it is expected that the impetus given the Club movement will aid in developing local branches not at present represented.

Brown's Gag Stunts Sell His Current Attractions

To sell "Two in a Crowd" at Shea's Paramount, Newport, R. I., Harry Brown, Jr. had a young fellow parading through streets all day carrying an umbrella with an extension handle four feet longer than average, causing umbrella to remain high above heads of the crowds, copy on top reading "it rains $1,000 bills in" etc. etc.

A three-day contest was also planted by Harry in paper, consisting of three single column mats showing Joel McCrea and Joan Bennett in action scenes from the film. Cartoonist balloons allowed contestants to fill in their original dialogue.

On "Spanish Cape Mystery" masked girl paraded streets with back banner reading "tell me my real name and be the guest of," etc. Somewhere in the classified ads appeared the name of the Spanish Cape Mystery girl to tieup the stunt.

Harry credits Sydney E Solomon and Edward J. Shea for following through.

HIS LAST CAMPAIGN. Reported by Jake Rosenthal from the Iowa Theatre, Waterloo, Ia., just previous to his sudden passing, was a parade on "Earthworm Tractors" headed by a children's band, six bannered tractors and trailer in which folks were invited to ride to the theatre free of charge. Above shows parade in front of the theatre with Jake in the foreground after the procession had circulated all around the city.

Special Front Constructed By Chalman for "Mohicans"

Jack Chalman of the Aztec Theatre, San Antonio, built a special front for "The Last of the Mohicans" which had the curious jamming the sidewalks for several days. Constructed in the shape of a blockade, it was decorated with fine bear, fox and cougar skins obtained for the occasion. Inside the house he displayed battle axes, spears, old muskets, scalping knives, tomahawks, war bonnets and the original scalp taken from the head of a Comanche warrior. The articles of great historic value were borrowed from the famous Buckhorn Salon and Museum.

Breaks over the air were also plentiful. KMAC ran the 13-day transcription and gave the picture additional plugs. Spot announcements were made over KABC. Station KTSA mentioned the film prominently on many of it feature programs and merchants cooperated wholeheartedly in tie-ups on "Mohican Red" and several other angles giving windows and ad space to the attraction.

Announcements were mailed to select lists of leading citizens and a very effective endorsement was given by the Scout Masters Association. Theatre operators contacted grade and high school teachers and clergymen. Displays of J. Fenimore Cooper's works with tinted blow-ups were planted at the Public Library and art panels were placed prominently in the hotel lobbies and restaurants with telling effect.

Assisting Jack Chalman in the campaign were Emily Williams, Clarence Moss, Ray Gleaves and Ben Hill.

OFFICIALS CO-OPERATE ON "SAFE" HALLOWE'EN

Usual Juvenile Pranks Checked by Kid Shows Put On with the Endorsement of Police Heads

Amusing contests considered by theatremen always a part of the yearly Hallowe'en celebrations are of course in line again for the traditional party that comes on Oct. 31, and many of the time-honored stunts listed below are being arranged. However, in addition, a growing sentiment is found in favor of a "safe and sane" Hallowe'en.

Showmen realize that children are inclined to run wild on this day with resultant damage to property and in some cases causing personal injuries. So in various spots in 1935, theatremen took the initiative to sponsor theatre parties where the youngsters could be entertained and find a healthful outlet for their energies without doing any damage.

City Advertises Special Show

In Nelson, British Columbia, Charlie Doctor at the Capitol had no difficulty in getting the cooperation of his mayor and chief of police by offering to put on the show with a special price to children, plus of course a lot of gags to keep the youngsters interested. The officials were very helpful to the point in fact of placing special two-column display ads in the local papers, paid for by the city, in which parents were requested (see cut) to cooperate. The police chief also visited all schools making personal announcements and planted stories on the event.

Show as a result played to higher gross than opening night of the picture and Doctor says nearly 400 children attended. The officials were pleased there were no complaints of property damage which in the previous year had run up to a large total.

Children Appointed Police Deputies

In Pomona, Cal., last year, Stanley Kriner at the Fox Theatre, worked with his police department on a Hallowe'en pledge which when signed by the children and countersigned by the chief of police, was good for admission for a special show put on at the theatre on the Saturday morning following. Copy was as follows:

"I hereby pledge that I will keep the true spirit of Hallowe'en; that I will not be a party to defacing, destroying, removing or damaging in any way anyone's property on Hallowe'en night; that I will not cause injury to anyone by causing the sidewalks or streets to be blocked in any way. I understand that by keeping this pledge I am being a good citizen and as a reward for keeping the pledge this card will be the only admittance—necessary to attend a special Hallowe'en matinee, at the Fox Theatre. . . ."

This was followed by space for name and address of signer under which was statement signed by the police chief appointing "the above to duty as a junior officer to assist the department in the protection of property in Pomona on Hallowe'en night."

Mort Goodman thinks that coming on a Saturday night, there is reason for a special Hallowe'en midnight show, as the folks can sleep late on Sunday. Mort suggests a spooky touch with a bit of eerie entertainment, phosphorous painted spooks and ghosts, perhaps a magic act in keeping. Other stunts suggested by the members which were liked include of course the lobby decorations. Pun'kins, witches, cats, autumn shrubbery are in order and posters calling attention to the "Old-Fashioned Hallowe'en night Party." Contests to be held on the stage are also to be listed. Cornstalks, dried leaves, etc., due to the fire hazards, are to be avoided.

Master of Ceremonies Called For

Actual celebration and contests can be speeded up and paced properly with aid of capable MC and if the manager is not up to it, some local celebrity should be called upon. Curtain opens to the usual noises of horns, whistles, etc., and when house lights are dimmed, sound trailer is shown and perhaps flying witches on broomsticks used for further atmosphere. Entries for the contests should, where possible, be arranged for in advance but extra participants from the audience can be requested.

Balloon contest calls for from six to 10 youngsters in a straight line. Hands are placed behind their backs and balloons inserted in mouths. First one breaking balloon by blowing it up is the winner. The apple-ducking contest is another favorite with the children facing audience around a large tub filled with water. Entrants are on their knees with hands behind backs and first one to get apple out with his teeth cops the prizes. Apples should be large and hard.

Cracker-eating contest calls for small box of crackers unopened in front of each youngster. First one to eat all his crackers and whistle "Turkey in the Straw" takes the prize. Pie-eating contest has older boys behind table facing audience. Blackberry or raspberry pies are the dish that must be eaten without aid of hands.

Other Anniversary Contests

For laughs, the flour gag is recommended whereby six tin pans about three inches high are half filled with flour with a dime in the middle of each pan. Six boys (colored preferred) are lined up kneeling and with hands behind backs. First one to bring out the coin wins. Another giggle is the shoe gag with shoes of ten boys mixed and dumped in one pile. Boys run to pile at one time and winner is the one having his right shoe on and laced first.

The costume party is always a bell-ringer with the children parading around the stage, then lined up and the winners selected by applause. This can be put on for adults in the same manner and if conditions are favorable to it a parade through the main section of town might be put on as a bally to plug the show.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1935, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parenthesis after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1936-37 season.

J. C. JENKINS—HIS COLYUM

Omaha, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

Well, here's something else again. They've just had the big golf tournament, sponsored by the Variety Club, and exhibitors from all over the country were here. The club put up a number of very valuable prizes and it had been our intention to get some of 'em, but our doctor said we must stay in the shade. We followed his advice, mainly to give the boys a show, for we didn't like to horn in and gobble up everything, especially from the bunch of swell fellows who were here, and besides that, Walter Green of the Fepco Advertising Company said he hoped we'd leave the post office and W. O. W. building right where they are, and Jess Merritt of the Loyal hotel said he hoped we'd let the Missouri keep on running under the Douglas street bridge. Jess, you know, has always been strong for water. Well, anyhow, watched 'em dub around a while.

Contrary to their wishes, and over their protest, we dropped in to the Scott-Ballantyne Theatre Equipment Company's office and met Bob Ballantyne and Gus Harms, the two boys who are working like a couple of hound pups after a jackrabbit. They are soon to announce some new equipment fandoogles. If you know what a "gyroscopic filter" and a "beam amplifier" are you've got us out on a limb. We don't know a thing about it except that if they say it's right it's right, anyhow.

When Miss Regina Molseed tells you anything you can generally depend upon it. Regina, you know, is the secretary of the Film Board, and she says that Billy Youngclaus of Grand Island, Neb., has sold his theatre at Newman Grove, Neb., to C. W. Johnson of Friend, Neb., his Shelton house to E. L. Johnson of Montgomery City, Mo., and his Central City house at Central City, Neb., to Joe Lucas, and this will leave Billy with the Empress at Grand Island only. The Lynch theatre at Lynch, Neb., has been sold to Stuart and Keller; the Empress at Verdigre, Neb., to A. U. Jeciminek; the Dreamland at Walnut, Iowa, to Byron Beard, and the Pender theatre at Pender, Neb., by Mrs. Marie Freed to A. E. Thatcher. We are told that the Gem here in Omaha has been reopened by Mr. D. Frank. From the changes that are being made throughout the country, we are inclined to think that the theatre business is picking up to quite an extent.

We have attended a lot of golf tournaments but never one that was so orderly and well handled as this one, and a lot of credit is due to Glen Rogers of the Film Transport Company, who presided at a buffet luncheon (which should have been called a banquet) and other ceremonies, ably assisted by Mr. Avery of RKO.

The attendance was large and the enthusiasm almost went beyond the fondest hopes of a politician. Every one expected to win a prize. Some didn't, but even so it didn't dampen their ardor or detract from their enjoyment of the occasion.

Ted Mendenhall of the Paramount company asked us to have a drink of water and said it was considered excellent for horses, but we didn't have any horses. Carl Rees and Bill Foley, a couple of film hounds, were seen drinking water at a fountain, and Ike Rubens said that it was a sure sign that we would have another dry summer next year.

Sam Epstein, who has a number of neighborhood theatres, said it was his lucky day. He put 41 nickels in the slot machine and got back five, and the last we saw of Sam he was trying to put a nickel in the water cooler. Eugene Blazer, one of Omaha's prominent attorneys, and a very good friend of the theatre folks, was checking the boys up to see if they had paid their seat tax, but they had, and Gene seemed a little surprised. Still it didn't interfere with his appetite.

The club hung up several very valuable prizes for the six flights, which caused considerable interest and rivalry. M. Thompson of St. Paul, Neb., was winner in the second flight and was awarded an electric clock, and Harold Dunn of Valentine, Neb., was also given an electric clock for having come the farthest distance, although he didn't play any golf. The writer was awarded the booby prize, consisting of a glass of water and a ride back to town. All in all the tournament was considered a success, not only in furthering goodfellowship but from financial returns as well.

Carl Reese is to be Omaha's manager of the new Grand National Films, Inc., Johnny Winn will be booker and Larry Hensler and Bob Riddle the film salesmen. The new company seems to be starting off with the right personnel.

Harry Schiller of Grand Island, Neb., seems to be climbing up in the world. Harry has the Grand theatre (which was formerly the Lida) and we are informed that he will wreck the Grand and will build in its place a new one that will be the pride of Nebraska. If the pride of Nebraska is built, Harry will build it, you can bank on that.

Georgia Racely still operates the theatre at O'Neill, Neb., and O'Neill folks know where to go to see a good show. Georgia always has an eye out for the best there is and that's probably why she wanted us to have her subscription to the HERALD renewed. We wanted to have it renewed, too.

Burwell, Neb., is located on the north Loup river, that is, it isn't on the river but on the south bank of the river, and Burwell is where they hold the annual rodeo, which has a wide reputation throughout the middle west, and C. W. Becker is a very able assistant in furnishing entertainment at his theatre. Just what Burwell would do without Mr. Becker and his theatre we don't know, and what Mr. Becker would do without the HERALD he said he didn't know, but he is all right now.

M. Bemond has two theatres, one at Ord and the other one at Loup City, Neb. Mr. Bemond says that both houses need the HERALD and we agreed with him. He was down here and won a fine prize at the golf tournament, as did M. Thompson of St. Paul. Both of these boys are HERALD fans as well as golf fans.

M. D. Buxton at North Bend, Neb., says that business is in about the same condition that the crops are (all shot), but that he expects to hang on as long as the hide lasts. The crops around North Bend are nothing to brag about and M. D. isn't bragging. We had a very delightful visit with him and Mrs. Buxton and we hope to repeat it at some future time.

There is plenty more to be said but we are not going to say it. We are tired and we are going to bed. Good night.

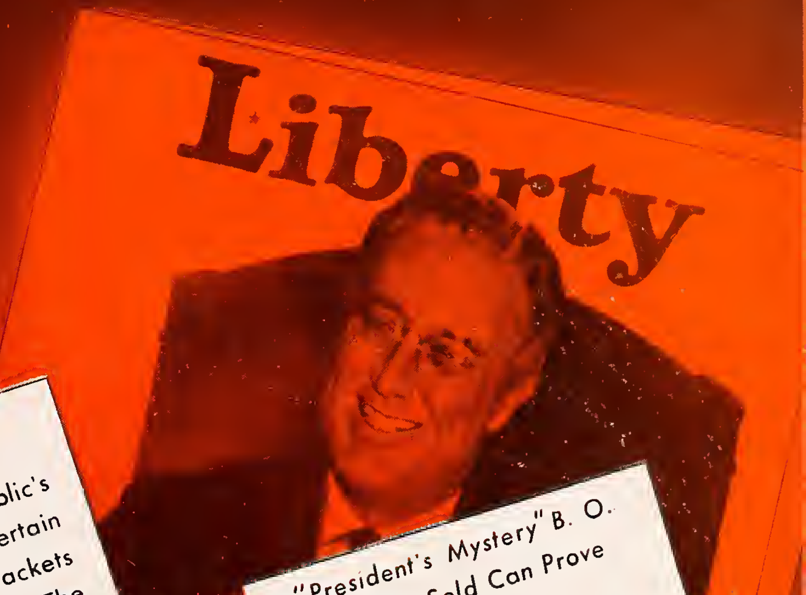
The Entire American Public Is Interested!



"Good murder mystery well handled all around with appeal to audiences in general. Republic presents a timely subject in an exciting, interesting manner. They have seen to it that the picture is good entertainment, besides concerning itself with a subject of wide interest."

—Film Daily

"This emerges as Republic's best effort and seems certain to reach the upper brackets as an important grosser. The direction of Phil Rosen builds continuous suspense from the various situations, never letting interest diminish. The picture will back up all claims made for it."

—Motion Picture Daily

"President's Mystery" B. O. Properly Sold Can Prove a Clean-up

"When the President of the United States suggests the story, when a national magazine hires six famous name writers to put it into words, then you have exploitation possibilities that should make 'The President's Mystery' a box-office natural, if properly exploited."

—Hollywood Reporter

"Picture is one of Republic's most important endeavors, lavishly and carefully made and dealing with topic of most intimate national concern in seriously conceived drama. Generally it stacks up well on credit side and should do business everywhere. Has solid dramatic wallop and human interest."

MONEY MAKERS of '36

THE currently developing Hollywood policy of embellishing casts with two or more top rank stars, commonly discussed as a sequel to the all-star "Grand Hotel," is really rather more akin to the exhibition practice of double billing. A double star policy is likely to be fraught with problems for both producers and players. A likely consequence will be the eclipse of some of the stars. However, since stars are made, not by producers but by public preferences, there will always be as many as the consumers want—and no more.

EXAMINATION of the thousands of returns from showmen both here and in Great Britain, recording their evaluations of the box office merit of the players of the screen of '36, in Motion Picture Herald's annual Money Makers poll* reveals a remarkable unanimity of opinion on the part of the box office customers, regardless of geography and social and economic stratification.

A STUDY of the Money Makers returns indicates clearly enough that the consumers have a certain unvarying set of basic human emotional requirements and that by the inarticulate but inevitable process of acceptance and rejection at the box office they employ the best vicarious agents that they can find. A long view of the market makes it evident that nothing much can be done about it all save to see that the wares, fabricated with all due care, are adequately exposed to the ticket buyers. There probably is not much of a public mind but nobody can make it up.

FLACONS OF SEX

THIS week's special annoyance is the advertising of French and alleged French perfumes. Motion picture copy has received and continues to receive a deal of attention in behalf of general respectability. Diligent guardians of the commonweal might cast a glance over the pages of the magazines and newspaper rotogravure sections to discover there the odors of innuendo. Three brand names that come to mind at the moment are "Indiscreet," "My Sin" and "Scandal." There are countless others, mostly in the "amour" series. The implication of the name and copy is that with one drop of the odeur behind the ear just any lady can step forth and substantially devastate the social scene with her exotic allure. Success and mink coats, one would gather, are to be had by about the same technique by which the trapper gets the scent-baited, amorous mink. Aside from the moral implications there is also the question of "truth in advertising," which is so earnestly discussed in the press. What they purport to sell can not be put in a bottle.

WHAT PRICE PICCOLO?

EXULTANT WPA Federal Music Project publicity announces at the close of the outdoor season concern attendances totaling 1,612,826 at 1,256 performances, and dance attendances of 1,024,150 at 181 gatherings, in nine locations under the sponsorship of the Department of Parks in Greater New York. One discovers no figures on costs and disbursements. The well taxed amusement industry would be interested.

WHO IS "SATURATED"?

MR. FRITZ KREISLER, master fiddler, returning, has told shipnews reporters that "you really have to go to Europe to find mental and physical peace." Because America is still developing it is "a country of fantastic speed and competition. . . . Until you have reached the saturation point, you can not relax." He says that's why we have jazz music. No one seems to have asked Mr. Kreisler what kind of saturation has produced that special mental and physical sort of peace now manifest in the current Spanish tarantella. Shipnews should be abolished. Travellers' minds, like some delicate wines, seem to break down after a sea voyage.

REPORTING Mr. Grover Whalen's remarks about New York's World's Fair of 1939, Motion Picture Daily quotes him saying " 'I hope through your great industry to tell the world about it.' He referred to the newsreels." Certainly, he did, for every project now addressed at the public aims first at the newsreel screen. Meanwhile, what will Mr. Whalen's fair do for the motion picture in the way of free space and display?

To appear about January 1, 1937, in Motion Picture Herald and Fame—the Box Office Check-Up and Audit of Personality.

This Week

Grosses and Theatres

A table prepared by United States Government statisticians shows interesting relationships between the percentage of the country's population in each state, the percentage of the country's expenditure for amusements received in each state and the number of theatres in each state. The figures show that 54 per cent of the amusement industry's income is derived from two sections of the country in which 42 per cent of the total population reside and which have 39 per cent of the theatres. Seventy per cent of the gross comes from 52 per cent of the theatres.

The table, listing states and groups of states, and an analysis of it appear on page 13.

Musicians' Picketing

Extension of the drive by the American Federation of Musicians to restore musicians' jobs in theatres is indicated by requests from 20 locals in large cities for information on the operation and results of the campaign being conducted by Local 802 in New York. The Philadelphia unit has voted to join the drive and other locals are considering such a move. Whether the New York drive has yielded results is a debated question.

The story of the campaign is summarized on page 36.

Soskin Sees Accord

Accord between British and American producers will be so developed within the next two years that the public of both countries will not be conscious of any difference in production technique in films of either, according to Paul Soskin, head of a British producing company, who arrived in America on the Normandie this week. Mr. Soskin will make seven features for Columbia at the Amalgamated Studios near London.

The British producer's views on Anglo-American cooperation are quoted on page 58.

Swelling Receipts

Theatre business has been mentioned considerably of late as showing marked signs of improvement. The extent to which that increased attendance is swelling gross receipts of both exhibitors and distributors is reflected in the annual admissions tax report of the United States Government, which shows that 1936 tax revenue from box offices was $1,250,000 higher than in 1935.

The report, together with some highly optimistic Wall Street predictions of even better theatre business, is detailed on page 31.

Legislation

Adverse theatre legislation sprang up in Tampa, Fla., and Cleveland, this week. The Florida city council passed an ordinance taxing all retail business 25 cents on each $100 of sales, including theatres, to meet funds for its share of WPA projects. In Cleveland, a committee has been formed to prevent the repeal of Ohio's three per cent sales tax on food for such a move would bring back the 10 per cent amusement tax.

Recapitalizing

The voting on a recapitalization plan of Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., which was scheduled for late last week, was postponed when it was found that enough of the minority share holders in the company were not present at the stockholders meeting. The next gathering is set for October 23, and in the meantime, President Herbert J. Yates has signified his willingness to meet with the minority holders to discuss the new proposed plan. It was said that the postponement was made despite the presence of a quorum at the meeting and despite the fact that 55 per cent of those stockholders present favored the new plan.

Details of the story are on page 32.

SMPE Convention

Recent developments in the technological branch of the industry were described and discussed at the semi-annual convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers at Rochester, N. Y., this week. S. K. Wolf of Motion Picture Consultants, Inc., subsidiary of Electrical Research Products, Inc., was elected president of the society for a two year term, succeeding Homer G. Tasker. Dr. C. E. Kenneth Mees was awarded the Progress Medal and Edward W. Kellogg was given the Journal Award at the banquet held on Wednesday evening.

The convention report and summaries of the technical papers read at the meetings are published on page 45.

Putting Radio to Work

St. Louis is watching the results of the strategy of a group of theatres employing the radio to lure listeners from their receiving sets at home to the theatres. The reputed competition of radio to motion pictures has been bringing complaints from thousands of exhibitors everywhere through their city, state and national exhibitor associations.

Only last week the Walter Reade circuit of 30 houses in the East decided to bring important broadcasts directly to their stages, interrupting regular screen programs. For details, see page 25.

B & K Doubles Start

The long discussed, and fought, double feature policy of Balaban and Katz circuit in Chicago is now in operation, five theatres outside the Loop starting the parade. With the return of the dual bills the independent exchanges have been waging a battle for product to meet the expected demand. One exchange, Capitol, will have 98 features for release.

Cooperative Benefit Film

A cooperative motion picture, for the production of which stars, directors, writers, supporting players, etc., would lend their services gratis, is proposed this week by director George Cukor as a means of raising funds to care for needy film folk. Mr. Cukor, who offers his services as director of the first picture, will lay his idea before executives.

How Mr. Cukor proposes to produce the picture and how it would serve to raise the necessary money, is discussed in the story found on page 32.

Shirley Temple Sued

Shirley Temple, youngest of the stars, this week found herself in the same category as some of her older contemporaries when she was made the defendant, along with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Temple, Twentieth Century-Fox and the California Bank and Trust Company, of an action filed by Jack Hays, independent producer. Mr. Hays claims he has a contract calling for the youthful star to work under his management exclusively but that when her parents turned her over to Twentieth Century-Fox in 1932 they failed to pay him according to his contract. Mr. Hays seeks $500,000 damages outright and an additional $500,000 as one-half of the youngster's earnings from indorsements, radio, advertising and other contracts.

Details of the action are found on page 26.

RKO Reorganization

The recent return of Federal Judge William Bondy from his European vacation has increased efforts of attorneys to reach an agreement on the part of Atlas Corporation and the Rockefeller interests in order to determine quickly a plan of reorganization for RKO. The Rockefeller interests have a claim of $9,600,000 and as soon as an agreement is reached on the settlement of this amount it is felt the reorganization will move ahead swiftly.

Details are on page 26.

Studio Challenge

That the new Pinewood Studios at Iver, Buckinghamshire, are a direct challenge to Hollywood was the conviction expressed by Charles Boot, builder of the plant, at the luncheon which formally inaugurated the opening. Americans present commended the compactness of the studios and the covered area for transporting sets in any kind of weather.

Details of the studio opening and other developments on the British scene are presented on page 57.

Restricting Doubles

Double features figured only slightly in the news of the industry this week. In Akron, Ohio, the Independent Theatre Owners' Single Feature Committee picked "The Great Ziegfeld" and "Anthony Adverse" for single featuring only, commenting that these were the only two pictures on the current list of releases worthy of such treatment. In Oklahoma City dual bills made their first appearance at the Liberty Theatre, and in St. Louis Harry C. Arthur announced the Shubert-Rialto would be operated by Fanchon and Marco under a double feature policy.

For the details of the action in these three territories, see the story on page 32.

Trade Practice Changes

The report that a majority of the distributing companies will announce specific changes in their sales policies before October 26th, to conform with the fair trade practice program sought by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, was hailed this week by Edward Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. "There is every prospect of ultimate success for our program," he said.

Details of Mr. Kuykendall's statement and of the suits are reported on page 23.

Smith at United Artists

Andrew W. ("Andy") Smith, Jr., who recently resigned from his posts of eastern and Canadian sales manager of Warners and vice-president of Vitagraph, Inc., this week joined United Artists as general sales manager. The company announced that it was increasing its distribution force because the producers releasing through it were increasing the number of pictures they would make.

Maxwell Buying GB

Completion of preliminary stages of a deal whereby John Maxwell, head of Associted British Pictures, will acquire the holdings of the Ostrer brothers in Metropolis and Bradford Trust, the controlling interest in Gaumont British, was announced this week. Mr. Maxwell purchased 250,000 "B" shares of the stock from the Ostrers but transfer of 5,100 "A" shares, the most important block, has been delayed because 20th Century-Fox, owner of 4,900 "A" shares has refused to consent to the sale. Statements issued by the Ostrers, Mr. Maxwell, and Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox, in London fail to indicate the outcome of the deadlock.

Details of the deal are told by Bruce Allan in a cable from London on page 54.

Chance Games Attacked

After a comparatively quiet period along the national chance game front, seven direct attacks were launched this week against the box office stimulants in as many key territories, and the games became entangled in additional legal difficulties, especially suits by disgruntled patrons in other cities.

A complete list of the actions, with a discussion of the various moves made by authorities to stamp out the practice as well as the individual actions, are found in the story on page 14.

Production

Eight new productions went into work at Hollywood and five were taken to the cutting room, leaving a net 43 active, in a week undistinguished by exceptional studio incident.

Details are reported in "The Hollywood Scene," page 41

Screen and Politics

The motion picture is now being used by both Republicans and Democrats in their bitter campaigns for the Presidency, the two major parties employing Pathe News to provide them with screen material.

The film political battle has many ramifications. They are reported on page 15.

New Tribunal

The principle of a Film Board of Trade to settle trade issues has been approved by more than 200 theatreowners in New South Wales. The objectives include theatre license control, a standard film contract, giveaways, minimum admission charges, program footage, and censorship.

Developments "down under" are reported on page 56.

Austrian Regulations

Any picture offered for importation into Austria at terms considered too high could be rejected under the drastic regulation proposed to the Government by a committee of producers, distributors and exhibitors. The committee would fix the number of pictures to be imported in a season.

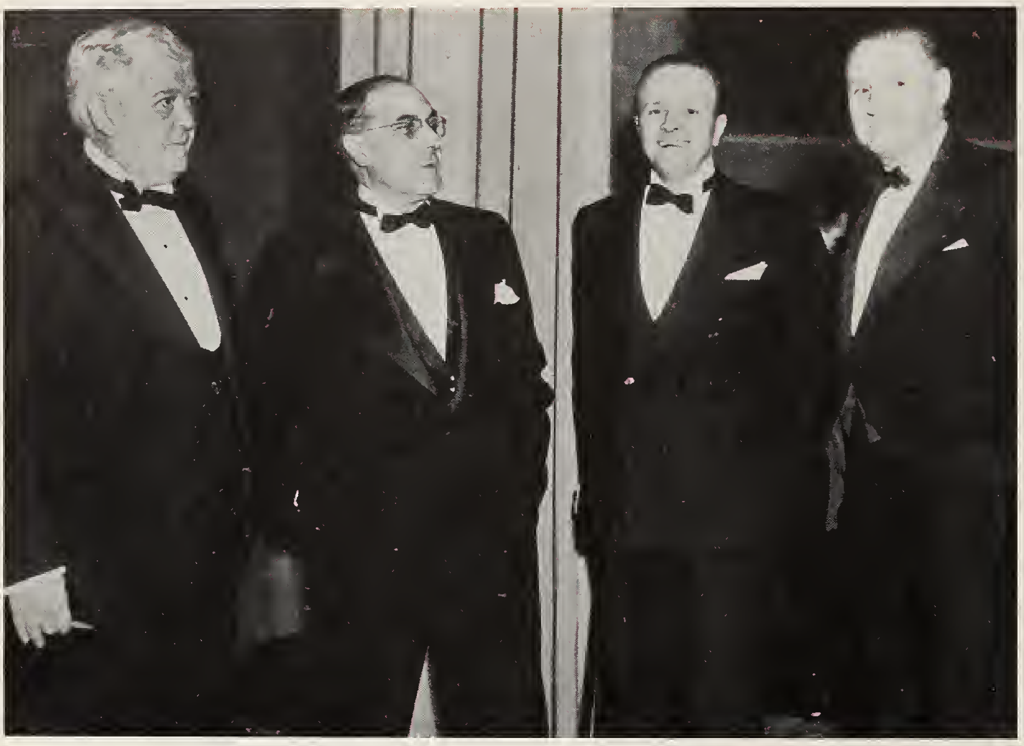
Further details of the committee's suggestions appear on page 26.

'Way Down South

As if by common consent, and without evident explanation, producers are turning their attention to the romantic regions below the Mason and Dixon line and eight pictures promised by as many companies have Dixie as their setting.

Titles and sponsors are named on page 41.

This Week in Pictures



CONGRATULATORY PARTY. W. G. Van Schmus of Radio City Music Hall and executives of United Artists meet at the reception for Nino Martini, in Pickford-Lasky's "The Gay Desperado." (L. to r.) Mr. Van Schmus, Dr. A. H. Giannini, president; H. D. Buckley and G. J. Schaefer.

EN TOUR. With roller skates Judy Garland (left) and Deanne Durbin, starlets of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, survey the studio grounds. Their first is the Miniature Musical "Every Sunday," which, MGM hopes, will start them starward.

FROM VIENNA. Della Lind, singer-actress, follows Luise Rainer from the city of the beautiful to the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio.

COAST GUARDSMAN. (Below) John Wayne is also a Coast Guardsman in his starring picture for Universal, "Sea Spoilers." Nan Grey has the feminine lead in the film.

COMMENDATORY. (Below) L. Howell Davis (right), of the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors, on the Paramount lot with George Bagnall, studio manager, lauds Production Code Administration.

BETWEEN PICTURES. (Below) Fredric March and his wife, Florence Eldredge, in New York for a short visit before he starts "A Star Is Born" for David Selznick.

DANCERS. Veloz and Yolanda, dancers in Paramount's "Champagne Waltz," November release, are returning to the Waldorf-Astoria.

PONY GIRL. Shirley Temple is quite proud of Spunky. She hung a lei about his neck when he minced out of the express car. Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the board of United Artists, bought him in London for the third anniversary of her starring career.

CLASS COMES TO ORDER. Republic has converted a Spanish chapel building on its lot into its new talent school. Three of these constitute the first class. (Left to right) Christine Maple, Mary Russell, Lillian Burns, dramatic coach, and Grace Durkin. Ned Dobson is supervising the school.

DEEP SEA DIVER. Captain Wallace Caswell, Jr., (middle), has been chosen to play the leading role in "Killers of the Sea" for Grand National. Here he is with Raymond Friedgen (left), producer for the company, and Mayor Custer Russ of Panama City, Florida.

MAKING HISTORY. It's a historical romance of the Puritan days which brings Claudette Colbert next to the screen, in "Maid of Salem." Adolph Zukor, president of Paramount, visited the set, the star and Frank Lloyd, producer-director. Fred MacMurray, he of the robust roles in several current productions, is co-starring with Miss Colbert in the picture. The release date is yet to be announced.

RETURN. The Carl Laemmles, father and son, have returned to America from Europe aboard the S.S. Queen Mary, with Junior Laemmle ready to resume production, with his own company in Hollywood. He says he will produce four or five features a year. He will be his own talent scout and plans to spend considerable time in New York. Releasing negotiations for his product are underway.

70% OF GROSSES COME FROM 52% OF THEATRES

How and Where the American Consumer Dollar Is Spent on Amusement Is Analyzed by Government

Fifty-four per cent of the money spent for amusements, of which motion picture theatres receive the bulk, is spent in two sections of the country having 42 per cent of the country's population and 39 per cent of the theatres, according to the United States Government.

The areas are the states included in the Middle Atlantic and East North Central divisions, comprising New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio and Wisconsin. If Massachusetts, with its dense population, and California and Texas, because of their size, are added to these totals, the percentages increase to 70 per cent of the gross revenue coming from 55 per cent of the population and 52 per cent of the theatres.

The table which appears on this page is part of an analysis of the distribution of the American consumer dollar made by Wilford L. White, of the marketing research division of the Department of Commerce.

Population, Theatres and Spending

Analysis of the table shows significant relationships among population, percentage of theatres and percentage of the amusement dollar spent in each state and geographical division. In New England these percentages remain nearly equal, with a slight increase in the percentage of receipts being accounted for by the denser population of Massachusetts. The Middle Atlantic states, which have 21.5 per cent of the population and 19 per cent of the theatres, receive 32.7 per cent of the public's expenditure for amusement. The discrepancy is wholly taken up in the figures for New York state, which, with 10.3 per cent of the population and 9.3 per cent of the theatres, receives 22.7 per cent of the receipts.

That the relationship of these percentages is governed largely by the economic character of the geographical division is shown graphically in the figures for the North Central States. The eastern half of this division, comprising Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio and Wisconsin, is about evenly divided between an agricultural and an industrial population and the percentages are about equal, 20.6, 19.9 and 21.4 for population, number of theatres and share of receipts.

The western half of the group, including Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska and North and South Dakota, is almost entirely agricultural. Here lives 10.9 per cent of the population but scattered over so great a territory that the element of distance has brought a greater number of theatres in proportion to the number of residents, in this case 15.6 per cent. The share of receipts averages 8.9 per cent.

FIRING AT CHANCE GAMES RENEWED; DISGRUNTLED PATRONS JOIN FIGHT

Milwaukee Attorneys Rule Bank Night Is Not Lottery, but Better Business Bureau Deplores Practice

Tampa Council Considers Tax of $1 on $100 Receipts of Theatres Using Bank Night; Betting Game Introduced

After a lull along the chance game front, seven attacks were made this week against the something-for-nothing devices in as many territories.

In Milwaukee, Tampa, Iowa City, Pearisburg and Danville, Va.; Spartanburg, S. C., and Salem, Ore., direct action, in one form or another, was taken against the various games. In Kansas City, Denver, Seattle, Detroit and Tampa the practices were involved on court dockets. In Los Angeles, despite apparently waning interest of patrons in chance games, still another scheme, "E-Z Money Nite," made its bow this week.

In Milwaukee, both the district and city attorneys this week voiced the opinion that Bank Night is not a lottery but "an unfair business practice." To substantiate their view, the attorneys pointed to the ruling of James E. Finnegan, state attorney general, declaring Bank Night not illegal, and to the decisions of the supreme courts in Iowa, New Hampshire and California, which have held that Bank Night is not a lottery. Nevertheless, efforts will be made to induce exhibitors to drop the practice, Geoffrey Willoughby, manager of the Milwaukee Better Business Bureau, said. Where agreements fail to halt what the bureau calls "lottery features," exposure will follow and in some cases, it was said, requests would be made of public authorities for prosecution.

The City Council of Tampa, Fla., has under consideration a motion picture theatre ordinance, it is reported, that would impose a tax of 30 cents on every $100 of receipts above $2,000 a year, except in the case of theatres having Bank Night attractions. These houses would be taxed $1 per $100.

An ordinance designed to prohibit Bank Night in Iowa City, Iowa, is pending, and if it is adopted it will set a state precedent, according to Mayor Thomas F. Martin. The ordinance had its first reading this week before the City Council and only two more readings are necessary to make it a law. The ordinance forbids the theatres to "give or sell merchandise or cash or other products."

Manager Fined

In Pearisburg, Va., this week Trial Justice M. P. Farrier found that J. A. Reel, manager of the Star theatre at Narrows, Va., was guilty of the charge of operating a lottery, but in view of the fact that the case was in the nature of a test of chance games the exhibitor was fined only $10 and given a one-day suspended sentence. The court held, in a lengthy opinion from the bench, that the socalled "bank night" as operated by the theatre constituted a lottery in violation of the Virginia laws and it was inferred that in the future all similar games would be held in the same classification.

Danville, Va., joined the many cities in that state in which the police are questioning the distribution of "Jack Pots" in theatres. Charles Abercrombie, manager of the Capitol there, was summoned to appear in court to answer a charge of violating the state's lottery laws.

A bit farther south, at Spartanburg, S. C., all theatres in that territory have now discontinued "Jack Pot Nights" following a ruling of Attorney General John M. Daniel of South Carolina that such "schemes" constitute a violation of the lottery laws of the state.

At Salem, Ore., the state supreme court has declared unconstitutional the act passed in 1935 which authorized the licensing of dart games.

The supreme court of Kansas, now in fall session at Kansas City, is scheduled shortly to hear the quo warranto proceedings brought early last spring by Clarence V. Beck, attorney general, against Fox Midwest on a charge of operating a lottery in the use of Bank Night. The suit of H. M. Jackson and his daughter, Elsie Jackson, against A. L. Dare, operator of the Rosedale theatre in Kansas City, is being settled out of court. Mr. Jackson sued the operator for refusal to pay his daughter a prize she claimed she had won on a cash night.

Suits filed by two dissatisfied customers against the "Lucky Seven" theatres in Denver operating Bank Night are to come up soon on the court calendar there. Frank Hickey, attorney for the theatres, said they will be fought to the finish since the houses felt the patrons did not comply with the conditions of the drawings. Mrs. M. C. Morain, who claimed she was represented on September 8 by a socalled courtesy registration card given her at the matinee performance, is suing for $1,000. The management denied that it had in its possession a courtesy card of registration for Mrs. Moran. The other defendant, Robert L. Voth, suing for $200, said he was standing outside one of the theatres on June 16 when his name was called as "Roth" and that he did not answer because he did not know that his name had been drawn. B. D. Cockrill, manager of the Denham, said these two complaints were the first made since the plan was started by the theatres in August, 1935. Since then, he said, $92,000 had been given away among 62,000 registrations.

In Seattle, Vaughn Isom sued three theatres, the Capitol, Avalon and Liberty in Olympia, charging that he was refused the money to which he was entitled as a result of the Bank Night drawing held by the theatres. He asked for $450 in the supreme court, claiming that he was refused payment on a technicality. The theatres replied that he was not in attendance at any of the houses, as required by the rules.

The test hearing on Bank Night and other chance games in Detroit has been postponed indefinitely because of the illness of Judge Robert M. Toms who is scheduled to preside.

Woman Drops Suit

Giving no reason for their request, attorneys for Mrs. Hazel Greene Felix, "Tampa's Public Bank Nite Suitor No. 1," this week appeared in the circuit court there and asked that her suit against the Tampa theatre for failure to pay her a Bank Night prize of $650 be cancelled.

The Florida supreme court soon will be asked to rule on the legality of Bank Nights. Gulf Theatres, Inc., subsidiary of the Sparks circuit, in an effort to bring about a test case, permitted a default judgment to be entered against it in a suit by W. A. Rice, who charged failure to pay him $1,550 which he claims he won.

A new scheme this week made its appearance in Los Angeles, when Harry Nace, Jr., and C. C. Coates introduced "E-Z Money Nite." Patrons bet on numbers listed on a card, deposit it in a box, retaining an identifying stub, and the winner is drawn much in the same manner as in the other systems.

"ARE PICTURES TOO SERIOUS?"

Declaring editorially that "within the past five years we have had a sequence of talking pictures that has established the movies as one of the great arts," the Vancouver Sun names a half-dozen outstanding dramas and continues, "but there is another picture due to be shown shortly in Vancouver which is of another type. 'My Man Godfrey' is pure farce. But it is done with such consummate artistry that it is an utter joy."

"It is the sort of thing common in Europe," the editorial continues, "but seldom done in North America, where we still cling, apparently, to the idea that the lighter touches are unworthy of the finest artistic effort. . . . We have not accustomed ourselves to the notion that true art is a combination of light and shade, with the lighter touches predominating, as in life. . . . How much better could we sustain and understand the dramatic suspense of 'Mutiny on the Bounty' were we fortified with two or three 'My Man Godfreys' . . . Motion pictures have achieved artistic and intelligent production. The next step is artistic, intelligent and judicious distribution."

REPUBLICANS BUY FILMS TO FIGHT SCREEN ATTACKS OF DEMOCRATS

GOP Employs Pathe News to Supply Stock for Opposing "New Dealers" Who Employed Pathe for Themselves

"Faking" of Films Charged; GOP Using 60 Projection Trucks; New Deal Will Make WPA "Plough" Picture Sequel

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

The motion picture, in a fashion, stands on the edge of entanglements in the battle of the politicians for the Presidency of these United States, with both major parties using the screen as a medium of propaganda.

The "New Deal" Democrats have been using the motion picture since last summer to sing the praises of progress under its various alphabetizations, producing and exhibiting films independently on its own, and, in a more direct concentration, through Pathe News, a subsidiary of Radio-Keith-Orpheum, which has a contract to make 30 WPA short subjects and insert parts of them once a month in its regular Pathe News release to theatres—for which the government reputedly is paying the newsreel a substantial sum.

Now the Republicans are employing Pathe News to supply stock material for motion pictures in which they will attempt to discredit the same "New Dealers" who have employed Pathe to advance the Rooseveltian causes. Only the Republicans are not as fortunate as their Democratic adversaries in obtaining a release for their films in Pathe News. They must distribute the pictures themselves, and for that reason have arranged to flood the country with motion picture motor caravans for and in behalf of their Presidential and Vice-Presidential candidates, Alfred M. Landon, of Kansas, and Colonel Frank Knox, of Illinois.

Ironically or otherwise, the Republicans have titled a 20-minute "newsreel" picture "Let's Look at the Record," an observation so frequently made by Alfred Emanuel Smith, of New York, during the days when he campaigned for himself and for Franklin Roosevelt for the presidency, before he became a Roosevelt opponent and a Landon proponent.

Meanwhile the theatre owner is using extra effort to fight the competition of political ballyhooing.

While the Democrats and Republicans are marshaling sound projectors on the wholesale to use the motion picture in the pitched battle of the final rounds of the campaign, the public is becoming involved as it sits in attendance at its local theatres.

Asbury Park, N. J., patrons demanded the return of their admissions when the Walter Reade circuit stopped regular screen performances to broadcast a Roosevelt speech from its stages.

New Jersey Republican women were reported to have organized a statewide claque to "hiss" Roosevelt and applaud Landon whenever they appear on theatre screens.

Theatregoers at the Victoria, in Greenfield, Mass., forced the owner to withdraw an anti-New Deal film.

North Dakota and Missouri residents spoke in denunciation of "trickery" allegedly employed to bring political discredit in specially-prepared propaganda films.

REMOVES FILM WHEN HIS PATRONS PROTEST

"We received an advertising film running about 90 feet," reports Louis Rosenzweig, operator of the Victoria theatre, Greenfield, Mass., "from the Alexander Film Company, Colorado Springs, Col. The package also contained advance payment for the showing of the film for one week. I did not have an opportunity to see it until it appeared on the screen.

"The substance showed a meat market with a lady customer complaining about the high prices of meat and the butcher replying, 'Why blame me,' and pointing to a sign showing the actual amount of the price represented in taxes.

"There was no mention of any candidate's name or any political party. However, the inference was obvious. Due to several complaints we removed it from our screen after the first showing and returned it with the check to the Alexander Film Company."

The motion picture ambitions of the Republicans were being nurtured even when the Republican National Committee in Washington was launching a severe attack on the Democrats, last summer, for allegedly spending public relief funds to make the Pathe-WPA, Resettlement Administration, CCC and other forms of "New Deal" films, branded by the Republicans as "political propaganda" for the Presidential campaign.

The Republicans' early plans, guarded with the utmost secrecy, were understood to have called for a $500,000 motion picture program leveled at the Democrats. The idea was alternately relayed, without action, between New York and the Republican national headquarters in Chicago. The other day they decided on the single 20-minute anti-New Deal "newsreel," for which Pathe News supplied material from its newsreel library, under contract to the Republican National Committee.

The Republicans will not even attempt to obtain either major distribution or independent exhibition of their subject in regular motion picture theatres.

"Let's Look at the Record" begins and ends with shots of the White House and the Lincoln memorial. In between appear pictures of the many and divers ventures, alphabetical and otherwise, which have emanated from the White House in the last three and one-half years.

The first New Deal effort pictured is the NRA and its Blue Eagle. Here the birth of the Eagle is shown, the mammoth parades ushering its beginning, and the celebrations for its ascendancy. And then rapidly, one upon another, come shots of newspaper headlines of NRA "prosecutions" of the little tailor, the little cleaner, the little business man—finally the Blue Eagle's death by Supreme Court nullification.

Next is shown how the Republicans say the textile industry was affected, with jobless workers streaming from closed textile factories as boatloads of Japanese merchandise pour into American ports.

Then, in rapid succession, come pictures of the New Deal's program of scarcity; farmers plowing their crops under; empty stalls of the Chicago stockyards; the dust storms and their attendant desolation; farmers practicing the New Deal doctrine of "abandonment," leaving their homes.

Next the film portrays how agricultural scarcity at home opened the gates to importations from abroad, with freighters from the Argentine unloading bushels of wheat and Canadian dairy farmers shipping their milk and other produce over the border.

The incidental music sounds a gay, organ-grinder note at the next point, as claims of federal "boondoggling" projects appear on the screen; of a monkey house, equipped with all the comforts of home, for a zoo in Arkansas; of a $19,000 dog house, complete with shower baths, in Memphis, Tenn.; of workmen on a $17,000 Yonkers, N. Y., project cutting down ragweed near a dog house; of Passamaquoddy's deserted village and Florida's abandoned $5,000,000 canal.

The film concludes with pictures of Governor Landon on campaign tours and at home with his family.

Made under the supervision of John Begg, head of the motion picture division of the Republican National Committee, by Pathe News, the two-reeler is scheduled for showing with portable projection equipment.

24 Caravans at Work

At the present time a fleet of eight trailer caravans are working in the eastern division, six in the midwest and about ten in the far west. Additional trailers are being equipped by state committees.

In the Republicans' motion picture division are the following executives, besides Mr. Begg: Sidney McKean, supervisor of newsreels on the governor's train; Frederick Elliott, eastern division manager, and Herbert Edwards, western division manager. A. K. Barta is in charge of the fleet of 30 sound trucks scheduled for the western division.

The trailer caravans are expected to total 60 by the end of this week.

A motorized campaign caravan consists of a coupe with trailer attached, together with pictures of the candidates on the sides.

The coupe-trailer contains a standard-width sound motion picture projector with a 1,500 watt arc light. The sound motion pictures are projected into a mirror set at an angle in the top and then reflected to a translucent screen mounted at the rear of the trailer.

The sound system consists of two amplifiers with sufficient output to make the sound audible for a distance of six city blocks for voice and three-quarters of a mile for music. There are four loud speakers, the largest trumpet measuring six feet.

Phonograph turntables allow amplification of standard and prepared records, and radio installation provides for the picking up of national and local broadcasts and relaying them through the loud speakers. An electric-generator plant is installed in the coupe which supplies all the current required for the operation of the projection equipment and enables it to function independently of outside power sources.

In addition to the standard-width motion picture projector, each trailer carries a 16mm. sound projector with portable screen so that two separate showings of the film are possible at the same time.

Sleeping quarters for the crew, which consists of a motion picture operator and a driver-engineer, are provided in the trailer which also contains facilities for using it as a traveling campaign field office.

Space Economized

The interior of the trailer is a model of space economy in arrangement, and considerable thought apparently was devoted to building and placing cabinets in which each independent item in the complicated equipment could have its own proper place.

Platforms with microphones are carried for the campaign speakers. Should speakers make their talks within local halls or auditoriums, the unit amplification system can pick up speeches and broadcast them to street crowds.

Glass-faced cabinets measuring 10 feet are mounted on both sides of the trailers containing displays of foreign-made articles together with analogous American made product. Descriptive placards state briefly and concisely the number of imports during the past year of the articles displayed, the landed cost of each article and number of American workmen who could have been employed if the imported article had been made in America. Exhibits also contain statements regarding the wage scales of the foreign workmen (for example, Japanese who work for 21 cents a day). These tariff displays are so placed that the unit commander can stand inside the trailer and discuss the exhibits from the lower window and distribute literature regarding foreign imports and the Administration's tariff policies.

Confined to the One Film

These specifications are for the units put out for the national Republican committee. The units supplied by state and city groups probably will not be as pretentious.

Only the "Let's Look at the Record" film will be shown by the Republicans. Prints on both 16 mm. and 35 mm. film are available to district chairmen everywhere for special showings. No dates have been made for the showing of the film in theatres by the national group. The members of the Motion Picture division in Chicago say they feel the public would resent propaganda mixed with their film entertainment in film houses, so they have dropped whatever plans existed along this line. If a county chairman arranges to show the picture in a theatre, this is acceptable provided it is not as part of the regular screen show.

Jesse Owens Film

In some cases certain Republican groups have gone about the making and showing of films that are not connected with the National Republican Committee. In New York Jesse Owens, Olympics hero, appears in a special short subject which is strictly Republican propaganda. This film is being shown to Negro groups.

While it is too early to get reports on the work the film caravans are doing, the national headquarters reports many incidents connected with the sound trucks.

PARTISANS IN CROWDS KEEP CREWS GUESSING

Political partisans along the routes of the parties' film and loudspeaker caravans are giving the crews a problem all their own.

A. K. Barta, in charge of the sound trucks of the Republicans' western division, said this week in Chicago that frequently the wires from the trucks to the microphones were pulled away, until the truck operators were ordered to park alongside the speakers.

According to Director Barta, it is not infrequent that the wires from the trucks to the microphones on the speakers' stands are pulled away by partisans who resent the broadcasts. As a result the truck operators are now ordered to park alongside the speakers wherever possible in order to avoid any such trouble. "Battles of Sound" between Democratic and Republican trucks also have been reported.

Fight Over Films Reaches Fans

The political battle has reached out among the voters themselves at their neighborhood theatres.

Numerous instances have been reported where exhibitors have publicly admitted to the censoring of their newsreels before exhibition, in order to keep their screens "clean" of politics. Now comes word, through the pro-Roosevelt-New Deal New York World-Telegram, that the Women's Republican Club of New Jersey is organizing a statewide claque to go to motion picture theatres and "hiss" Roosevelt and cheer for Landon every time they appear on the screen. There were some 800,000 registered Republicans in New Jersey in the last Presidential election, all of them potential patrons for New Jersey's 420 motion picture theatres.

Theatres in the pro-Landon community of Asbury Park in New Jersey felt a new form of political expression the other day when patrons, principally at the Paramount, went to the managers and demanded return of their admission fee when a radio broadcast of an address by President Roosevelt was turned on in the playhouse in the middle of a regular screen performance.

Asbury Park's theatres are controlled for the most part by the Walter Reade Circuit, operating some 30 houses throughout New York and New Jersey. Mr. Reade announced two weeks ago that, in order to offset the competition of radio, he had decided on a policy of stopping his motion picture shows to permit broadcasting from the stages of his theatres of the important radio programs from which the box office is reputed to suffer most, this in order to lure potential patrons away from their radios at home.

Charges of "Faked" Films

From both North Dakota and Missouri comes word that "trickery" is being used to produce motion pictures allegedly aimed to bring discredit to one or the other party.

One Marty Roland, of Detroit, Mich., and his two assistants, Louis Marlow and Gordon Avil, were questioned by City Marshal H. C. Clay, in the little Ozark Mountain town of Arcadia, Missouri, over the filming of a street scene in that place, after they were said to have admitted that they had come to Arcadia on orders from the Republican National Committee to get motion pictures to support attacks being made upon the Roosevelt Administration for "boondoggling."

It was charged that the Roland unit rented half-a-dozen cows in Arcadia and herded them along the sidewalks early one morning to create the impression that Arcadia did not need the new sidewalk which the WPA had just built at a cost of $20,098. And instead of having city officials tell what they thought about the new improvements, the photographers are alleged to have paid a local farmer $1 a minute to make derisive remarks as the cows walked across the screen, predicting that "only cows could use the walks" and that the construction was an example of extravagance of the New Deal.

Marshal Clay ordered the motion picture crew out of town.

The Arcadia incident threatens to bring a storm of adverse legislation in Missouri's Democratic legislature on any branch of the organized motion picture industry which may be found to have participated in the venture, according to David Barrett, newspaper correspondent in St. Louis who operates a motion picture trade news bureau.

"In many parts of the state there is outspoken criticism of the use of the motion picture screen for attacks upon the national administration," Mr. Barrett reported, "and it is now certain that many members of the new House of Representatives and Senate will come to the new General Assembly, convening at Jefferson City next January, pledged to vote for legislation aimed to curb practices complained of. There is already talk of state censorship of all motion pictures, heavy excise taxes on commercial and advertising films of all kinds, a film footage tax and also a drastic state law against overflow crowds."

Mr. Barrett reported that the State Democratic Committee in Missouri is complaining about the Arcadia incident.

Newspaper Charges "Fake" in Film

Still another charge of a "faked" political film appeared in the Post at Fargo, N. D., which described the arrival in nearby Jamestown, Stutsman County, N. D., of two unidentified motion picture cameramen, to perpetrate what was described as "a classic in the annals of phony stories and phony pictures of North Dakota in 1936, a champion in a long parade of drought 'fakes.' "

The Post explained that two motion picture photographers drove to the Stoddard family's farm and asked permission to take "some pictures for the movies." The Stoddards consented to the suggestions of the cameramen that they load some of their household goods, a couple of calves and some farm equipment into the family truck, load themselves into the family car and drive the caravan down the road while the cameras cranked showing a "North Dakota family fleeing from the drought."

The pictures were taken in a journey of less than a mile, continued the Post, and then the Stoddards turned around, unloaded their belongings and got $5 for their trouble.

"The Stoddards are looking for those cameramen," reported the Post. "They understand their pictures have been displayed around the

Protests Do Not Halt U. S. Films

Criticism by anti-New Dealers in Washington of the Administration's motion picture campaign, charged by Republican adversaries to be "political propaganda," is having no effect on the plans of the New Deal to continue the filming of important WPA and other projects.

With Pathe News caring for the WPA aspects, the Resettlement Administration is proceeding independently with the filming of that New Deal enterprise, following "The Plow That Broke the Plains," of last summer, with a second production. "The Plow" depicted the effects of too little water; the new film will picture the effects of too much water, along the Mississippi River. Pare Lorentz, who directed the first Resettlement film, will also handle the second.

Despite the motion picture industry's refusal to distribute "The Plow," the government will try again to obtain regular theatrical distribution on the new picture, through the distribution channels of major companies, to established theatres.

Already "The Plow," distributed gratis by the Resettlement Administration, has covered Nebraska, the Dakotas and Kansas, and now the Government is turning it toward Wyoming, Idoha, Montana, Utah, New Mexico and Colorado.

Meanwhile the politicians in Washington continued to make both the WPA and the Resettlement films a campaign issue. The Republicans have been charging the Democratic Administration with glorifying the New Deal's projects in films, paid for with Government funds earmarked for relief. The Republican National Committee especially criticized WPA's Pathe short subjects as being "political propaganda."

In defense, Deputy Aubrey Williams, WPA Administrator, charged that the Republican Committee would seek to deny to a responsible government agency "the right to tell its story through the same medium which Presidents Coolidge and Hoover (both Republicans) used to tell the stories of their Departments of Commerce, State, Postoffice, Treasury, Agriculture, Interior, Labor, War and Navy."

"The Republicans," he added, "set every precedent for federal motion pictures."

Dickinson Starts Drive On Political Competition

A direct attack on political competition is being made by the 25 Glen W. Dickinson theatres in the Kansas City territory. In an effort to keep the public show-minded through pre-election speeches and other fanfare of the presidential campaign, the circuit is conducting "Movie Month" which will last until November 7th. Managers have a free hand in developing ideas and prizes will be awarded for the best grosses.

Warner Club Names Officers

Delegates from Warner Clubs composed of employees of Warner Brothers, First National Pictures and subsidiaries in the United States and Canada, have elected the following officers of the national Warner club, Inc.: Alex McBeath, president; Sam Schneider, chairman of finance committee; Edward M. Hinchy, vice-president in charge of membership; Ruth Weisberg, vice-president in charge of welfare; Harry Mayer, vice-president in charge of entertainment; Frank L. Gates, vice-president in charge of claims; John Holmes, treasurer and Stuart H. Aarons, secretary. Forty-six members were elected to the Board of Governors and 26 members of the executive committee.

Tampa Passes Theatre Tax

Following weeks of hearings and meetings, the City Council of Tampa, Fla., has passed an emergency tax ordinance that will hit practically every business and profession in the city in order to raise funds needed to meet the city's share in the various WPA projects. In addition to the present occupational license fees, the new ordinance provides that all wholesale businesses will have to pay a tax of seven and one-half cents on each $100 of sales. Retail business will have to pay a tax of 25 cents on each $100 of sales, and theatres are listed in this class. But, there is a special paragraph devoted to theatres which provides that each house operating Bank Night shall pay an additional $1 on each $100 of receipts.

Further north, at Jacksonville, Fla., the City Council has under consideration a proposed new city license law which, if enacted, would raise motion picture theatre licenses from $100 to $200 for all houses.

In Cleveland, M. B. Horwitz, Henry Greenberger, L. G. Baldwin and G. W. Erdmann, representing motion picture interests, Alva Bradley, owner of the Cleveland Indians baseball club, representing baseball, and J. E. Lambie of Euclid Beach Park, representing amusement parks, have been named to a committee to lead the fight against the proposed constitutional amendment eliminating the present three per cent sales tax on food in Ohio. If the amendment goes through it has been proposed to substitute a 10 per cent amusement tax to make up for the loss from the sales tax.

Alderman Routledge of St. Louis has proposed a small amusement tax on all theatres, shows and exhibitions there in his bill introduced this week before the Board of Aldermen. On admissions from 25 to 49 cents the tax would be one cent; from 50 to 99 cents, two cents, and from $2 to $3, 10 cents.

General Lists Releases

The first five productions on General Pictures schedule of 34 for this season will be "Three Legionnaires," "Let's All Sing," "Prison Ship," "Circus Queen" and "Night Edition," according to Fen Kimball, president, who arrived in New York this week from Hollywood where he conferred with Robert E. Welsh, production manager. Mack Weinberger is sales manager.

Bondholders Delay New Roxy Setup

Federal Judge Francis G. Caffey this week postponed until October 23 the hearing on the plans of reorganization of the Roxy Theatre Corporation. Carlos Israels, attorney for the bondholders' committee, told the court: "We have not in shape any form of reorganization plan that would mean anything at this time."

It was learned, however, that Twentieth Century-Fox, through its attorneys, Hughes, Schurman and Dwight, has presented to the bondholders' committee a proposition which, if modified, appears the most acceptable plan.

The bondholders of the corporation want to benefit from the receipts of the theatre and not from the new profits. The point is made that Twentieth Century-Fox recently spent approximately $35,000 advertising "Girls' Dormitory," "Sing, Baby, Sing" and "Dimples" and that this amount could be marked off against the profits and would mean proportionately less if the bondholders accepted the offer from Twentieth Century-Fox as it now stands. However, the amount spent by the distributor for advertising would mean nothing, under the bondholders' arrangement, as the gross percentage would remain the same.

In the event a settlement is reached between Twentieth Century-Fox and the bondholders, the latter intend to reorganize the theatre with a newly formed company to make the lease. It is likely that Howard S. Cullman, trustee, will be elected chairman of the board of the new company.

Brazilian Theatres May Alter Policies

by A. WEISSMANN in Rio de Janeiro

Following the grand opening of the new Metro theatre here by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, local exhibitors are wondering what effect the policy of the new house will have on their own operation. The new de luxe theatre is operating along American lines, keeping first-run product for more than a week if advisable and demanding at least 60 days' protection over the second-runs. It is rumored that the Palacio theatre will be the first to change its operating policy to that of the new house and will close shortly for remodeling. The Palacio formerly was the MGM outlet here and has featured that company's product for eight years.

Native Brazilian production has been speeding ahead and several efforts will be soon ready for release. The first of the new season's product was presented recently when the Alhambra opened with "Cacando Feras," produced by Lux Films. The Palacio is scheduled to show one more Brazilian feature, "Bonequinha de Seda," which is now in the last stages of production. Wallace Downey has one picture almost ready, "Joao Ninguem," and others in various stages of work include "Inconfidencia Mineira" and "Mentira Carioca" by Brazil Vita Filma, and "O Grito da Mociadade."

CONCESSIONS ON TRADE PRACTICES EXPECTED TO BE KNOWN BY OCT. 26

Distributors Deny Anti-Trust Charges of Morse and Rothenberg Circuit at Boston; Detroit Decision Appealed

Large distributors are expected to make known before October 26th the specific changes in sales policy which each is willing to make in support of the trade practice code sought by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, Edward Kuykendall, president of the association, said in a statement this week, adding that "there is every prospect of ultimate success for our program." At the same time court actions involving charges of monopoly were being advanced against major distributors in Detroit, Boston and Hawaii.

Indicating the favorable nature of the anticipated concessions, Mr. Kuykendall said that "at no time during these long negotiations have the prospects been brighter for a genuine and practical solution of many exhibitor complaints and injustices of long standing."

A majority of the large distribution companies have given definite assurances of their approval of the principal phases of the program, but additional time is required to define the specific sales policy changes which will be made. Two of the three companies which have not given such assurance, exclusive of Warner Brothers which declined at the outset to give consideration to the exhibitor program, are concerned about the possibility of the anti-trust laws being involved in a change of their sales policy to meet the exhibitors' requests.

Sees "Gratifying Progress"

A reference to this was made by Mr. Kuykendall in his statement: "Gratifying progress is being made, I find, in overcoming obstacles and reducing objections of both a legal and practical nature." Moreover, he reassured such companies that "it should be noted that no formal or informal agreement between MPTOA and any one or all of the distributors is necessary; our proposals as submitted in writing with the full approval of our entire board of directors requested definite modifications of sales policy and trade practices on the part of the distributor. All we want is to have them do it."

Would Insure Success

The principal concessions by at least a majority of the distributors will embrace unrestricted cancellations, elimination of the score charge, adoption of the short form of contract and the establishment of local conciliation boards, which would insure the success of the entire exhibitor program as formulated.

Mr. Kuykendall left New York last weekend on the yacht Lavadette, owned by A. Don Alexander, for Philadelphia, where he conferred with exhibitor leaders. He expects to return to New York and continue negotiation with the distributors after a trip to the South.

The first meeting of the grievance committee of the recently formed United Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Philadelphia encountered only one case, that involving a dispute between two exhibitors who were buying product in the same zone. The committee will try to effect an amicable agreement. The protest committee on high rentals has not yet been appointed.

Major distributors have entered a general denial of all charges included in four anti-trust actions brought against them by the Morse and Rothenberg circuit in the United States district court in Boston.

The suits ask triple damages of $100,000 in each case, alleging a monopoly and the restraint of interstate commerce in films. One action, filed in the name of Nashua Theatres, Inc., operating the Colonial in Nashua, N. H., is against Colonial Theatres Company of Nashua, a unit of the M. A. Shea circuit, and the major distributors. The other plaintiffs, whose suits were filed against the distributors only, are: Standard Amusement Enterprises, Inc., operating the Capitol, Elizabeth, N. J.; Elite Amusement Enterprises, operating the Rialto, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and Fidel Amusement Enterprises, Inc., which operated the Cameo in Newburgh, N. Y. All are Morse and Rothenberg units.

It is claimed that because of the defendants' refusal to supply film, the Capitol and Cameo were forced to close in May, 1936.

Attorneys William Gallagher and Adrian D. Rosen have appealed the decision of the United States district court in Detroit in the case of Jacob Schreiber against Cooperative Theatres of Michigan, Inc., and the various Detroit exchanges, to the circuit court of appeals at Cincinnati.

Mr. Schreiber, in the suit, asked an injunction against the defendants who, it is claimed, are preventing him from obtaining sufficient product for his five theatres. The lower court, in rendering its decision, ruled that the licensing of films was not in interstate commerce, and, therefore the case was not in its jurisdiction. Mr. Rosen now asks that the case be decided upon merit, claiming that it comes within interstate commerce and that the lower court erred in its ruling.

A general denial has been filed on behalf of Warner Brothers in connection with charges of monopoly and restraint of trade brought by the Franklyn Theatrical Enterprises, Ltd., of Hawaii. Other defendants are First National and Vitagraph, Inc. Franklyn Enterprises is suing for $300,000, claiming breach of contract.

Balaban & Katz and Chicago Independents Settle Dispute

The motion picture business narrowly escaped another open battle in the courts this week between independent exhibitors and the majors over trade practices when, on the eve of filing mass federal court action, Chicago independents settled their grievances with Balaban & Katz and major distributors over allegedly unfair clearance, and, at the same time, averted a local trade battle between both exhibition groups over double bills.

Abruptly, on Tuesday, leaders of both sides effected an agreement whereby B. & K. will not take advantage of extra clearance in 1936-37, which they had demanded of and were granted by the large distributors. By waiving this contractual right, B. & K. will not be the target of attack by the independents for abandoning the citywide ban on single features. The Balaban interests, therefore, immediately adopted duals in five outlying theatres. On Wednesday, November feature release dates for Chicago had to be changed to conform to the old clearance schedule.

The independents claim a victory, having been more concerned over the extra clearance granted B. & K. than they were over the circuit's adoption of a double feature policy. On the other hand, B. & K. also considers it gained ground as it wanted two concessions: extra clearance and duals, and got one of them.

The independents were to file an anti-trust suit against both B. & K. and the large distributors, probably on Thursday, to seek an injunction to halt B. & K. from starting duals.

The settlement, handled by attorneys for Aaron Saperstein and the independents, and for the Balaban circuit, now opens 1936-37 in Chicago. Sales activity had been at a standstill, with B. & K. and Warners being the only two local theatre interests sold so far.

DRASTIC IMPORT RULES PROPOSED IN AUSTRIA

Committee Would Be Empowered to Bar Film If Terms Are Considered Too High

by HANS LORANT
in Vienna

Complete new import regulations for films, with specifications both as to price to be paid and the number of films that can be brought in during a year, have been proposed to the Government by a committee of producers, distributors and exhibitors.

The regulations are drastic and are intended as a basis of negotiation. The object, it is stated, is to reduce competition.

Under the terms of the proposal a committee representing all branches of the industry would be named to submit recommendations to the Minister of Commerce, who would be authorized to reject a film proposed for import and have final jurisdiction on other details.

Full details would be necessary on each film—casts, name of company owning the world rights, author, composer, and so forth, total production expense, how much the Austrian distributor has to pay for the rights, either flat rental or percentage, and the terms of the payments.

The committee would be authorized to bar the importation of a film where the terms are considered too high, and no other firm would be allowed to import it for six months after rejection, even though the terms had been revised downward.

Austrian branches of foreign firms would be allowed to import films without approval if no advance payment is required and no percentage guaranteed, but permission can be refused if the committee feels the distributors' expenses would be greater than the prospective receipts.

At the beginning of every season the committee, under the proposed plan, would fix the number of imports to be allowed. Licenses would not be transferable, if a distributor failed to use up all his licenses. New firms' permits would be based on their financial resources.

Backers of the plan feel that prices paid to foreign firms would be completely regulated and competition limited.

Showings of "The Great Ziegfeld" and "Romeo and Juliet" at the Salzburg Festival were so successful that Felix Bernstein, MGM manager here, believes outstanding films should be made a part of the official program each year.

Premieres at the festival would benefit the industry at large, he says. His idea is that the pick of the new releases each year should be submitted to an official committee, with the understanding that the names of rejected films should be kept secret to protect distributors.

"The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" has been released in several Vienna houses. The picture is doing good business and critics agree that it is a technical advance over "Becky Sharp."

The Hungarian censors have barred "Thunder in the Night," a Twentieth Century-Fox picture based on the stage play "A Woman Is Lying," by Laszle Feder, Hungarian playwright. The play ran for several weeks without objection from the authorities.

Gangster films, formerly confined to neighborhood houses, have achieved a new popularity here, and the fashionable Kreuzkino has been showing thrillers for several months. A big hit of recent weeks has been "Chicago Gangster."

Willy Forst's new picture, "Burgthester," is nearly complete. It has been sold in England and will be shown at the Academy, London.

Gloria has started a new film at the Tobis-Rosenhuegel studios called "Flowers from Nice," with Ernst Sack in the leading male role.

Jan Kiepura's "Opernring," produced by Gloria, won a gold medal at the Bienniale in Venice.

F & M Forms Subsidiaries

Fanchon & Marco has organized two new subsidiaries in St. Louis, Cinema Publishing Company for printing, publishing and advertising, and the Kurtzman Agency, Inc., for general advertising. Chief shareholder in both companies is Charles A. Kurtzman, with R. C. Wipfler and Joseph H. Grand holding the remainder.

Youngclaus Not Dropping Circuit

W. H. Youngclaus, head of Western Theatre Enterprises at Lincoln, Neb., denies that he has given up plans for a circuit or that he will terminate his partnership with W. H. Thompson. He has disposed of five of his six houses within recent weeks.

Sheldon Producer for Selznick

David O. Selznick has signed E. Lloyd Sheldon, formerly with Paramount, as a producer. He will begin work on "The Man with a Young Wife," starring Edward Arnold, at the Culver City studio on November 1st.

New Blackstone Accounts

The Blackstone Company, advertising agency located in Rockefeller Center, has been appointed by Imperial Productions to handle advertising and publicity for its forthcoming product.

Mildred Temple, formerly assistant to David Matthews, has been named story editor in the Mervyn LeRoy company.

Lewin Is Signed as Paramount Producer

Albert Lewin, who resigned from his position as associate producer at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer two weeks ago, has signed a contract with Paramount as a producer. He will assume his new post at Paramount on March 1, following a four-month trip to Europe. He will also serve in an executive advisory capacity.

Mr. Lewin's resignation, which followed shortly after the death of Irving Thalberg, was based on the clause in his contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer which stipulated that he had the right to cancel the agreement if Mr. Thalberg was no longer available. At that time it was indicated his resignation was to be effective on the completion of "The Good Earth," now finished.

Hollywood Press List Drops

A total of 254 accredited Hollywood press correspondents are listed in the new Producers' Association roster. The ranks of the press numbered 293 last July when the last listing was compiled. Of the new list 48 are members of the foreign press and the balance are from free lance, magazine, trade and wire services.

Littman Joins Criterion

Mack Littman is representing Criterion Films, the Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., producing company distributing through United Artists, in New York, with offices on the sixth floor in the United Artists home office building.

Dramatists' Election Set

The second annual election of the Dramatists' Guild is scheduled to be held November 10th. Ten new members will be elected to the guild's council to replace those whose terms expire next month.

Tom Molloy to Republic

Tom Molloy, recently with Universal studios in Hollywood, has joined the Republic studios as editorial supervisor of westerns and serials. He takes over the duties handled by Gordon Moulson, who has been placed in charge of writers.

McFadden Assists Ebele

Van Liew McFadden has been promoted from superintendent of construction at Twentieth Century-Fox studios in Hollywood to assistant to Ed Ebele, production manager, in place of Ben Silvey, who goes into production.

Barrett Heads Real Estate Group

David F. Barrett, trade paper reporter and publicity counselor, has been reelected president of the Real Estate Building and Loan Association of St. Louis, which was established in 1888. The association is a member of the United States League of Building and Loan Associations and the Federal Home Loan Bank.

Restricts Sound Trucks

Alderman T. I. Thornton of Camden, Ark., has introduced an ordinance to restrict sound trucks and loud speakers during business hours.

RKO Offers Young Stars Free to Stage

RKO Radio Pictures announced on Tuesday evening to the radio listening public that it is going to give the "dying" stage a big hand to reestablish itself by lending its young motion picture stars, free of charge to any legitimate theatre, stock company or little theatre of the drama. The only stipulation is that the stage theatre desiring to borrow RKO's screen talent must file an application to that effect in writing with Samuel Briskin, "production chief" of Radio Pictures, at the RKO Studios in Hollywood.

Thus Merlin H. Aylesworth, chairman of the board of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation in New York, is advocating an extension of Hollywood film stars' radio appearances the while the company's Mr. Briskin on the West Coast promises to supply the stage with free Hollywood screen talent.

Cecil Blount DeMille, a director of Paramount Pictures and conductor of the "Lux Radio Theatre," Lux toilet soap program, announced that RKO had specially selected the Lux broadcast for the purpose "of informing the American public that we (RKO) are now ready and willing to lend at once any of our young stars, known as contract players, to any legitimate theatre, stock company or little theatre within the boundaries of the United States—without charge."

The statement, in behalf of RKO by Mrs. Lela Rogers, mother of RKO's Ginger Rogers, apparently came as a surprise both to the RKO corporate headquarters in New York and to the company's home office press agents.

Mr. DeMille mentioned RKO's gesture in a complimentary manner, referring to the oft-repeated charge that motion pictures have "killed" the stage.

Mrs. Rogers explained that the sending of radio stars to the country's communities "should prove an even exchange." RKO stars, she added, "will get the training they need for motion pictures in your home-town theatres," while the stage theatre "will have a great drawing card in being able to announce a one or two-week appearance of a real Hollywood actor or actress."

Gross Associate Producer

Sol Lesser has promoted Edward Gross, formerly production manager, to assistant producer. Mr. Gross will start on "Rainbow River" and will continue with a series of five Tarzan pictures.

USING RADIO TO LURE LISTENERS TO THEATRE

Fanchon and Marco Subsidiary Contracts with KMOX at St. Louis to Advertise Its Shows

The Kurtzman Agency, Inc., a subsidiary of the Fanchon and Marco theatre interests, has entered into a contract with radio station KMOX, "The Voice of St. Louis," for broadcast time to advertise screen and stage attractions at the various St. Louis Fanchon and Marco theatres, including the Ambassador, Fox, Missouri, Orpheum, St. Louis and Guild Cinema. Major broadcasting by St. Louis first, second and subsequent-run motion picture theatres has, however, dated back to the time when network broadcasting became a reality.

In fact, there was a definite tieup with the radio field by a St. Louis first-run theatre back in the days of the crystal set. In those days Gene Rodemich and his band at the Grand Central theatre were a regular feature on the air.

The Skouras Plan

Later, when radio station KMOX was opened, Skouras Brothers Enterprises, Inc., as one of the original sponsors of that station, used regular time in a big way to exploit their shows at the Ambassador theatre. In fact Monday night was almost "Skouras Brothers' night" and Ed Lowry, broadcasting the entire show at the Ambassador, became as well known to the radio fans of those days as George Burns, Gracie Allen, the Kingfish and other radio lights are today.

It was this policy of the Skourases in placing their stage shows on the air that caused the first exhibition problem dealing with the use of radio. The radio shows, or rather the Ambassador theatre shows via the air, became so popular the local second runs and neighborhood houses were variously affected at the box offices, and after a number of conferences their rival exhibitors finally induced the Skouras Brothers to take their shows off the air.

Later, however, the Skouras theatres, including St. Louis Amusement Company, made liberal use of broadcast time on the various local stations to exploit their current attractions.

Picking the Show by Air

About a year ago one of the local broadcast stations worked up a unique plan of exploiting the shows at second and subsequent-run houses. A man presumed to be in an airplane would flit about the city and pick out various theatres, briefly touching on the screen attractions on their bills. This time was so arranged, by mutual consent, as to reach the people of St. Louis and vicinity before they finally had decided on their evening's amusement. It proved a good advertising plan.

The fact that the long-term contract between the Kurtzman Agency and KMOX will feature chatter, personalities and specially produced advertising sketches that incidentally will mention the theatres' attractions by inference rather than direct statement, brings this radio broadcast policy well within the rules laid down some years ago by the members of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois. These regulations stated that while the organization is unalterably opposed to the use of screen stars and other "big names" of screenland on the radio during show hours, or to the use of the stage shows of any theatre on the air, there is no opposition to the use of radio to advertise the screen or stage attractions at motion picture theatres.

Quigley Trophy Awarded RKO at Baseball Dinner

The Quigley Publications Trophy, emblematic of the championship of the Motion Picture Baseball League in New York, was presented to the RKO team Wednesday night at the organization's first annual dinner, held at the Valhalla restaurant. The Billboard Trophy, given to the team winning the most games, was presented to the representatives of the Music Hall, and the President's Cup went to the RKO nine as the team winning the second highest number of games. The teams did not play an equal number of games and the RKO nine was awarded the championship on a percentage basis. Consolidated Film Industries' Club was awarded the Variety Trophy for scoring the most runs during the season.

Jack White, president and manager of the RKO club, presided at the dinner with G. W. Woodward, vice-president. Some 75 guests attended, including representatives from the various home offices and trade publications.

League Revives Plea For Bars in Theatres

The League of New York Theatres will endeavor to obtain a modification of the state excise law to permit the installation of bars in New York theatres, according to the secretary's report at the annual meeting.

The report of the year's activities, as read by Dr. Henry Moskowitz, executive adviser of the league, said the prolonged negotiations with the Dramatists' Guild over new playwrights' minimum contracts have resulted in substantial advantages for the managers and have strengthened the league.

The league will seek a practical plan for revival of the road through reductions of transportation fares, a solution of the "unfair competition" between the WPA theatres and the regular commercial theatre, and will continue opposition to the Alien Actors Bill.

Receiver Discharged

Federal Judge Julian Mack in New York on Wednesday signed an order discharging the Irving Trust Company as receiver for the Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc., which has been absorbed by the newly formed Metropolitan Playhouses. Irving Trust had been receiver since August 18, 1934.

Loew's Dissolves Three Subsidiaries To Reduce Taxes

Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation and Culver Export Corporation, which handles the company's foreign sales, soon will be dissolved to reduce tax payments as well as to simplify the business operations of these various wholly-owned subsidiaries of Loew's, Inc. The business of the three organizations will be carried out through the offices of the parent company.

The Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer trademark will be retained, but contracts for product, after the dissolution, will be made directly through Loew's, Inc.

The legal departments of Loew's and MGM have been working to effect the change by January 1. The policy has been adopted by large companies in other fields. At Radio, reports have been current that the theatre department will be placed under administration of the picture company when reorganization is completed.

In the case of MGM, federal taxes pyramid several ways, earnings of the distributing company being payable in the form of dividends to the picture company, which, in turn, is controlled by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation. Profits of the last named corporation are reflected in dividends payable to Loew's, Inc., the parent company. All these corporations, under the law, must file returns, but this duplication will be eliminated under the consolidation plan, which was described as merely an intra-corporate activity without bearing of any description on the operations of the Loew companies outside their own offices.

All MGM short subject activities, including sales, will be concentrated at the studios in Culver City, according to Fred C. Quimby, general manager of this department, who leaves New York this week for Hollywood to make his permanent headquarters there. James A. FitzPatrick also will transfer his production activities on his Traveltalks to the MGM studios. He will also maintain his New York office.

Lew Thompson Is Author of Scripps-Howard Promotion

Lew Thompson of Cleveland conceived the Scripps-Howard "Picture Hit of the Month" feature, which was discussed in the October 10, 1936, issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, and not Max Cook, editorial promotion chief of the organization. Mr. Cook merely worked with Mr. Thompson to adapt the plan for use by the newspapers.

Mamoulian Scores Film Stars' Radio Appearances

Frequent participation of motion picture stars in radio programs is as harmful for the stars as for the exhibitor, Rouben Mamoulian, director, said on his arrival in New York this week from Hollywood.

"I do not think that more than one or two radio appearances a year are good for film people," Mr. Mamoulian said. "We all know that what is too easily available loses its value, and in the case of film stars the injury done is visited upon the theatres which sell their entertainment as well as upon the individuals themselves." He said the vast amount of radio material necessary makes an occasional poor program inescapable.

Mr. Mamoulian came to New York for the opening of "The Gay Desperado," which he directed for Pickford-Lasky for United Artists release. He returns soon to Hollywood to direct one picture for Paramount.

Shirley Temple Sued Under Old Contract

Shirley Temple this week was named defendant in a suit for $1,000,000 damages filed against her by Jack Hays, independent producer, who cited a contract signed October 7, 1932, as the basis for his claim. The contract, he asserted, was signed by the child's parents and approved by the courts and under its terms he was to have the right for two years to direct the young star's film training and she was to appear exclusively under his sponsorship. Mr. and Mrs. George Temple, parents of the little star, Twentieth Century-Fox and the California Bank and Trust Company are named as co-defendants.

Mr. and Mrs. Temple repudiated his contract October 1, 1933, Mr. Hays claims, and refused to permit him to continue with the child's management, which they turned over to Twentieth Century-Fox. As a result, he seeks $500,000 damages immediately and an additional one-half of the youngster's earnings from radio, advertising contracts, indorsements of commercial articles and other incomes, estimated at another $500,000.

The complaint states that Mr. and Mrs. Temple brought their daughter to Mr. Hays and asked him to train her for pictures. He obtained coaches for her, he said, and cast her in six one-reel baby star pictures for Educational Pictures. At that time her earnings were $7.50 or $10 a day if she played leads. Now she has a potential value as a child actress of $5,000,000, and her earnings since she won stardom have approximated $2,000,000, Mr. Hays said.

Mr. Hays also explained that he named the bank as a co-defendant because Mr. Temple is an officer of the bank and has placed a large part of his daughter's earnings in bank stock.

Tom Manning Dies

Tom Manning, character actor of stage and screen, died last Saturday of a heart attack while in the midst of a scene in the picture "San Quentin" at the Warner studio. Among roles played by Mr. Manning was that of the Hon. Peter Malone in the picture "Counsellor at Law."

New Plan of RKO Reorganization Is Being Speeded

With the return of United States District Judge William Bondy to New York from his European vacation, efforts to reach an agreement between the Atlas Corporation and the Rockefeller interests on the latter's claim of $9,600,000 against RKO have been speeded up so that the final reorganization plans for the company can be drawn.

It is reported in financial circles that the general features of a reorganization plan worked out by Lehman Brothers and the Atlas Corporation call for the formation of a new company with its capitalization to consist of bonds, convertible preferred stock and common stock, with the bonds and some of the preferred shares to be offered for the $11,600,000 debentures outstanding and the $1,118,000 secured claims. The unsecured creditors will be offered preferred stock in exchange for their allowed claims, it is understood, with possibly some common stock in addition.

At present, some 2,577,554 shares of common stock are outstanding. This may be increased, with the present holders of the certificates receiving common stock in the new company on an even exchange.

Supporters of the reorganization plan estimate that the total of allowed claims will be about $18,000,000 out of a total of $55,000,000 filed.

Meanwhile, the hearing on the application of the Irving Trust Company, RKO trustee, for permission to pay off $850,000 in RKO secured notes held by the Giannini banking interests, has been postponed in the federal court at New York until October 22 and referred to Judge Bondy. The motion of the Chemical Bank and Trust Company to delay payment of the collateral to the Irving Trust until its fee of approximately $30,000 for services is paid was also postponed this week until October 22.

According to the New York Evening Journal, "RKO's earnings have improved to the point warranting a speedy reorganization. Net for the year ending December 31 is estimated in excess of $2,000,000."

Hilles Given Leave To Appeal Katz Case

The Paramount reorganization trustee, Charles D. Hilles, was granted leave Tuesday by Federal Judge William Bondy in New York to appeal to the United States circuit court of appeals from a ruling by Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe which allowed the claim of Sam Katz for $265,000 against Paramount. Mr. Katz's claim is based on an unexpired employment contract which was in existence at the time he left Paramount in 1932.

IMPROVED ATTENDANCE INCREASES U.S. TAX RECEIPTS BY $1,250,000

Gain in Box Office Collections Recorded in 36 States, Decreases in 12; Impetus to Companies' Earnings Cited

The United States Government this week confirmed the general impression that motion picture theatre box office receipts are mounting, reporting an increase of nearly $1,250,000 in taxes collected on admissions during the year. At the same time, Wall Street predicted that an even sharper upturn in attendance this fall is giving a double impetus to the earnings of the large producing companies which have extensive theatre holdings.

Total U. S. admission tax collections during the 1936 fiscal year were $17,112,174, compared with $15,379,397 in 1935, $13,343,620 in 1934 and $14,027,693 in 1933.

Taxes on box office admissions accounted for $15,001,741 of the 1936 total, against $13,757,238 in 1935, while $1,338,935 was collected from roof gardens and cabarets, compared with $953,799; $578,806 on free or reduced-rate admissions against $509,384; $117,463 on theatre tickets sold by brokers against $94,595; $59,849 on leases of boxes or seats against $42,208, and $15,380 on tickets sold at the box office in excess of established prices against $22,172.

Increases in 36 States

In an analysis of the taxes collected on box office admissions, the United States Bureau of Internal Revenue found that increases over 1935 were shown by 36 states and decreases by only 12. The greatest tax increases, in terms of dollars, were $188,000 in California, $167,000 in Massachusetts, $162,000 in Indiana, $97,000 in Ohio, $82,000 in New York, $72,000 in Illinois, $60,000 in Maryland and $49,000 in Minnesota.

The 12 states showing losses in admissions were New Hampshire, $38,000; Colorado, $20,000; Rhode Island, $19,000; Arkansas, $3,000; Florida, $700; Missouri, $4,700; New Mexico, $9,000; South Carolina, $270; Tennessee, $3,000; Texas, $3,000; Washington, $300, and West Virginia, $850.

Because every section was represented among the 12 states showing decreases, tax officials were inclined to place the responsibility for the losses upon purely local conditions.

Collections of taxes on box office sales by states, for 1936 and 1935, follow:

Earnings for Warner Quarter Above $2,000,000 Seen by Dow, Jones, $1,000,000 for Paramount Three Months

Estimation that the "sharp upturn in attendance at motion picture theatres this fall is giving a double impetus to the earnings of the large producing companies which have extensive theatre holdings" was made by the Wall Street Journal of the Dow, Jones financial news service in Wall Street. These companies, it was said, "will benefit not only from increased film rentals, based on a percentage of gross, but those theatres which in the last few years have been losing money heavily are now showing rapidly mounting profits.

As a result, it was said, earnings of Warner Brothers, one of the largest theatre owners, are expected to be well over $2,000,000 for the November quarter, first period of the current fiscal year. This would be over 50 cents a share, against $1,031,316, or 25 cents a share on 3,701,095 shares of common stock earned in the corresponding period a year ago. Warners reported $2,554,772, or 62 cents a share, for the 39 weeks ended May 30 and is expected to show around $2,800,000 or more for the fiscal year ended August 31, 1936.

Paramount, largest theatre owner in the country, also was cited as expected to report a net profit of over $1,000,000 for the September quarter against a loss of $476,000 after crediting reserve account with $800,000 in the June quarter.

"The importance of a turn-about in the affairs of the theatres may be realized from the fact that around 70 per cent of added gross above the break-even point goes directly to net," said the Journal.

"Since the grosses of some of the large theatre chains run $40,000,000 annually or better, a 10 per cent gain with 70 per cent of it going to net, means a sharp jump in profits. This is already being shown this year in the operations of Warner Brothers, Paramount, and the National Theatre Chain, owned 42 per cent by Twentieth Century-Fox.

"There was a decline of at least 25 per cent and perhaps 30 per cent in annual attendance from 1931 down to the low in 1933," the writer continued. "Since then there has been a recovery of about 15 per cent from the low to a point about 12 per cent under the 1931 level. Business of the theatres was still good in 1931, but considerably below the record levels of 1929 and 1930. Business this fall has been running about 10 per cent to 20 per cent ahead of a year ago in various chains and gives indications of continuing the gains as the supply of successful films continues.

Average 30 to 35 Cents

"Complete figures for admission prices in the industry are not available," the Journal said. "However, admissions averaged over 30 cents and for some of the large chains around 35 cents in 1931.

"It is not generally realized that films made money even during the bad years. Theatres fell under the real estate depression due to the overbuilding which occurred during the boom years. Thus Columbia Pictures, which had no theatres, was able to report consistently large earnings during the depression years and Loew's, which has comparatively few theatres, mostly large houses in the big cities, also did much better than its competitors."

The following table was cited by Wall Street Journal as showing the number of theatres and approximate seating capacity of the leading chains:

	Theatres	Seats
Paramount	1,100	1,000,000
Warner Bros.	400	600,000
20th-Fox	400	500,000
Loew's	170	275,000
Radio-Keith	340	200,000
United Artists	150	... ...

"Theatre operating expenses are fixed with the exception of film rentals, which are generally based on a percentage of gross and which therefore vary with income. Generally speaking, about 25 per cent to 30 per cent of theatre operating expenses go for film rentals; salaries take about 25 per cent; fixed charges, rent, depreciation, taxes and insurance another 20 per cent to 25 per cent and supplies, advertising and incidentals make up the balance."

GROSS INCOME TAX LAW INTERPRETED

Agreements between exhibitors and distributors were divided into two classes by the state legal department in its interpretation of the Indiana gross income tax law for the Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana.

Defining the flat rental basis, the interpretation sets forth that "such rental expense is the expense of the theatre owner or exhibitor and no deduction would be permitted of the amount of rental so paid from his taxable gross receipts. In this instance the distributor would be required to include for taxation the amount of rental that he receives."

Defining the percentage type of booking, the finding given is that "the exhibitor will be required to enter for taxation only that part of the total gross receipts that become his under the percentage agreement. The distributor will be required to include for taxation that part of the entire gross receipts taken in which becomes gross receipts under the agreement."

Defer Consolidated Vote on New Plan

The voting on a recapitalization plan for Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., which was scheduled for last Friday, was deferred until October 23 when it was discovered, following a meeting of stockholders, that the small shareholders had scant representation at the meeting. The postponement was asked by officials following a proxy count.

Herbert J. Yates, president of the company, said that an effort would be made between now and October 23 to obtain the proxies of holders of small numbers of shares. He also agreed to meet, in the meantime, with a committee of stockholders to discuss the proposed plan of recapitalization in detail for the benefit of the minority shareholders who appeared in opposition to the plan last week. Under the plan, the authorized capitalization of the company would be 500,000 shares of preferred stock, all of which will be outstanding, and 600,-shares of common stock, of which 449,982 shares will be outstanding. The declared capital will be $7,949,982 in lieu of the $6,524,973 of capital stock heretofore declared.

Officials of Consolidated Film Enterprises, however, said that sufficient shares were represented at the meeting last week to obtain approval of the new plan. They said that 223,217 shares of preferred and 320,855 shares of common were represented by proxy, and 4,754 shares of preferred and 2,862 shares of common were represented in person, constituting a quorum. Of the total, they said, 55 per cent favored the plan.

Akron ITO Dual Ban on Two Films

The Akron, Ohio, Independent Theatre Owners Association's Single Feature Committee named to designate which of the 1936-37 pictures are banned for double featuring, this week elected "The Great Ziegfeld" and "Anthony Adverse" for single featuring only. The committee announced that these were the only two of the new season's product thus far released that merited single feature designation.

In Oklahoma City, however, the first double feature policy of the town was inaugurated at the Liberty, operated by Standard Theatres, Inc., with no increase in prices. Double features will play only when stage shows are not used, but beginning next week, a four-day vaudeville bill will start every other Saturday.

Fanchon and Marco will reopen the Shubert-Rialto in St. Louis this week as a first run with double features, according to Harry C. Arthur, F. and M. executive. The stage shows at the Ambassador in St. Louis have been successful and will not be discontinued in favor of the double feature bill, he said.

Guaranteed Lists Seven

Guaranteed Pictures has acquired world distribution rights, exclusive of the United States, for five films featuring Conway Tearle, and for "Riddle Ranch" and "Gunners and Guns."

BOOK REVIEW

MODERN PHOTOGRAPHY, 1936-37. Edited by C. G. Holme. New York: The Studio Publications (London). Cloth, $3.50.

Each year the publishers of The Studio produce one of these reviews of photographic art. The editor, Mr. C. G. Holme, wades through thousands of the more striking specimens of modern camera work (much of the labor of the enthusiast's love) and comes up with enough to make a book —in this case a few over a hundred pictures. If you are interested in photography, amateur or otherwise, you get much instruction from the exhibit. If you merely like pictures, you find your share of stimulating subjects.

It is so with this review covering a period designated as 1936-1937, and if one prefers original perception to what is artificially charming, the current volume is perhaps more stimulating than its immediate predecessors. The editor calls attention to a larger number of pictures "directly related to life and movement." He also warns the picture maker against "copying" and we come across in his introduction an admission that "the camera is and will remain a recorder," modern photography being that "which records some aspect of life as it is today." Perhaps in these words and the ensuing pictures one sees the influence of the "candid" camera. At any rate, one sees the true function of the camera acknowledged more forthrightly than heretofore.

In this record of the past year cognizance is also taken, for the first time, of color photography, of which there are a half-dozen examples. Further distinction from previous volumes in the series lies in the submission of eight pictures in the form of photographic prints, instead of as photoengraver's reproductions.—G. S.

Tri-State Convention Scheduled for Memphis

The annual convention of the Tri-States M.P.T.O. will be held at Memphis, Tenn., October 18-19, with Ed Kuykendall, head of the national MPTOA, addressing the meeting. Reelection of president M. A. Lightman is expected.

President Martin Smith of the I.T.O. of Ohio has called a board meeting for October 15th at Columbus to set a date for the annual state convention.

William H. Haskell, Albany Critic, Dead

Funeral services were held last weekend for William F. Haskell, 57, dramatic, music and motion picture critic at Albany, who died unexpectedly of a heart attack. Mr. Haskell was dramatic critic of the Albany Knickerbocker Press. He started writing reviews for the Albany Argus nearly 30 years ago.

Cooperative Relief Film Is Proposed

A cooperatively produced picture, the entire proceeds of which would be turned into a perpetuating benefit fund, comes from Hollywood this week as the latest plan of the industry to care for its own needy. The fund, administered bv an executive committee, would be used exclusively to aid film folk.

George Cukor, director under contract to Selznick International Pictures, formulated the plan. The various studios would provide stars, directors, writers, supporting casts, sets, publicity, on a gratis basis, for one picture each year. Cooperation of the distribution forces of the large companies will also be sought in order to market the picture.

Mr. Cukor volunteered to direct the first film, to be completed by next August. If production and distribution executives approve of the plan, he then would contact exhibitor leaders for their ideas.

"One studio would contribute a story; another would assign a writer to the pictures; from several studios would come the stars and supporting cast; directors and assistants could be furnished the same way, while studio space for the production each year would be shifted from lot to lot," Mr. Cukor said. "It would not be necessary to construct a lot of new sets."

"All parties concerned would contribute shares gratis," he explained. "The benefit picture would actually cost very little to produce."

He pointed out that the publicity, exploitation and advertising departments, each offering its own measure of assistance, could produce satisfactory campaigns.

Regarding results of all this cooperative effort, Mr. Cukor explained each year's profits would go into a loan fund, an open purse for those in the industry in need, and "administered by a committee picked from the various studios."

Special Accountants For Paramount Allowed

Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe this week in New York authorized the employment by the Paramount Publix trustees of the firm of Barrow, Wade and Company as special accountants in connection with an action filed in 1934 by the then trustees of Paramount, which named directors and officers of the company as defendants. Judge Coxe limited the compensation to be paid the accountants to $30,000.

The recovery for Paramount of approximately $12,000,000 is sought by the trustees in the action. The return of any compensation in excess of a reasonable amount paid to officers of the company from 1927 to 1930; the return of profits made by any of the defendants who participated in the so-called Paramount employees' stock purchase plan, and an accounting for any losses sustained by the company through the buying or selling of its own capital stock in the open market during periods from October 1929 to January 1931 was asked by the trustees of Paramount in their original complaint. Present indications are that the action cannot be heard for another six weeks.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

Harrison Carroll, in Hollywood, concludes that the "suckers must come dumber out here," for a pretty blonde and a dark, sleek-haired man are working the movie capital with the crudest kind of racket and with quite some success.

The pair of tricksters spot an impressionable gent who looks like an easy mark, present themselves as he sits in a local restaurant, call him by a film star's name and ask for an autograph. If he protests that they are laboring under mistaken identity, they still insist he is the celebrity, and frequently the flattered fellow signs the star's name.

Next day, the pair, who determined the victim's home address by trailing him, present themselves with a great show of indignation and accuse him of committing a forgery, of being guilty of impersonation. They conclude with an expressed determination to call the police.

Unless, of course, he cares to salve their injury with a little cash, which he usually does, not necessarily for fear of any incriminations but fearing ridicule by his friends for impersonating a star.

It was first used," advises Paramount, "by one John B. Soule, editor of the Terre Haute, Indiana, Express, in the year 1851."

The foregoing chatter about the authorship of the disputed statement seems wholly unnecessary in this instance.

THE ARRIVAL OF AUTUMN marks a dual anniversary in the multitudinous newspaper, motion picture and public enterprises and interests of William Randolph Hearst. The first is in observance of Mr. Hearst's 40th year as founder and publisher of the New York Evening Journal. The second, of 20 years standing, is less auspicious, but more dramatic, embracing a William Randloph Hearst motion picture of the early World War period which became an international issue.

The motion picture was a serial entitled "Patria." Its story is intricate, touching high places and famous names, and with an original purpose of showing the United States attacked by an imaginary nation.

Edward A. MacManus was at the head of the Hearst International News Service and the International Film Service at the time. He was studying the World War situation in the autumn of 1916 when everybody but the public knew we were eventually going into the big fight overseas.

The motion picture venture was, however, too good an opportunity to be lost from the point of view of the Hearst newspapers. It will be recalled that these papers then, as now, had a great deal to say about the Japanese, and about a Japanese naval base in Magdalena Bay down the Gulf of Lower California.

Also the American punitive expedition into Mexico with its hide-and-seek pursuit of Pancho Villa was fresh in memory as a bit of contemporary history. The stage was all set.

William Randolph Hearst himself became more than usually interested in the film, a detail so inconspicuous to his vast projects.

The imaginary foe of the United States in the serial story became an allied army of Mexicans and Japanese, with names mentioned. Irene Castle headed the cast.

Came "Patria" and protests, the two nations displeased most particularly being Mexico and Japan. We were not on speaking terms with Mexico. Japan was suave and direct. Mr. Hanrihara of the Japanese Embassy down in Washington continued to bow and smile as usual. But from roundabout ways pressure began to build up against "Patria." In various places the picture was banned for reasons not appearing on the surface.

Then to International Film's home office came a tactful letter, reading:

> Several times in attending Keith's theatre here I have seen portions of the film entitled "Patria," which has been exhibited there and I think in a great many theatres of the country. May I not say to you that the character of the story disturbed me very much. It is extremely unfair to the Japanese and I fear that it is calculated to stir up a great deal of hostility which will be far from beneficial to the country, indeed will, particularly in the present circumstances, be extremely hurtful. I take the liberty, therefore, of asking whether the Company would not be willing to withdraw it if it is still being exhibited.
> With much respect,
> Sincerely yours,
> WOODROW WILSON
> President of the United States of America.

Mr. Hearst's International complied immediately—they brought in "Patria," cut the Japanese and Mexican flags from the armies in the picture and sent it back to market.

Mrs. Sweenek particularly did not like the crack, "Ah, Jello," made by a Pathe News narrator during the showing of the film when her picture appeared.

Judge Moskowitz said that the picture was news "as long as a large portion of the female sex continues its present concern about any increase in poundage."

The motion picture business need worry no longer over production costs. Ted (Cook Coo) Cook has invented a camera which will save millions of dollars in filming. The inside of the camera holds a piece of mirror. By removing the lens, the producer can look through the lens aperture and see the picture on the mirror, thus saving the cost of film and development; also prints. Eventually, theotre expenses and distribution costs would be eliminoted entirely, merely by doing away with the theotres and exchanges.

MUSICIANS CONSIDER EXTENDING THEATRE PICKETING TO 20 CITIES

Philadelphia Local First to Follow New York Union in the Recent Move to Force Return of Stage and Pit Jobs

Circuits Repeat Charge That Musicians Are Fighting For "Lost Cause;" Dr. Stokowski Cancels Personal Appearance

Theatres in America's 20 largest cities are facing a wholesale public attack by unionism to force their owners to give work to thousands of musicians in their orchestra pits or on their stages, in order to alleviate unemployment in the ranks of the American Federation of Musicians.

That the drive to restore "live music" to those houses which have abandoned orchestras and stage shows in the last three years may be taken up on a nationwide scale was learned this week from spokesmen of New York Local 802 of the Federation. This local has an announced "war chest" of $250,000.

The first definite action taken outside of New York is by Philadelphia's Local 77, which has voted to picket theatres, but New York's Local 802 has received requests for information on the conduct and results of the drive from 20 other locals. On the basis of these requests it is preparing a 10-page pamphlet on campaign strategy, to be mailed to every musicians' local. The pamphlet will contain complete plans of the drive as conducted in New York, together with samples of posters to be carried by pickets and literature to be distributed to the public.

Locals which have requested information and, according to the New York sponsors of the drive, are seriously considering participation, are those in Cincinnati, San Francisco, Chicago, Detroit, Pittsburgh, Los Angeles, Boston, Cleveland, Newark, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Seattle, Portland, Ore.; Bridgeport, Conn.; St. Louis, Yonkers, New Rochelle and Albany, New York; Louisville, Ky., and Jacksonville, Fla. Ordinances in many cities do not permit picketing unless there is an actual strike but in such locations the union plans to reach public opinion through pamphlets, lapel buttons, press publicity, advertising, radio.

San Francisco Plan

In San Francisco the executive board of Local 6 discussed organization of a picketing campaign but decided that city ordinances covering picketing would not allow them to conduct such a drive. Edward Love, secretary of the Local, announced, however, that the union will participate in an educational campaign designed to arouse the public to demand live shows and living music in theatres. The California State Federation of Labor and the California Theatrical Federation are reported to be working with the Local.

Theatre men in the coast city are watching the outcome with considerable interest, San Francisco being one of the strongest union cities.

In New York, where the campaign has been waged the last four weeks, results are called negligible. Circuit heads reaffirm the conviction, first expressed when the picketing started, that the musicians are fighting for a lost cause. "People do not want vaudeville, and neither the musicians nor any one else can force it on them," one spokesman said.

ACTOR GUILD BACKS MUSICIAN CAMPAIGN

The Screen Actors' Guild in Hollywood has telegraphed to Local 802 of the American Federation of Musicians endorsing the local's picketing drive seeking to bring about the reemployment of musicians in film houses. The telegram, signed by Kenneth Thomson, secretary of the actors' group, mentions the Guild's "wholehearted accord and great interest," in the campaign and concludes, "the board sends best wishes for overwhelming success."

Some theatre operators have expressed resentment against the picketing as hurting all-picture theatres while indirectly helping those that are using bands or stage shows. In addition, circuit heads say that the musicians are trying to force upon them a policy which may be economically sound, instead of sitting down in conference with theatre operators to meet half way in making stage shows possible, if they are possible, in certain houses.

The musicians, with the aid of the American Federation of Actors, claim to have an army of 6,000 pickets in the streets, working in shifts in front of 20 theatres equipped for stage shows. In some cases the pickets are encouraged by brother members of the union, who stand on the sidelines and add their opinions to the slogans blazoned on the placards. These include such appeals as "Do not patronize this theatre," "Greed for profits forced musicians and actors out of theatres," "Do not patronize greed."

Thousands of Leaflets

Thousands of leaflets and other printed appeals to the public to demand the return of "live entertainment" to theatres are being distributed. The October issue of the Official Journal of Local 802 is devoted almost entirely to the drive. Articles, cartoons, pictures of the picket line, and an editorial report the progress of the campaign and urge the members of the union to continue their support.

The campaign in Philadelphia, authorized by vote of the membership, is expected to get under way this week. Limited funds preclude a drive as extensive as the one in New York, but it will open with a mass meeting at which Mayor S. Davis Wilson is to speak. Plans have been made to picket those houses which have had live entertainment at any time during the last three years.

As a prelude to the campaign, the Warner Stanley theatre announced Friday that owing to "unavoidable circumstances Dr. Stokowski would not appear in person as advertised." "Big Broadcast of 1937," Paramount's picture which features Leopold Stokowski conducting the Philadelphia Orchestra in two Bach numbers, opened at the Stanley the same day.

A private preview for the orchestra members and their friends on Thursday was canceled when A. Anthony Tomei, president of the union, Local 77, ordered a boycott against all Warner houses, invoking a law that would subject to fine any union member found patronizing any theatre declared unfair to organized labor. In spite of his Hollywood activities, Mr. Stokowski, as a member in good standing of the American Federation of Musicians, took his stand with his union members.

"I wish to make it perfectly clear that Dr. Stokowski was in no way coerced in this matter," Mr. Tomei said. "He has been a union man for many years and we merely requested of him what we expect from all members. He not only complied readily, but told us he would cooperate further in our activities against the Warner theatres."

Frank Phelps, labor mediator for the Warner company, has been in constant touch with Mr. Tomei, but each meeting has found relations more and more strained.

That the New York union will cooperate was evidenced when Sam Rosenberg, secretary of Local 802, and Sam Taback, member of the executive committee of the New York union, went to Philadelphia to address the musicians. New York promised to send down "names" to inaugurate the picketing activities, which will be confined to the midtown sector, the Earle, Fox and Stanley theatres. Philadelphia musicians expected Rudy Vallee, as president of the American Federation of Actors, to take an active part in the picketing. Ben Bernie, also an officer of the actors' union, arrived there Friday for a local engagement and was to be asked to join the sign carriers. A committee of members from the Philadelphia Orchestra was organized for picket duty at the Stanley theatre and Mr. Stokowski was to be asked to lead the sign carriers.

While the musicians refused to enter into any negotiations for the first-run Earle and Fox theatres before the question of vaudeville in the neighborhood houses was ironed out, Mr. Tomei said additional demands would be made on those houses. It is common report in Philadelphia that in last year's lockout the Fox theatre saved $25,000 on the payroll and the Earle $18,000. While the union is agreeable that the same number of men return to the houses, 35 at the Fox and 26 at the Earle, wage scale demands will be increased to enable the musicians to make up part of the salaries lost last year.

Advance outlines of productions nearing completion as seen by the Hollywood staff of the Motion Picture Herald

Born to Dance

(MGM)

Comedy Romance

This production returns to the screen Eleanor Powell, dancing star of "Broadway Melody of 1936." Along with her it will present Una Merkel, Sid Silvers, Frances Langford and Buddy Ebsen, who were in the cast of that picture. The same man who directed "Broadway Melody," Roy Del Ruth, is in charge. Another similarity presaging the picture's rythmic solo and chorus dancing quality is seen in the fact that Dave Gould, who made the dance numbers in the previous picture, again is handling this particular feature. Additionally the film will present Virginia Bruce, prominent in "Ziegfeld" and many other pictures, and James Stewart, whose popularity is rapidly rising. Other name principals are Raymond Walburn, Alan Dinehart and Juanita Quigley. The film also will present several groups of radio and stage specialty performers.

Based on an original story by Jack McGowan and Sid Silvers, the producers are attaching more than usual importance to the fact that its music, both that of solo and chorus numbers as well as score, is by Cole Porter, whose "Night And Day" and "You're The Tops," among many others have won him great prestige as a popular song composer.

Tersely, with spectacular production features inserted at the proper times, the show is a topical navy jack tar comedy romance with quite a bit of off stage contrast. It seems to possess an appealing savor, one that promises more than acceptable entertainment and one that will permit its stars and featured players to exhibit their various talents to best advantage. Naturally it is a big picture, with lavish settings and backgrounds. Essentially comedy, the motivation, however, has a respectable dramatic content that should make for balance.

Charlie Chan At the Opera

Mystery Drama

In this production Warner Oland, resourceful champion of baffling crime solution, comes to grips with one of the screen's leading exponents of horror, Boris Karloff. There is something to excite patron and showmanship interest in that bit of casting. The material provided in the story for both should show them off to the best advantage in their specialties. Karloff, a jealous maniac, terrorizes an opera company which is presenting "Faust." The police summon Oland to their assistance. For the first time in his screen career, the famous Oriental detective has his back against the wall. Through most of the story there is a feeling that for once he will fail, and many times it seems that he will lose his life. But eventually he solves the riddle of the mysterious Karloff and his killings. Incidentally he solves another murder that is a companion to Karloff's crimes, meanwhile fostering a youthful romance.

Naturally the production's chief entertainment and commercial worth is bound up in the duel of wits and courage between Oland and Karloff. Their association as hero and heavy suggest something vividly different in the "Charlie Chan" stories. But the picture will boast other names that it would be unwise to overlook. Keye Luke again is Oland's son and assistant. The necessary youthful romance will be supplied by Charlotte Henry and Thomas Beck. Gregory Gaye, Nedda Harrigan and Margaret Irving form a dramatic-romantic triangle, whose actions provoke a mystery as baffling as that which surrounds Karloff. Others players are Frank Conroy, Guy Usher, William Demarest, Maurice Cass and Tom McGuire.

Suggested by a story by Bess Meredyth based on the Earl Derr Biggers Chan character, the screen play is by Scott Darling and Charles S. Belden. H. Bruce Humberstone, who directed "Charlie Chan at the Race Track," functions again.

Safari in Paradise

(Columbia)

Comedy Romance

Though the title might suggest it, this feature is not a safari into Africa, nor is it a safari into some idyllic Eden. And it is not an adventure story, unless the experiences of a pair of whimsical characters in romance and business, all approached from a comedy standpoint, can be interpreted as adventure. The locale is New York. Time is the present.

The girl on the safari is Jean Arthur, who took Mr. Deeds to town and is the Calamity Jane of the forthcoming "The Plainsman." The man is George Brent. Initially, in association with Ruth Donnelly, Miss Arthur is the drab proprietess of a not so profitable secretarial school. Brent is the diet conscious editor of a health magazine. She becomes his secretary and during his absence, by changing the magazine's policy, manages to disrupt the business. Incidentally there are other man and woman complications to their growing love affair. The climax, occurring aboard a swanky yacht, is a mirthful quadrangle mixup.

The story utilized is an original by Matt Taylor, with Dale Van Every a contributor to the screen play of "Lady Be Careful," credited with the adaptation. Alfred E. Green, whose credits include "They Met In A Taxi" for Columbia as well as many important Warner fiims, is the director.

The cast supporting the leading players is composed of all wellknown names, such as Lionel Stander, seen recently in "They Met In A Taxi," Reginald Denny, now in "Romeo and Juliet," Raymond Walburn, Charles Halton, Dorothy Kent and Miss Donnelly.

Melody for Two

(Warner)

Romance with Music

Many factors contribute to recommend this production to the attention of audiences and showmen. Basically the yarn is intrique-tinged musical romance. A hot headed dance band leader falls out with his ace arranger, because both love the same girl. He hits the skids and though the girl attempts to be in his corner, he is reduced to playing in third rate dance halls, heading a girl's orchestra. An opportunity for a radio program comes up; the new swing music, which the down-at-the-heels has mysteriously come into possession of, gives him the edge in competition. Everything ends tunefully and happily as it is discovered that the girl was at the bottom of the comeback.

The story, which was arranged for the screen by George Bricker, is based on a yarn by Richard Macaulay, titled "Special Arrangements," which appeared recently in the Saturday Evening Post. Direction is by Lewis King. Musical content was supplied by Al Dubin, Harry Warren, M. K. Jerome and Jack Scholl.

James Melton and Patricia Ellis, currently in "Sing Me a Love Song," are featured. Dick Purcell is the music arranging romantic rival. Comedy is provided principally by Marie Wilson and Fred Keating. Other players prominent in the action and music are Charles Foy, Craig Reynolds, Winifred Shaw, Gordon Elliott, Eddie Kane, Eddie Anderson, Harry Hayden and Gordon Hart.

Glory

(20th Century-Fox)

Comedy Drama

For Jane Darwell's second lead role film, producer Sol Wurtzell has selected what looks to be an ideal character fitting vehicle. A wholesome yarn of the type generally appealing to all-family audiences, it treats of a small town woman, mothering everybody and always seeking to do good for others. Besides her own home and the local newspaper she just about runs the whole New England village. Devoted to helping friends and strangers out of difficulties, she also find times to solve a murder mystery that threatened to break up her own home, and saves an innocent man from the electric chair, meanwhile seeing that true romance continues in its proper path. Generally, all that happens is given a comedy tinge.

While the cast supporting Miss Darwell is well studded with familiar names, the production gives two younger players, Delma Byron, seen in "Everybody's Old Man" and "Dimples," and a newcoming stage actor, Allan Lane, opportuntiy to advance their careers. But in important support are such players as Lois Wilson, Margaret Hamilton, Perk Kelton, John Carradine, James Burke, Russell Hicks, Eddie Acuff, Frank Reicher, youthful William Benedict and Edward McWade.

Based on a story originally written for the stage but never so produced, the adaptation is credited to Robert Ellis and Helen Logan. Direction is by Frank Strayer, who numbers Republic's recent "Hitch Hike to Heaven" among the many pictures he handled for other companies.

Quality Street

(Radio)

Comedy Drama Romance

This production is based on a story and stage play by Sir James M. Barrie. First presented about the beginning of the century, it was made as a picture some several years ago. The locale is England and the period covers the duration of the Napoleonic wars. However it is not a war story. Rather, it is light dramatic comedy romance treating with the adventures of a girl who assumes a dual identity in order to tell off a suitor who once impoverished and then disappointed her. The situations that ensue follow a cheerful comedy vein, contrasted by personal drama only in the climax, when the lady gets herself into a romantic mess that forces her to discontinue her gay deception.

Entertainment that the story promises has definite commercial value, as cast selections indicate. It gives the leading player, Katharine Hepburn, the kind of part in which she has scored her most popular successes. She is completely removed from the dramatic character as seen in "Mary of Scotland" and as she will appear in the forthcoming "A Woman Rebels." Likewise, the principal supports seem to be of more than ordinary quality. Franchot Tone, currently in "The Gorgeous Hussy" and "Love on the Run," is the victim of the deception. Fay Bainter, noted stage actress, who starred with Walton Huston in "Dodsworth" in the role brought to the screen by Ruth Chatterton, makes her screen debut as Miss Hepburn's sister and ally in the ruse. Chief supports are Eric Blore and Cora Witherspoon, now in "Libeled Lady," and the child player Bonita Granville who was so effective in 'These Three." Other players listed are Florence Lake, Estelle Winwood, Helena Grant, Clifford Severn and Sherwood Baily.

The screen adaptation was effected by Mortimer Offner, who has done three previous Hepburn pictures, and Allan Scott. George Stevens, who made "Alice Adams," is directing. Pandro Berman is the producer.

Go West, Young Man

(Paramount-Cohen)

Comedy Romance

This production promises to be a different kind of Mae West picture. The first departure is that the star is no longer the fascinating glamour girl. Secondly, her role is essentially comedy. She appears as a Hollywood star, stranded in a little Pennsylvania town. Several men, her manager and an old flame, have eyes for her, but she becomes interested in a garage mechanic. The complications all have a straight comedy basis.

As customary with most recent Mae West films, she is credited with the original idea, adaptation and dialogue. As the motivation is different, it can be expected that the featured player also will be seen under a different light.

While Miss West appears as the outstanding commercial asset, other facts associated with the film should not be overlooked. Though there are few directors whose names sell tickets, one would seem negligent not to give some attention to Henry Hathaway, maker of "Lives of a Bengal Lancer" and "Trail of the Lonesome Pine," who is again at the helm.

Similarly, the supporting cast seems to be of unusual quality. Warren William, seen in many Warner films, is the chief supporting player, but Randolph Scott, fresh from his commendable work in "Last of the Mohicans," is the country boy, and Alice Brady, who was outstanding in "My Man Godfrey," also has an important role. There are also Isabel Jewell, who in many pictures, including the recent "Valiant is the Word for Carrie," has been the subject of patron interest, and Lyle Talbot, both important to the action. Elizabeth Patterson and Etienne Girardot have colorful character parts, while Margaret Perry, Maynard Holes, Alice Ardell and Nicodemus are listed for minor appearances.

As the film will permit Miss West to exhibit her flair for straight comedy, producer Emanuel Cohen anticipates that story strength will prove as attractive as the star name in inciting public attention.

Criterion Moves Office

Criterion Film Productions, headed by Marcel Hellman and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., has moved into its new quarters at the Worton Hall Studios in London. The previous address was 28 Brook Street, W. 1.

Capital Notice Filed

National Theatre Supply Corporation, a Delaware corporation, has filed notification in Sacramento of a reduction of capitalization from $3,256,659.93 to $509,241.13.

Samuels To Sell Projector

Slem Samuels has closed with International Projector Company to act as local representative in the Dutch East Indies. Similar agreements have been concluded with Theatre Screen Corporation and an air conditioning company. He plans to sail October 20th on the Queen Mary en route to Batavia, his home.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Production

While still busy with forty-three pictures active, Hollywood's production corps enjoyed a breathing spell during the past week as only eight pictures started and but five finished. In relation to the rapidity with which production has been going on and off stages recently, operations were more or less a matter of taking things in stride.

Although there are a couple of potentially important pictures listed in the new productions, the general trend is nothing to get excited about. Similarly, the finished quota, with one or two possible exceptions, is only of average caliber. Most of the studios, having completed and released their first show window films on early 1936-37 programs, are confining their activities to turning out the fillers-in. Nevertheless there are big pictures in the work and planned which will be ready in time to take the places of the first flashes when they complete important first and secondary runs.

To that end "Born To Dance," "Camille," "A Day At The Races," "After The Thin Man" and "Captains Courageous," MGM; "Maid Of Salem," Paramount; "Quality Street" and an as yet untitled Lily Pons feature, Radio; "Lloyds Of London" and "One In A Million," Twentieth Century-Fox; "Love Under Fire," Goldwyn; "You Only Live Once," Wanger and "Another Dawn," Warner, are in the work. Such pictures as "The Lost Horizon," "The Good Earth," "The Plainsman," "Plough And Stars," "A Woman Rebels," "Garden Of Allah," "Golddiggers Of 1937" and "Charge Of The Light Brigade" are completed and ready for release.

Getting back to current activity, Warners started two features. In "San Quentin," a penitentiary drama, which Lloyd Bacon is directing, Pat O'Brien, Humphrey Bogart, Ann Sheridan, Barton MacLane, Joseph Sawyer, Joseph King, Garry Owen, Gordon Oliver and Emmett Rogers will be seen. The companion picture, "Bad Man's Territory," an action western romance drama with music, features Dick Foran, Linda Perry, Joseph King, Cy Kendall, Wayne Morris, Harry Woods and Milton Kibbee. E. Reeves Eason is directing.

Two pictures likewise were started by Columbia. The more important undoubtedly is "Interlude." Grace Moore is starred and, though her voice is featured several times, the story is of a different theme than anything heretofore provided for her. The supporting cast includes Cary Grant, Alene MacMahon, Henry Stephenson, Catherine Doucet, Edgar Kennedy, Gerald Smith and Barnett Parker. Harry Lachman and Robert Riskin are codirecting. In "Lady Of New York," a comedy mystery romance drama, Ralph Bellamy, Joan Perry, Douglas Dumbrille, John Gallaudet, Gene Morgan and Wade Boteler are the principals. D. Ross Lederman directs.

For Paramount release Major Productions started an Emanuel Cohen comedy, "Mind Your Own Business." Charlie Ruggles and Alice Brady are featured. Robert Baldwin, Benny Baker, William Demarest, Lyle Talbot, Jack LaRue, Frankie Darro, Lloyd Crane and Theodore von Eltz are listed in the supporting line-up. Norman McLeod is directing.

Representing the independents, a group which as a whole is rather inactive, Chesterfield started "Ellis Island," a topical romance drama. Under Phil Rosen's direction the cast includes Donald Cook, Peggy Shannon, Matty Fain, Monte Vandergrift, Bryant Washburn and Joyce Compton.

WHAT THEY SAY ABOUT DIXIE

True or not, what writers have to say about Dixie is to be told to the public fulsomely and with emphasis by the purveyors of screen entertainment during the coming season, as witness the following indications of a swing toward the production of pictures with southern setting:

"Gone With the Wind" is to be produced by Selznick International. Twentieth Century-Fox will ask, "Can This Be Dixie?" Sol Lesser will produce "Rainbow On the River" for RKO-Radio and MGM will provide "New Orleans" as a successor to "San Francisco." Warner Brothers are making "Mountain Justice," Universal will offer "Murder On the Mississippi," and Hal Roach "Colonel Spanky," with Republic turning in "The Big Show" for its contribution to the celluloid celebration of the area below the Mason and Dixon line.

Radio's contribution to the new work is "Criminal Lawyer," the plot of which is topical romance drama. Lee Tracy is teamed with Margot Grahame in the lead roles, supported by Edward Ciannelli, Erik Rhodes, Frank M. Thomas, Aileen Pringle, Wilfred Lucas, Francis MacDonald and Lita Chevrt. Lew Landers is directing.

On the completed side of the ledger, Radio accounts for two of the five finished productions. "The Riddle Of The Dangling Pearl," an Hildegarde Withers-Inspector Piper comedy mystery, will present James Gleason and Zasu Pitts with Louise Latimer, Owen Davis, Jr., Arthur Aylesworth, Barbara Barondess, Paul Fix, Spencer Charters, Richard Tucker, George Sorel, Agnes Anderson, Billy Platt, Oscar Apfel, Bodil Rosing and Margaret Armstrong. Ben Holmes directed. "Night Waitress," a dramatic, mystery tinged romance, features Margot Grahame and Gordon Jones with Vinton Haworth, Donald Barry, Arthur Loft, Marc Lawrence, Billy Gilbert and Otto Yianaoka. Lew Landers directed.

Warners finished "Black Legion," a topical news headline drama. The lengthy cast includes Humphrey Bogart, Ann Sheridan, Dick Foran, Erin O'Brien Moore, Dickie Jones, Clifford Soubier, Joseph Sawyer, Henry Brandon, John Litel, Dorothy Vaughn, Helen Flint, Eddie Ecuff, Egon Brecher, Henry O'Neill, Samuel Hinds, Paul Harvey, Paul Stanton and Harry Hayden. Archie Mayo directed.

At Republic "The Country Gentleman" was finished. The veteran stage players, Olsen and Johnson, are featured with Joyce Compton, Lila Lee, Pierre Watkin, Donald Kirke, Ray Corrigan, Sam McKim, Wade Boteler, Ivan Miller, Olin Howland, Frank Sheridan, Harry Harvey, Joe Cunningham and the dog Prince. Ralph Staub directed.

Paramount checked in "Rosebowl," a seasonal football story. It will present Eleanore Whitney, Tom Brown, Larry Crabbe, William Frawley, Benny Baker, Nydia Westman, Priscilla Lawson, Adrian Morris and James Conlin among others. Charles Barton directed.

Itemization

THE ACADEMY of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences will hold its annual joint meeting of the Board and Branch Executive Committees October 22nd.

C. V. WHITNEY, accompanied by Mrs. Whitney and a party of friends, has arrived in Los Angeles to confer with David O. Selznick; Mr. Whitney is a member of the Board of Selznick International.

EDGAR RICE BURROUGHS has issued from the offices of Burroughs-Tarzan Pictures a statement setting forth that his contract recently consummated with Sol Lesser covers the production of certain of his published works in motion picture form but does not give Mr. Lesser exclusive right to Mr. Burroughs' services as an author.

DAVID O. SELZNICK has signed Adolphe Menjou for an important role in "A Star Is Born," for which Fredric March and Janet Gaynor have been announced previously.

MARLENE DIETRICH's next Paramount picture will be based on "Angel," a novel by Melchior Lengyel, which will be produced and directed by Ernst Lubitsch, work to commence in December.

ARCHIE MAYO, who will direct "Call It a Day" for Warner Brothers, is in New York to see the stage play and confer with Dodi Smith, the author; Frieda Inescort, Ian Hunter and Patrick Knowles are tentatively scheduled for roles.

ALBERT T. WILSON, Warner Brothers properties head, is in New York on his first purchasing tour in two years, attending auctions and covering the furniture market.

SAMUEL GOLDWYN will give screen credit to both Howard Hawks and William Wyler for direction of "Come And Get It," Mr. Wyler having finished the picture after Mr. Hawks' retirement from the assignment.

FRED A. PURNER, advertising and publicity director for Hal Roach, will act as publicity director for the Los Angeles Turf Club, attending to the interests of the Santa Anita racing plant.

TED LA BARBA, assistant camera man, has filed suit in superior court against Paramount, asking $51,100 alleged damages for failure to carry out a contract dated August 4, 1933.

GLADYS GEORGE, star of "Valiant Is the Word for Carrie," will make an interview tour of Dallas, Detroit, Chicago, Minneapolis, Salt Lake City, Memphis and Washington, D. C., in the interests of that film; she will make no theatre appearances.

SIDNEY HOWARD will write the screen play of "Gone With the Wind" for Selznick International and Betty Timmons, original of the author's book character, Scarlet O'Hara, will be tested for that role in the film.

MACK GORDON AND HARRY RAVEL have been signed by Darryl F. Zanuck to write musical numbers for "Wake Up and Live" and "Sally, Irene and Mary."

SMPE NAMES S. K. WOLF PRESIDENT; MEES AND KELLOGG WIN AWARDS

Outline of Art and Science of Photography Opens Fall Meeting at Rochester; Awards Made at Banquet

A program of demonstrations, discussions, papers on varied technical subjects and developments, and inspection tours of the Kodak Research Laboratories and the Bausch and Lomb plant, featured the four day semiannual convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers at Rochester, N. Y., this week. S. K. Wolf, of Erpi Picture Consultants, Inc., subsidiary of Electrical Research Products, Inc., was elected president of the society for a two-year term, succeeding Homer G. Tasker. The attendance was reported the largest in the history of the Society.

Other officers elected were Mr. Tasker, W. C. Kunzmann and J. I. Crabtree, vice-presidents; James Frank, secretary; Lawrence Davee, treasurer; and Max Batsel and A. N. Goldsmith, members of the board of governors. It was decided that the next two conventions of the organization be held in New York and Hollywood.

Mr. Wolf has served two terms on the governing board, has been chairman of the projection screen committee and was named executive vice-president in January, 1936. He has held various positions with Erpi since 1928 and at present is engaged in the production and distribution of instructional sound films for that company. In 1932 he was selected to represent American acoustical engineers at the International Electrical Congress in Paris and this year he was sent to Budapest as representative of the SMPE and the American Standards Association at the International Standards Association meeting.

The Progress Medal by which the SMPE recognizes work resulting "in a significant advance in the development of motion picture technology," was presented to Dr. C. E. Kenneth Mees, vice-president of the Eastman Kodak Company in charge of research and development, at the society's semi-annual banquet held on Wednesday evening at the Oak Hill Country Club.

At the same time, Edward W. Kellogg, of the RCA Manufacturing Company, received the Journal Award for the best technical paper published in the society's Journal in 1935. The article was on variable density and variable width systems.

The Progress Medal was presented to Dr. Mees, not for any single development, but in recognition of his contributions to motion picture technology over a period of 35 years. During that period he has published more than 80 scientific papers dealing with many aspects of the science of photography, his outstanding researches having been concerned with the preparation and specification of light-filters and of safe-lights for darkroom use, the preparation of various types of panchromatic emulsions, the measurement of the "resolving power" of photographic plates, and studies of the chemical properties of developers.

Delegates Visit Kodak and Bausch & Lomb Plants; New Equipment and Improvements on Old Are Described

Since the development of sound motion pictures Mr. Kellogg has been concerned with nearly every phase of that art, having had experience with radio communication and electrical sound reproduction for many years. A paper entitled "A Review of the Quest for Constant Speed" was read by Mr. Kellogg at the sound and apparatus session of the convention on Monday afternoon.

M. H. Aylesworth, chairman of the board of Radio Keith Orpheum, in his address at the banquet, proposed production coordination to reduce costs, predicted a return to single feature policy, said distributors are considering more satisfactory contracts, urged cooperation with radio and television as theatre attendance assets, and commended the industry's self-censorship of product.

An historical outline of the development of the art and science of photography in this century was given by Dr. Mees at the opening session on Monday morning. At an informal luncheon which followed registration

NEW PRESIDENT OF SMPE AND WINNERS OF HONORS FOR ACHIEVEMENT

DR. C. E. KENNETH MEES
Awarded the Progress Medal for "work resulting in a significant advance in motion picture technology."

S. K. WOLF
Executive of Erpi Picture Consultants, Inc., elected president for a two-year term to succeed Homer G. Tasker.

EDWARD W. KELLOGG
Given the Journal Award for the best technical paper published in the society's Journal in 1935.

NEW USES OF FILMS DISCUSSED

and the opening session Mayor Charles Stanton of Rochester welcomed the delegates and the reading of papers scheduled for the sound and apparatus session followed immediately. A special lecture demonstration on color photography was given in the evening by Dr. Mees at the Eastman auditorium. The various processes of making and projecting color films were described and illustrated.

The following three days were given over to the reading and discussion of the technical papers, except for an inspection tour of the Kodak Laboratories on Tuesday, a visit to the Bausch and Lomb plant on Wednesday and the banquet and dance on Wednesday evening.

Among new devices or improvements in present apparatus described were several instruments of importance to projectionists or cameramen. A new type of volume indicator that meets the requirements of sound recording was described by F. L. Hopper of Erpi, and a new neon type volume indicator in which the glowing or extinguishing of neon bulbs indicates peak loads at audiofrequency voltages was discussed by S. Read Jr. of RCA.

F. H. Richardson, conductor of the Blue Book School in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, and T. D. Hover of the Ohio theatre, Lima, Ohio, described a neon type of rotating mirror oscilloscope intended for routine use by projectionists to aid in eliminating noise due to microphonic tubes or improperly meshed gears. The parts for the instruments described may be purchased or built by the projectionist.

New Spot-Lamps

In order to utilize high-intensity carbon arcs more effectively as sources of illumination for photographic purposes, two newly designed high-intensity arc spotlamps have been developed, the delegates were told by E. C. Richardson of Mole-Richardson, Inc. Improvements have been incorporated in the design, it was said, which particularly adapt the lamps for use under modern photographic conditions, especially in the production of colored motion pictures where uniformity of spectral distribution and intensity are vital factors.

Other equipment and the authors of papers describing them were: a film editing machine employing optical intermittent projection, by J. L. Spence of the Akeley Camera Company; a sound-film recorder for studio or portable use which compensates for power surges in lines of poor regulation, and an improved reel-end alarm, by D. Canady and V. A. Wellman of the Canady Sound Appliance Company; and a description of a three wire direct current supply for projection arcs by C. C. Dash, of the Hertner Electric Company.

A demonstration triode for visualizing electronic phenomena was described by F. E. Eldredge and H. F. Dart of the Westinghouse Lamp Company.

The subject of modern loud speaking telephones with reference to efficiency, power handling capacity, response frequency characteristics and distributional frequency characteristics was discussed by C. Flannagan, R. Wolf, and W. C. Jones of Erpi. The latest types of loud speaker were described and development problems discussed.

UPSWING CREDITED TO FILM, NOT GIVEAWAY

George W. Weeks, general sales-manager of Gaumont-British, reports on return from a business tour of the middle west and south that exhibitor opinion regarding the business upswing is unanimous.

"It is generally conceded by the men in the field," said Mr. Weeks, "that the increase in business, which is universal, is due to two contributing factors; namely, the high type of product that has been available this Fall, and an improvement in economic conditions.

"One of the most gratifying observations I made on this trip, which included visits to Cleveland, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Indianapolis, Dallas, Texas, New Orleans and Atlanta, was that it is really the picture, rather than the 'giveaways,' that is bringing the people into the theatre. Artificial means of attracting large audiences are losing favor with exhibitors, who are now definitely going back to normal showmanship policies, where it is the show that counts."

Photography and Crime

Two applications of motion picture photography in unusual fields were discussed. J. Frank, Jr., of International Projector Corporation, described the Schwarzkopf method of identifying criminals. He said that the two generally employed means of sight identification, the still picture and police headquarters lineup, are not particularly effective. The use of a sound motion picture which can be exhibited to widespread audiences in a short time, is already regarded as one of the most useful developments in this field, he added. The special apparatus used and the technic developed were described and actual motion pictures of criminals were shown to prove the effectiveness of the method.

Improvements made during the past year in methods, apparatus and materials used in making medical motion pictures were discussed by H. B. Tuttle of the Eastman Kodak Company. The uses of special accessories for this type of photography were described and a demonstration medical film was shown.

Results of experiments in the storing of motion picture film by libraries and other agencies and the methods found necessary were described by C. G. Weber and J. R. Hill of the National Bureau of Standards. Reference libraries of the future may contain files of photographic films in addition to shelves of books, if the present trend toward the use of films for recording and copying the printed word continues, it was said. The use of safety film and the necessity of air conditioning vaults to prevent the film from becoming brittle were described. Mr. Hill and Mr. Weber also reported on experiments made to determine the stability of motion picture film. Special ovens were used in the tests to duplicate the conditions which would affect film over a period of years.

Film Manufacture Aspects

Various aspects of the manufacture of motion picture film and the steps employed in the process were described by E. K. Carver of the Eastman Kodak Company. His talk was supplemented by a visit to the laboratories where the delegates watched the actual process.

Motion picture exchanges, under the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, have had an excellent fire record, the lowest fire loss of any industry in the United States, H. Anderson of Paramount Pictures said in a paper on fire prevention. He stressed the importance of safety measures in every branch of the industry and described present fire prevention regulations. A picture showing extinguishing apparatus and fire engines in action in a motion picture studio was shown.

Other subjects discussed included: the projection of lenticular color films, by J. G. Capstaff, O. E. Miller and L. S. Wilder of Eastman Kodak Company; the effect of lens aberrations on image quality, by W. B. Rayton, of Bausch and Lomb Optical Company; mercury arcs of increased brightness and efficiency, by L. J. Buttolph of General Electric Vapor Lamp Company; trick and process cinematography, by J. A. Norling of Loucks and Norling Studios, and certain aspects of reduction printing, by G. Friedl, Jr., of Erpi.

Also described were the performance record of an automatic recording densitometer by C. M. Tuttle and M. E. Russell of the Kodak Company; a developing machine for sensitometric work, by L. A. Jones, M. E. Russell and H. R. Beacham of the Kodak Company, and the influence of sprocket hole perforations on the development of the adjacent sound track areas, by J. V. Frayne and V. Pagliarulo of Erpi.

E. K. Carver, chairman of the standards committee, reported that the standardization of the 2,000 foot reels is still under discussion.

Tom Moore to Enter Stage Producing

Tom Moore, veteran exhibitor of Washington, D. C., has lined up 16 plays for production at the rate of two a year. The first goes into rehearsal this month. On the list, Mr. Moore said, are "The Wishing Well," "Spawn of Satan," "Wild Honey," "Feathers in the Wind," "The Golden Voice," "The Death Mask" and "Milestones of Melody." The casts will be drawn from screen, stage and radio.

Dimples

(20th Century-Fox)

Comedy Drama

On his third attempt since its opening, and by getting up early on the morning of its fifth day, your reporter achieved admittance to the Roxy theatre for the purpose of reviewing "Dimples," and now sits himself down to report that it is worth all that and more, to confess shedding an unabashed tear when Shirley Temple, as Little Eva in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," died and went to an unpictured heaven, and to record the personal and wholly unimportant opinion that this is by wide margin the best production Miss Temple has had and a production that would be outstanding without this particular star, a test that by no means all of her previous vehicles would have withstood. With her, in that same personal and unimportant opinion, which appears to be shared by everybody in Manhattan possessed of the price of admission, the picture has everything the man behind the ticket wicket and the man, woman and child in front of it have a reasonable right to expect of screen entertainment.

The story, normally a nominal factor in the presentation of Miss Temple, is dated 1850, the place New York. The star is a street urchin, singing and dancing for coins with a band of children fondly but loosely looked after by her grandfather, an impoverished aristocrat of pliable principles. Circumstances associate them with the affairs of the Drews and the romantic interests of Allen Drew, who is to produce the then new play, "Uncle Tom's Cabin," in which, following numerous complications, Dimples plays the part of Eva in such manner as to bring complete and, incidentally, logical happiness to all concerned. There's a tacked-on sequence in which the star heads a minstrel number, but that's just to give the audience a chance to dry its tears before lights come up.

Frank Morgan's performance as the child's impoverished grandparent is among his finest works. Helen Westley as Mrs. Caroline Drew gives life to one of those black satin, brownstone spinsters that nobody believes exist. Robert Kent and Delma Byron make the romantic interest seem vital without overemphasis, and Astrid Allwyn suggests the selfish other woman effectively without shouting. Stepin Fetchit makes the most of a minor assignment.

Miss Temple has four song numbers by Jimmy McHugh and Ted Koehler, who were considerate enough to adhere to the music forms of the period, and as many dance numbers directed by the incomparable Bill Robinson. All of these add to the story and none of them impedes its progress. (This does not include the tacked-on minstrel sequence.)

Selling angles are too numerous and self-evident for itemized mention. The manifest thing to do, for box office and patrons, is, in the language of the many, to shoot the works.

Reviewed at the Roxy theatre, early in the morning, on a Tuesday, where a capacity audience laughed and cried and counted standing long in line for the privilege a bargain.

Comedy

This zippy, smartly contrived, capably acted, elaborately mounted comedy literally had the preview audience in Westwood Village theatre holding its sides from laughter. Combining the best values of farce and hokum, dialogue, action and situation provoking the fun, the story moves at speedy pace. In the principal roles Jean Harlow is characteristically hard boiled, William Powell is suavely polished even though one situation tosses him into a welter of ridiculous comedy, Myrna Loy is smartly regal and Spencer Tracy excitedly flustered. They constitute a quartet of names of appeal to patrons and exhibitors.

With something to amuse happening in almost every sequence, the motivation is unique. Editor Tracy leaves Jean Harlow, prospective bride, waiting at the church to rush down to his paper to find why it printed a spicy scandal yarn about Myrna Loy, millionairess, for which the owner, Charley Grapewin, has been plastered with a $5,000,000 libel suit. Something must be done quickly. Tracy does it first by searching all over the world for Powell, expert suit quasher, then finding him on his own doorstep, and marrying him to the amazed Miss Harlow.

Hilarity marking the action and dialogue of the bride, who doesn't want to live in the same house with her husband, Powell eventually takes off for Europe. There, by playing up to Miss Loy's father, Walter Connolly's fishing mania, and saving them from a couple of bores, he worms himself into their good graces. Though suspicious that Powell is some kind of a phoney, Miss Loy can't resist him. Back in America there is more merriment by Tracy, Powell and Miss Harlow, before Powell accepts an invitation to Connolly's lodge, which should provide a grand opportunity for the compromising position that will blast the libel suit. Following a wildly frantic fishing episode, Powell falls in love with Miss Loy and they elope to justify Powell's claim that he is unmarried. Things get a little complicated but none the less amusing until Powell demonstrates that his marriage to Harlow wasn't legal because she hadn't recovered from a chain of divorces. The finale clarifies things satisfactorily for Powell and Miss Loy, the suit is called off and Tracy has nothing to do but marry the girl who has waited so long.

Though the story seems to have a sophisticated thread, the comic manner in which it has been treated brings it into the realm of desirable attractions for any kind of audience from the teen age up. Story, production and personnel values give the film qualities that should inspire unique interest-creating advances, and there are elements to get it off to a running start with word of mouth advertising.

Dramatic Romance

Following the semi-historic angle adopted in "The Glory Trail," this is a dramatic romance of California just after the close of the Mexican War. While the film encompasses a certain amount of historical fact, its entertainment quality is confined to a fictionary romance. That quality, which is substantially entertaining, has been enhanced by considerable dramatic thrill action. The production also carries a pleasing singing and dancing content.

The story, making due allowances for theatrical necessities, runs smoothly and at an interesting pace. A prologue establishes the theme.

President Taylor, after listening to Paula's description of injustices and tyrannies suffered by Mexicans at the hands of lawless Americans, orders his aide, Captain Carroll, to California to see that the terms of a treaty guaranteeing property rights are lived up to. Romance between Carroll and Paula develops quickly, and through her influence, he makes friends with her brother Ricardo. After action sequences in which comedy is contrasted, Carroll is jailed and Ricardo dies as he frees him. With romantic conflict between the boy and girl parring that which is inherent in the motivating drama, Carroll sets himself up at the head of Ricardo's riders. Invading Americans are driven from the property they usurped. In anti-climax there

Production values of the film are of high caliber, as is the quality of acting contributed by the principals. Essentially a romance-tinged thrill drama, it is of the kind that appeals to those patrons who appreciate the value of a logical story and at the same time like to see their pictures move.

German Musical

This is a German production of the opera, "Martha," by Friedrich von Flotow, in the original score and tongue. It is a polished work, distinguished by competent acting, splendid singing, excellent photography, admirable mounting and sensitive, confident direction. There is no adulteration of the work by means of interpolated musical numbers, interjected jazz dancing or other devices commonly employed by American producers. The film is not supplied with English titles for American audiences, a circumstance that somewhat circumscribes its commercial usefulness, but preserves intact its cultural integrity.

The story of the opera is well known. Martha is the name assumed by Lady Harriet, lady-in-waiting to the queen, when, masquerading as a peasant girl and attending the festival at which peasants choose their house maids for the year, she is chosen by Lyonel and forced to carry out her unwittingly made bargain. How the queen comes to know of this and to bring about a happy ending by means of a decree making the peasants owners of their lands, is familiar to those who know their opera, refreshingly stimulating fiction to those who do not.

The treatment throughout is modern and partakes in no particular of the outmoded theory that opera must be stuffy, slow, artificial and dull. The film compares favorably with the best of the operettas that have come from Hollywood and contains a number of sequences that American producers of works in kind might do well to study as to technique and effectiveness.

A Greater Promise

Russian Drama

Here are extolled again the circumstances attending human existence on the collectivist farms of the Soviet Republic, more specifically in the Jewish autonomous region, Birobidjan. Here, as in former Russian films of like purpose, are bits of fine acting, stretches of dull routine and vague narrative, occasionally brilliant but generally inferior photography. Also, here again the close of the picture is given over to verbal expression of high praise for the social scheme spoken by a story character and of the story text a part. In this, as in preceding sequences, English titles convey very clearly the significance of word and action.

Ths story concerns aged, widowed Dvoira, Jewish mother of nine, who brings her family to Birobidjan from "abroad" in search of work, peace and liberty. All save one of the group find happiness in the community, romantically as well as economically, and that one, husband of Dvoira's daughter, believing he has discovered gold on the land, assaults an associate who has learned of his find and insisted that he report it. Dvoira's husband is captured and consigned to an undisclosed punishment, his victim recovers and the picture ends in a merry wedding feast celebrating the nuptials of a Jewish girl and a Russian worker, with Dvoira delivering the pronouncement referred to in the preceding paragraph.

The picture has in common with others of kindred origin a definitely propaganda purpose. Also in common with them, it has a substantial and not overworked plot. The cast is likewise typical, made up of competent players who look as well as act their characters. The technical department didn't function quite so well as usual.

Sing Me a Love Song

(Warner)

Comedy Romance

Against the background of a department store comedy romance, this film gives James Melton ample opportunity to sing and Hugh Herbert and Walter Catlett to check in with a line of comedy that is mirth provoking even though it is not always relevant to the basic story. Through the intelligent spotting of these two entertainment values, the rather formula story is given a noticeably fresh quality. Fortunately that padding out of the theme attained by Melton's several solo presentations, as well as the amusement provided by the Herbert-Catlett antics, takes care of lulls that otherwise might have dragged.

Jerry Haines, heir, goes to work in the store incognito. Because he is a singer, also because Jean Martin, assisted by Owen, presides over the music department, he elects to work there. Romance suggested between Jerry and Jean is followed through intelligently as its principal comedy contrast is provided by Owen and Chris, the elevator man. As Hammerschlag, kleptomaniac, and Sprague, floor walker, are jerked into the action to present their hilarious specialty at the most necessary times, romantic complications arise. But Jerry, who has made friends with all the employees, the while learning why the store is operating in the red, reveals his identity as the owner and everything is adjusted satisfactorily for all concerned.

Fun and music are the dominating entertainment and commercial angles in the film. And as the picture has no other purpose than that of being light, amusing entertainment, plus the idea that it might be serving as a training school for Melton in future more pretentious attractions, it measures up as an acceptable average attraction.

Previewed in Warner's Beverly theatre. The audience reacted favorably to the musical and comedy content, but didn't seem to get very excited about the motivating story.

Ein Liebesroman Im Hause Habsburg

(Casino)

German Comedy Drama

Back in 1887, the time setting of this story, the courts of Europe were involved, as long before and long after, with such weighty matters as the balance of power, the inter-dynasty relationships and interests, and, of course, the manipulation of matters matrimonial for purposes of state. Never, it appeared, did the right prince fall in love with the right princess, and this understandable circumstance, plus the condition that romantic devotion must fall where statesmen decreed it should, gave origin to a vast number of stories, part fiction and part fact, which have entertained the common people throughout the world and, on occasion, still do.

The story of "Ein Liebesroman im Hause Habsburg" (A Romance in the House of Hapsburg) is typical. The details are immaterial. Involved are Crown Prince Rudolph, who kills himself, and Prince Johann Salvator, who, enamored of the Russian Duchess Rostowky and disciplined by Emperor Franz Joseph, sails away into oblivion. The tale is told in protracted conversational sequences relieved now and again by bits of comedy. The ending is what Americans call unhappy.

The film is not supplied with English titles. The technical treatment is adequate. The cast is well chosen as to type. The appeal is almost exclusively to the German audience.

Juggernaut

(Twickenham-British)

Melodrama

Boris Karloff is the shop-window asset of this very lurid melodrama, which in type goes back well into the pre-talker era and seems likely to appeal most strongly to the survivors of the serial public. It is not a typical horror film, but Karloff's characterization of a doctor who murders in order to get money for medical research is a study of a warped and repellent type and provides an unusual finale when the doctor, self-poisoned, discourses on his dying symptoms to a fellow-medico.

The young wife of an elderly and wealthy Englishman, on the Riviera, promises to pay a doctor £20,000, which he needs for his medical research work, on the death of her husband. The doctor kills his patient by hypodermic injection, but it is then revealed that he leaves the widow only a small income, under the control of her stepson. The doctor tries to poison the son and also a nurse who has discovered his crime, but is defeated and injects the poison into his own veins.

It is such dated material that one can only try to sell it to the simpler public and it seems that the best line of approach is to be found in the situation of a murderer dying by his own tools. There is a problem angle, not to be taken too seriously, in that the doctor is willing to murder in order to get money for a humanitarian, and in fact, noble purpose. Are there such moral freaks, is a question that might be asked.

At the night trade show, in the Piccadilly theatre, there was an obvious and general disposition to take it as a burlesque.

The Arizona Raiders

(Paramount)

Comedy Western

While typically western in plot and setting, this production places more emphasis on comedy than action. It is also endowed with better production features and cast names than are common to pictures of its category. Whether there is too much of comedy or too little of action to appease the insatiable appetites of western adherents, remains to be seen. It appears that a happier medium of the two would have struck a more responsive chord.

It is good comedy, nevertheless, and played to the hilt by Larry Crabbe, Raymond Hatton and Johnny Downs, but the middle of the picture bogs down, and without the stimulation which action sequences would have injected, becomes slow-paced. Yet this adaptation from Zane Grey's "Raiders of Spanish Peaks," is still better-than-average western fare.

Crabbe, who is in immediate danger of losing his head by the process known as hanging, performs a feat of legerdemain and escapes. Later he frees Hatton, notorious for his acquaintance with countless sheriffs, from the same fate. The two of them head for Arizona, and meet Johnny Downs, who has just been prevented from eloping with Jane Rhodes of the Spanish Peaks ranch.

Crabbe, Hatton and Downs set out for the ranch. Crabbe and Hatton are signed as help by Marsha Hunt, owner of the ranch and sister of Jane. They eventually learn that Grant Withers, ostensibly administrator of the ranch, is in cahoots with several of the hired hands to rustle the Spanish Peaks' cattle. The plot is foiled by Crabbe and Hatton. Jane and Downs are married, and it's a double wedding, with Marsha and Crabbe.

We Who Are About to Die

(RKO Radio)

Drama

Powerful drama makes this an unusual picture. Primarily it is the story of the experiences of a man in a penitentiary death house, innocent of murder, convicted by circumstantial evidence, sacrificed on the altar of judicial dishonesty and avaricious political ambition. The phases devoted to the mental and physical tortures endured by the innocent victim and his fellow condemned men in the shadow of death are grimly realistic. Dramatic also is the fight made by a girl against almost hopeless odds to save the life of the man she loved.

Adhering to its initial quality and always in good taste, the film makes but few concessions to lightening contrasts. Thompson, in love with Connie Stewart, is railroaded to jail and potential death, detective Mathews providing the most damning testimony. Heroically Connie takes up her courageous fight. First convincing Mathews that he is only a tool in the hands of unscrupulous politicians, she wins him as an ally. As he becomes romantically attached to her, they stand shoulder to shoulder endeavoring to move every force that can save Thompson. Meanwhile the awesome death house drama is enacted. After rigid suspense, Connie triumphs as Mathews extracts a confession from the real culprits.

There is constantly evident in the film a feeling of persecution, a theatrical factor that in the past has been influential in establishing pictures.

Far out of the beaten rut, the show calls for a brand of exploitation similarly different.

Excellent

One reason for the outstanding merit of this travelogue is Lowell Thomas' enthusiastic commentary on the scenes visited. Colorado, the locale for this tour, is also the place of Mr. Thomas' boyhood days. Under the spell of his best descriptive eulogies, such noted scenic spots as Pike's Peak, Iceberg Lake, the Garden of the Gods, the Continental Divide and the Royal Gorge appear to assume added beauty and make a striking album of gorgeous photography. Novel

The outstanding feature in this edition of Oswald's adventures is the exhibition of some skillful puppet work. Used as a background for the antics of the comic rabbit, such delightful puppetry lends a novel note of entertainment. Knocked senseless in the course of his puppet show, Oswald is visited by a weird dream concerning the difficulties one of his rebellious subjects meets when the little figure would try to free himself of the strings that bind him to his master manipulator. Awakening, as usual, only proves that it was but a nasty dream. Running time, 8½ minutes.

Amusing

This time our friend Oswald the Rabbit turns inventive and devises a trick radio machine. From his contraption issue forth mysterious rays of a strange personality changing power. The Duck family is used for experimental purposes. Much grief for the unfortunate subjects results, and a great deal of amusement for the audience. A howling finale is reached when the Pup is inoculated with pugilistic urges and a wild melee results. Running time, 8 minutes.

MAXWELL BUYS SHARES, BUT FINAL GB CONTROL IS STILL UNDECIDED

Remains for the Present with Ostrers, and Consent of 20th Century-Fox Is Required for Voting Stock Transfer

Control Has Not Passed Yet, Says Kent; Maxwell Says He Has No Fear of "Threats" from American Parties

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

Ultimate consummation of the pending deal whereby John Maxwell of Associated British Pictures is seeking to acquire the Ostrer brothers' share in the Metropolis and Bradford Trust, controlling interest in Gaumont British, still was undetermined this week, it was indicated in statements issued by Mr. Maxwell, Sidney R. Kent, president of 20th Century-Fox, and GB. Mr. Maxwell, who has been elected to the GB board, has purchased 250,000 "B" shares of M. & B. from the Ostrers but the transfer of 5,100 "A" shares, the voting stock, is still dependent on the consent of 20th Century-Fox.

The "A" shares are the vital voting and controlling portion of the outstanding securities involved in the 57 per cent M. & B. interest in GB which is held by the Ostrers and 20th Century-Fox, the former with 5,100 shares and the latter holding 4,900 shares.

The legal position appears to be that Mr. Maxwell's purchase of the 'B' shares gives GB a tri-part ownership with control still with the Ostrers. If the Ostrers act as nominees of Mr. Maxwell, using their control under his instructions, the obstacle of the Fox consent can be overcome in the absence of formal sale of the controlling shares. The position implies a pistol point threat to 20th Century-Fox which cannot challenge British control but may be forced to sell its share or part of it to Mr. Maxwell for the best terms, possibly a guarantee of playdates and a provision for quota pictures by Maxwell-Gaumont.

The CEA general council has passed a resolution reading, in part, that "in the best interests of the nation and the British film industry all possible steps should be taken to prevent acquisition of the control of more British cinemas by foreign interests now or in the future."

Fighting American Control

Identical statements on the present status of the sale by the Ostrers to Mr. Maxwell were issued by both parties but the ABP executive, additionally, emphasized the desire to prevent passage of GB control from British to American hands as the influencing factor behind his negotiations for GB control.

The joint statement read:

"The agreement which has been signed between the Ostrers and ABP provides for the acquisition of the Ostrers' holdings in Metropolis and Bradford Trust, which holds the controlling shares of G. B.

"This agreement falls into two stages, the first of which is the acquisition of 250,000 "B" shares of Metropolis and Bradford Trust by ABP which has been completed, the shares having been transferred and an appropriate part of the purchase price having been paid over. The second stage, with regard to the 5,100 "A" shares of Metropolis and Bradford Trust, will be dealt with as soon as possible. Until the completion of the second stage of the agreement, the administration of GB remains exactly as at present."

SCHENCKS REITERATE OPPOSITION TO DEAL

Nicholas M. Schenck stated in New York this week that both he and his brother will militantly oppose the deal between John Maxwell and the Ostrer brothers. The matter, he said, will be placed in the hands of his legal department.

Joseph M. Schenck, in Hollywood, said, "Sidney R. Kent has full authority to speak for Twentieth Century-Fox in the negotiations now under way between these parties."

Others Seeking Holdings

To this Mr. Maxwell added:

"In making the agreement I was mainly influenced by a desire to prevent GB passing to foreign control. This agreement secures that. I take the view that if the arrangement with the American companies were carried out it would have meant the passing under foreign control of a huge block of the British cinema and film industry.

"If that had happened, other large American companies, to preserve their interests, would have endeavored to make similar arrangements. In fact, some have already tried to do so, with the result that, in a short time, the bulk of the cinemas in this country, or certainly most of the best ones, would have passed to foreign control.

"Such a situation would have been intolerable in any country, and in my view a humiliation a great nation such as ours would have been compelled to stop, if necessary, by governmental and legislative measures.

Scouts American "Threats"

"I have no fear of the threats from America of our transaction being stopped by legal proceedings. I recollect two previous statements, first that a deal had been completed for the realignment of GB control and, second, that such realignment did not mean foreign control. Both proved to be incorrect.

"In entering this agreement, both parties have had the highest legal opinion in this country, but it does not in any way infringe the rights of 20th Century-Fox, who are the other partners with the Ostrers in Metropolis and Bradford Trust."

It was said that the Prime Minister and the Chancellor of the Exchequer are delighted with Mr. Maxwell's purchase of the GB stock. ABP is believed to be planning to pay for the "B" shares of GB, already purchased, out of company reserves.

Mr. Kent's statement, issued following conferences with Mr. Maxwell over the weekend, said:

"I am aware that some agreement has been made between Mr. Maxwell and the Ostrers. A copy of this agreement has been asked for by us but has not yet been received. I am assured, however, that the sale of the Ostrer shares is dependent on the sale of not less than half of the voting shares held by 20th Century-Fox, and that the control, so far, has not passed.

The Financial Times on Tuesday commented that the obscurity of the GB and ABP statements in referring to the Fox interests suggests that the deal must remain incomplete until Mr. Kent is satisfied. It further commented on the absence of any mention of the Maxwell offer to "the large body of general investors owning 40 per cent of the GB ordinaries."

It is said here that Mr. Kent may find a working agreement with Mr. Maxwell to be more advantageous from a business standpoint than the sale of the GB shares to him at a price governed by the balance sheet of GB.

Contract Articles Cited

The legal dispute with Fox turns on the interpretation of three of the articles of association in M. & B. Article 23A says the Ostrers cannot transfer any part of their "A" shares while Fox retains 2,451 shares. Article 30 gives the directors the power to issue registration of transfers. Article 89 provides that refusal of transfer must be agreed upon by four directors and if no such agreement is reached in two months the transfer is good. As two directors of four are the Ostrers, refusal to register the transfer to Mr. Maxwell cannot be obtained by form and the transfer will be valid in two months unless Fox establishes Article 23A as having legal priority and overriding Article 89.

Mr. Maxwell's plans are understood to call for GB and ABP remaining as separate companies with himself as liaison. Early elimination of the Ostrers from the company is anticipated, with Mark Ostrer probably going out within a year. Drastic economies and executive readjustments are also part of the plan.

Nominally the object in retaining the separate identities of the two companies is to safeguard the rights of the GB stockholders, but actually it leaves Mr. Maxwell in the clear relative to the financial status of GB.

Mr. Maxwell is paying £1,250,000 for the "B" shares of M. & B.

NEW SOUTH WALES FILM BOARD VOTED

Tribunal Would Control Licensing of Theatres, Cancellations, Giveaways, Price Minimum

by CLIFF HOLT

in Sydney

Ratification of the Film Board of Trade presages a new era in the film industry of the Commonwealth. Unanimously approved by both distributors and exhibitors, the Board will embark upon its task as a mediator founded on goodwill and authorized by law. If it functions wisely and efficiently, there will be no need for a repetition of the many political disputes in which the industry has been involved too frequently in the past few years; trade dissension will not become an excuse for expensive Government commissions.

The only disturbing element since the Board was mooted, organized and approved has been the belated application of certain British interests and allied trades to gain representation. While there may be no real objection to giving these interests a seat at the conference table, an impression exists that any more members will make the Board unwieldy and hamper its activities.

So far there are nine members—one independent chairman and four distributors and four exhibitors. The whole purpose of the creation of the Board in the first place was to set up a legally authorized and representative tribunal to remedy distributor and exhibitor problems, and, for the most part, only such issues which would affect these two factions will come within the Board's scope. These are theatre license control, Standard Film Contract, rejection, free gifts, minimum admissions, program footage and censorship.

However, it is a "drag-net" clause which is probably worrying those who have not now any representation. Under this clause the Board may establish and define the distributors' and exhibitors' attitude on any matter of policy whatsoever, provided it has the sanction of the distributors' and exhibitors' associations, Hoyts and Greater Union Theatres.

Hutchinson in Australia

Dame Rumor was down on the docks to greet Walter J. Hutchinson as he set foot on Australian soil for the first time in 15 years. Here was the man who had made a frenzied trip to Australia to protect the Fox holdings in Hoyts in the event of divorce proceedings between Hoyts and Greater Union; the man who would reorganize the Fox selling system in Australia and show local executives just what they didn't know about the business! At least, that's what Dame Rumor would have had you believe. Instead there arrived an unassuming gentleman distinguished by a total lack of artificiality and at once an impressive personality who suggested things done and not things talked about. When Mr. Hutchinson says that next year big pictures will be the general rule and not the exception you feel you can believe it. He is an executive who knows his business in all parts of the world; a true man of motion pictures with the welfare of the industry at heart.

He was quick to pay a compliment to his Australian general manager, Stanley S. Crick, and the managing director of Hoyts, Charles E. Munro. "I will be here for a few weeks," he said. "I am here to work with them and give them assistance in the fine work they are doing and not here to disturb them."

Coincidentally, it was Mr. Crick and Mr. Munro who helped Mr. Hutchinson form the Australian organization of Fox when he was out here in 1921. Now, while the first named is chief of Fox here, Mr. Munro is the principal of Hoyts, in which Fox has a 51 per cent interest.

One of Mr. Hutchinson's first acts after his arrival was to open the 20th Century-Fox and Gaumont-British Dominions sales convention. Since then he has been saying little and doing plenty.

"Uncivilized" Barred for Export

Produced by Expeditionary Films, one of the newest but most important Australian producing companies, "Uncivilized" has been banned in its present form for export, although its exhibition in Australia is permitted without cuts. It is understood that the Australian Film Censor, Cresswell O'Reilly, has objected to the scene where the heroine is swimming in a lagoon, and where an aboriginal "killer" is strangled.

An appeal will be lodged.

The producers say that distribution arrangements in Great Britain and the United States already have been finalized.

Hoyts Net $301,000

A preliminary statement issued by Charles E. Munro, managing director of Hoyts, discloses the net profit of the company for the year ended June 30th at £61,089 ($301,000). Proposals for construction of three new theatres also are announced.

This figure, which is subject to audit, constitutes a record in respect to operations of the company during the last six years, the annual profit since 1931 being as follows:

1931	£4,341	1934	£52,802
1932	*11,039	1935	50,825
1933	25,283	1936	61,089

* Loss

Out of the latest profit two half-yearly dividends have been declared, making a total distribution of 6 per cent on the "A" preference shares and 5 per cent on the "B" preference capital. The amount of the dividend is £46,500.

"The policy of consolidating and improving the company's business by maintaining the theatres on a high plane architecturally, the installation of the latest devices for the comfort of patrons and the establishment of a superior standard of programmes and presentations, have enabled this improvement of more than £10,000 to be shown," according to Mr. Munro.

"The profit position for the past 12 months is also a reflection of the progressive methods adopted in operating. It is proposed to continue the present policy of modernizing all theatres which have not as yet been treated in this manner, and to expand the circuit by the erection of new theatres in a number of situations.

"A sum in excess of £46,000 was expended during 1935-36 in redecorating several theatres while others were completely rebuilt. A new theatre of modern design was erected at Windsor, Victoria, and has enjoyed considerable success since its opening.

"Plans for the construction of three additional theatres have already been finalized and some contracts have been placed and others are in process of negotiation for their building."

National Decency Legion Reviews 17 New Pictures

Of 17 new pictures reviewed and classified by the National Legion of Decency in its list for the current week, nine were approved as unobjectionable for general patronage, seven were listed as unobjectionable for adults and one was designated as objectionable in part. The new films and their classifications follow:

Class A-1, Unobjectionable for General Patronage: "Adventure in Manhattan," "Aufforderung Zum Tanz" (German), "The Big Broadcast of 1937," "The Big Game," "The Case of the Black Cat," "Dimples," "Killer at Large," "The President's Mystery," "Ride, Ranger, Ride." Class A-2, Unobjectionable for Adults: "Heisses Blut" (German), "Ladies in Love," "The Magnificent Brute," "The Man Who Lived Twice," "Mutter und Kind" (German), "Three-Cornered Hat" (Italian), "Without Orders." Class B, Objectionable in Part: "Libeled Lady."

Jack Cohn Returns From London Trip

Jack Cohn, vice-president of Columbia Pictures, returned this week on the Normandie from England after an inspection tour which took him from New York to Hollywood to London and back to New York in a little more than three weeks. The Columbia executive said that close cooperation with the European studios is increasingly important to the industry because of the international perspective which all amusement is assuming. En route to England on the Queen Mary Mr. Cohn signed Beryl Markham, English woman flier.

H. J. Ochs Is Named Assistant to Sears

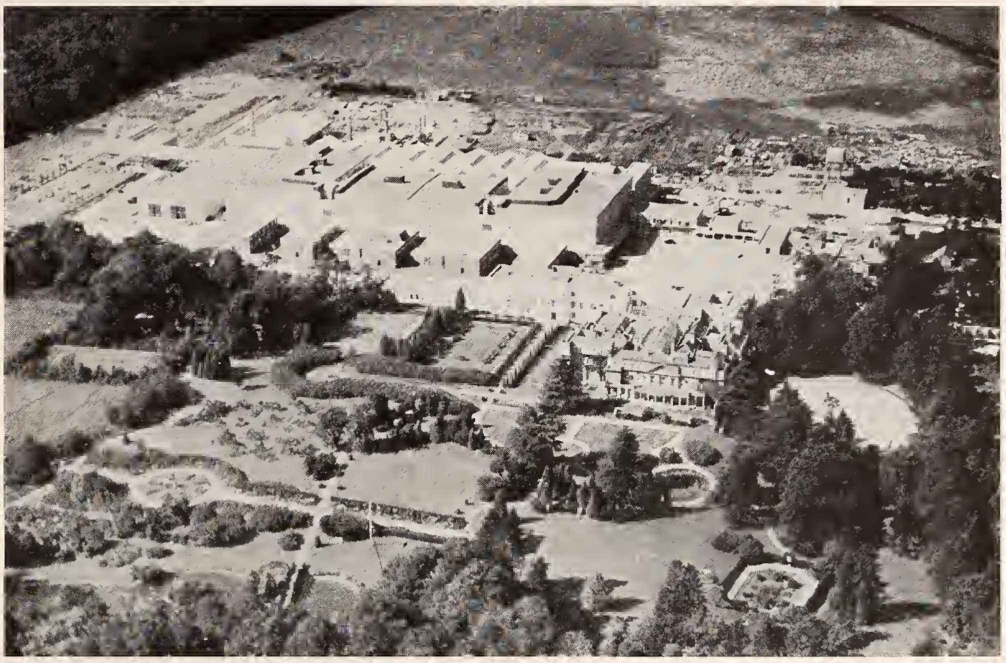
Herbert J. Ochs, Warner Brothers' branch manager in Atlanta, this week was promoted to the post of assistant to Gradwell L. Sears, general sales manager, and will take over his new duties immediately. His position corresponds to that of Robert Mochrie.

Joseph Vergesslich, who has been Warner's Florida representative, has been promoted to Mr. Ochs' former post as head of the Atlanta office. He was formerly branch manager for the company in New Jersey, New York and Chicago.

BRITISH SEE NEW PINEWOOD STUDIO A DIRECT CHALLENGE TO HOLLYWOOD

Americans in London Commend Compactness and Covered Area for Transporting Sets; Five Producers Using Space

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London



PINEWOOD STUDIOS. The large production plant at Iver, Buckinghamshire, is now in full operation for British film making, following the official opening. The old mansion is preserved, and beauty of surroundings is achieved with the carefully planned old English grounds. Ample space for expansion is available in the background.

That the Pinewood Studios, at Iver, Buckinghamshire, are "a definite challenge to Hollywood" in plan and equipment was declared by Charles Boot, builder of the plant, at the formal inauguration luncheon, to which close on 1,500 sat down, in one of the 165 x 110 stages.

Saying that he had been warmly welcomed in Hollywood during his visit there to investigate studio erection, Mr. Boot expressed his hearty thanks for the "ungrudging assistance and advice" he had received from executives of the large American companies.

Mr. Boot added that Louis B. Mayer had advised him to "stick to the steak and kidney pudding and leave the sweets alone" in production, but that it was not intended to follow that advice at Pinewood; they were going for the sweets as well, he declared.

Mr. Boot was supporting the toast to the health of Dr. E. L. Burgin, Parliamentary secretary to the Board of Trade, guest of honor present to open the studios, which had been proposed by Lord Portal. J. Arthur Rank, chairman of the luncheon and of Pinewood Studios, Ltd., previously had given a short account of the studio's origin. He said the project had its start when John Corfield, managing director of British National Films, introduced Lady Yule and himself to Mr. Boot, who is principal of the big building firm of Henry Boot & Sons. Mr. Rank also announced that five stages of the eight planned had been completed, that a fifth would be ready in December, and that the companies which immediately would use Pinewood space were:

Herbert Wilcox Productions
Capitol Film Productions
British National Films
British & Dominions and affiliates
Paramount-British

Dr. Burgin, presented with a gold key, said his dictionary told him that "compared to the majestic Pine, the Holly is a stunted bush," and said the cost of the studio seemed to be second only to Sir John Ellerman's estate (the Ellerman estate has just been declared at close on £40,000,000 ($200,000,000). He declared that the wish of Whitehall was that the Pinewood Big Five stages produce films of a quality which would "break down all the doors which at present bar the way to British films." A second gold key was presented by Dr. Burgin to Capt. the Hon. Richard Norton, managing director of the studios, who emphasized that the quality of Pinewood must be judged by the quality of the films made there.

There was an exceptional gathering of industry chiefs at the luncheon. In addition to the principals of practically every British company, Jack Cohn and John W. Hicks, Jr., represented America, and British executives of American companies included J. C. Graham of Paramount, Francis Harley and R. Sutton Dawes of Twentieth Century-Fox, Ralph Hanbury of Radio, J. Friedman of Columbia and Frank Ditcham of G. F. D.-Universal. C. M. Woolf, a director of Pinewood Studios, Ltd., was absent through illness.

Understood to be on the same general plan as the RKO Radio studios at Hollywood, Pinewood impressed trade visitors as a plant which continued the enormous progress registered by the recent erection of the London Films Studios a few miles away at Denham. Expert American comment was very complimentary to its compactness of layout, which centralizes wardrobe, property and other accessory departments within easy reach, and to the provision of a covered area in the very heart of the studio which enables the transport of sets without reference to weather conditions.

The general plan of Pinewood calls for four floors of 165 by 110 feet and four of 110 by 82 feet; as a rule, a unit will need one large floor and one small. The immediate plan of building will complete three of the large stages and two of the small. There is ample room for further stages in the hundred acres of the site, even allowing for a forty-eight-acre exterior lot and another sixteen acres occupied by the formal gardens attached to the old mansion of the Grant Morden estate. Now a Country Club, with suites and single bedrooms and handsome public rooms and amenities including one of the most luxurious private swimming baths in England, the house is likely to be used largely by stars and executives, but it is conducted as an enterprise independent of the studio. First of its famous guests is Marlene Dietrich, who occupies the number one suite while working on "Knight without Armor" at the adjacent London Films studio.

Joe Friedman of Columbia inaugurated a new form of trade hospitality by asking the press critics to lunch with him after the preview of "The King Steps Out" at the Regal, and announcing, with the coffee, that he had no announcement to make, but had just wanted, at the end of the run of "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town," to say thanks for the very warm welcome which all the papers gave to that picture.

Knowing that "Deeds" could have stayed six months instead of six weeks at the Regal and that it had come off only because it had second West End pre-releases to play, followed by a general release, the press critics weren't sure that they deserved Columbia's thanks.

Approve Dixey Plan

Four of the seven meetings in provincial key cities planned by Capt. A. C. Dixey for the exposition of his plan of exhibitor-distribution have been held and in each instance, at Manchester, Liverpool, Leeds and Newcastle, the idea has been approved in principle and Capt. Dixey has been given authority to proceed with the details of organization.

Inasmuch as it has been decided that the Independent Exhibitors' Distributing Company shall come into active operation if 300 exhibitor subscribers contribute between them the £25,000 asked as a fourth part of the total capital, it seems likely that, out of the thousand or so theatre men who have expressed general approval, Capt. Dixey should have no difficulty in finding enough shareholders to enable him to secure his further finance. This has been promised on the basis of £75,000 against the £25,000 of exhibitors, a further £100,000 of loan capital and, if the scheme grows, further advances up to £1,000,000.

Explaining his plans at Leeds, Capt. Dixey said IEDC aimed to supply exhibitors who became franchise holders with 75 per cent of their quota requirements in British films.

A second meeting in London was expected to produce from Capt. Dixey the number of pre-

"Redundancy"

A curious comment on the recent announcement that circuits, including the Odeon chain, were to cooperate in the plan of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association plan to combat overbuilding is to be found in the opposition to the license for a new Odeon at South Norwood, London, by the London and Home Counties Branch of the CEA. Dispassionate observers may be excused for taking a cynical view about the prospect of agreement on overbuilding after studying this typical case of a new "super" being opposed by the owners of two existing smaller halls—one a 480-seater built in 1910, and the other a 780 house erected in 1921. It was almost a perfect model of the dilemma presented by the overbuilding campaign—which is almost entirely a dilemma of definition. In this case, the new enterprise won, the Croydon Borough Council approving the license. If the decision had been left to a trade body, on what grounds would it have been possible to decide whether or not the old theatres "adequately" met district needs?

Quota Act's New Year

On October 1st the Films Act began its ninth year, with the British film quota remaining at 20 per cent both for distributors and exhibitors. It formally expires on Sept. 30, 1938, unless renewed or revised as a result of the recommendations of the Moyne Committee, which is now expected to report before Christmas.

Television Programs Patchy

Inaugurating its month of "trial" transmissions of television on a schedule of two one-hour sessions daily, the British Broadcasting Corporation made a rather inauspicious start on October 1st. The plan was that only film transmissions be used in the morning hour but that variety turns, directly transmitted, be used in the afternoon. On the opening day these items were received in a badly distorted form and were finally unrecognizable. When another studio was used, reception was excellent.

A "technical hitch" was admitted by the BBC in announcing that on October 2 and 3 the transmissions would be confined to films, both morning and afternoon. Newsreel (G-B) subjects used on October 1 showed the start of the air race to South Africa and the arrival of Mrs. Beryl Markham after her Atlantic flight.

An inefficient water cooling system, leading to a valve breakdown, is believed to have been the cause of the interruptions and defects in the first transmissions. EMI and Baird are alternating in weeks during the experimental month.

Ascap Closes Contract

The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers has closed a contract with Muzak which furnishes music by wire to restaurants, hotels, grills, taverns, etc., under which the music society will receive 10 per cent of Muzak's receipts, it was said this week by E. C. Mills, Ascap general manager. Muzak operates only in New York State at present.

Leans Heavily On the Herald

"It was just eleven months ago that the first write-up of ours appeared in 'What the Picture Did for Me.' Followed then a weekly review from us until our 1935-36 season ended.

"Now we are ready to open our '36-37 season, and I thought you might be interested in the lineup of features we have booked for our first twelve shows, especially since they were selected as usual with excerpts from 'What the Picture Did for Me' as our chief guide.

"After my experience last year, my first as local Director of Recreation, I lean heavily on your contributors for good advice. I have yet to pick a 'lemon' after reading a half-dozen or so reviews in the HERALD; and, Boy, oh Boy! have we got a 'choosy' audience to satisfy!

"So, thanks to generous price quotations from the respective distributors, we have this spread for the 'boys': 'King of Burlesque,' 'Follow the Fleet,' 'Magnificent Obsession,' 'Fighting Youth,' 'Anything Goes,' 'Mr. Deeds Goes to Town,' 'Captain Blood,' 'A Night at the Opera,' 'Hands Across the Table,' 'San Francisco,' 'Captain January,' 'Showboat,' 'In Old Kentucky' and 'A Tale of Two Cities'."

J. A. REYNOLDS, Director of Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J.

Police Censor Ban Curbed by Court

The police department of Detroit, under its motion picture censorship powers, has no right to bar communistic pictures on the ground that they are immoral or indecent, the Michigan supreme court ruled. The decision upholds the permit-right of Ida W. Schuman, under the name the Cinema Guild, to show the talking picture, "The Youth of Maxim," which deals with the 1917 revolution in Russia.

The plaintiff obtained a permit a year ago but it was revoked by Police Commissioner Heinrich A. Pickert, holding the picture immoral in that it dealt with communism and might be hostile to public interest. His contention was based on a city ordinance which gives him power to suppress immoral or indecent pictures. A circuit court refused a writ of mandamus for the plaintiff but its ruling was reversed by the higher court.

The supreme court decision read in part: "No feeling against foreign political policies on forms of government should be permitted to establish the principle that a police officer may be invested with discretion to determine his own powers of suppression."

A. W. Smith Joins United Artists As Manager of Sales

Andrew W. ("Andy") Smith, Jr., who recently resigned his positions as eastern and Canadian sales manager of Warner Brothers and vice-president of Vitagraph, Inc., this week was named general sales manager of United Artists by George Schaefer, vice-president in charge of distribution.

It was said that the appointment of Mr. Smith to the sales department of United Artists follows the decision on the part of the producers releasing through that company to expand their production plans. In the case of Samuel Goldwyn, one of the owner-producers, his schedule will be increased to 10 productions this season. Additions to the distributing force were therefore necessary, it was explained.

Harry Gold will continue as head of the eastern sales division of United Artists, and Jack Schlaifer will remain in his post in charge of the western states.

Mr. Smith first entered the industry with Pathe in 1914. From there he went to First National 10 years later and then became Warner sales manager in charge of the east and Canada as Gradwell L. Sears, now general sales manager for Warners, handled the western division. Later he was named vice-president of Vitagraph, Inc. Following his resignation from the Warner companies, it was reported that Mr. Smith would ally himself with Walter Reade in the latter's circuit operations and this report was still current when he joined United Artists this week.

Sees International Accord In 2 Years

Anglo-American cooperation will be complete within the next two years and the public of both countries will not be conscious of any difference in production technique, Paul Soskin said on his arrival in New York on the Normandie this week. He is head of the British producing company bearing his name and recently made an arrangement to make seven features for Columbia Pictures at the Amalgamated Studios near London.

"Cooperation between the countries is most essential," Mr. Soskin said. "My definite views are that the English public has been educated for American pictures and we shall give them this type of film. The American public also is getting conscious of British films. Several have been shown here.

"I am going to Hollywood in four or five days to sign up writers, technicians and directors. While on the coast I will talk with Harry Cohn on sending talent abroad."

At the official opening of the Pinewood Studios at Iver Heath, Dr. Leslie Burgin, Parliamentary secretary to the Board of Trade, is shown chatting with Sally Eilers and Ricardo Cortez, stars, Carol Reed, director, and Jack Raymond, producer, of "The Man with Your Voice," British & Dominions picture now being made at Pinewood.

Paderewski, Actor

Ignace Pederewski has finished his scenes for Lothar Mendes' "Moonlight Sonata" at Denham and has gone to his home at Morges, Switzerland.

For two months this world famous pianist and former premier of Poland has put in a daily session at the studio, showing, according to the director, the skill of a trained film star, the humility of an extra, real "photogenic" qualities, an excellent speaking voice and a perfect command of English. He was filmed without makeup.

Marie Tempest, veteran British stage star, also has finished her part in "Moonlight Sonata."

Horse Tails

Properties for the Gaumont-British "King Solomon's Mines" have presented something of a problem at Shepherd's Bush. The schedule called for shark's teeth, tiger claws, monkey paws and similar "charms" for the Zulu warriors, but the discovery of these items in the old curiosity shops of London was a simple matter compared to the demand for seventy-five horses' tails as war equipment for the black members of the cast.

At this moment G-B is still looking for horses' tails, while requisitions for emus' feathers and snow-leopard skins are filled without difficulty. Robeson, playing the Zulu king, will be given an equipment in which an emu feather cape will be one of the quieter items.

"Triangle" Retitled

"Triangle," with Walter Reisch directing Miriam Hopkins and Sebastian Shaw for London Films, has been retitled "Men Are Not Gods." Miss Hopkins is practically through with her role and will be back in Hollywood before this is in type. At this time she still has to do some big scenes, including a reproduction of a stage production of "Othello," with Shaw in the title role and Gertrude Lawrence playing Desdemona.

Another departure from this set to America is that of Gertrude Lawrence, to play in Noel Coward's stage production in New York.

For "Knight Without Armor" Marlene Dietrich has continued work in exteriors representing a Russian mansion and its gardens, reproduced on the banks of the river Colne in the London Films grounds.

"Fire Over England" is on the eve of its final important scenes of the coming of the Spanish Armada, with William K. Howard currently engaged on closeups for that sequence. The decks of a Spanish galleon, reconstructed from accurate period prints, absorb a lot of studio space and a great deal of energy from extras picturing English and Spanish in hand to hand clashes with cutlass and rapier.

Ending the story of Denham-London activities is Victor Saville's "Dark Journey," for which a surprise finish is planned of so original a type, said the studio, that the working script has no concluding sequence; they remain for the present the secret of the director and authors—who are Lajos Biros (scenario) and Arthur Wimperis dialogue.

Afloat at, or about, Scapa Flow the Herbert Wilcox unit on "The Navy Eternal" has placed cameras and sound units on H.M.S. Nelson, flagship of the Home Fleet, and on the Express and Orion, other units in the autumn maneuvers.

Added to the cast of "The Navy Eternal" this week, on top of the recent engagement of H. B. Warner, was Hazel Terry, nineteen-year-old granddaughter of Fred Terry and Julia Neilson, who has been given a long term contract by Herbert Wilcox. In "The Navy Eternal" she will play daughter to Warner.

Mr. Wilcox, with shooting still in progress on the Anna Neagle-Tullio Carminati "London Melody," started on the Sydney Howard "Splinters in the Air" at the new Pinewood studios this week. Alfred Goulding is directing, Eric Green is in charge of the camera and concert sequences are being directed by Ralph Reader, the dance specialist. H. W. Productions therefore absorbs two floors of the fine Pinewood plant the very first week of its official existence.

Ann Harding Starts

Another Hollywood star has played her first scene for a British film. Ann Harding, signed by Max Schach and fitted with a story after some difficulty, did the opening sequences of "Love from a Stranger," the adaptation of Frank Vosper's stage adaptation of Agatha Christie's short story thriller, in which Basil Rathbone, also an importation from Hollywood, is opposite her in the masculine lead.

BIP Signs Three

British International Pictures has signed John Lodge for "Sensation" and "The Dominant Sex" and will place opposite him in the first picture Whitney Bourne and in the second Gertrude Michael. Both of these Hollywood signings lend point to BIP's description of Lodge as a star neglected by Hollywood to England's advantage.

Being made at the Welwyn studios of BIP is the Argyle production "Kathleen Mavourneen," with Sally O'Neill. Norman Lee is directing it as a romantic comedy with plenty of song numbers.

SUPER X STARS

EASTMAN Super X helps the cameraman as no other film has ever helped before . . . to enhance his artistry . . . to solve difficult situations. It helps the exhibitor, too, by delivering photographic quality that undeniably heightens box-office appeal. In this dual role, Super X stars in the fullest sense of the word. The American Projection Society marks another milestone in its path of glorious achievements by honoring its foremost member

F. H. RICHARDSON

(Technical Editor of Motion Picture Herald)

with a

Testimonial Banquet

to be held at the

PENNSYLVANIA HOTEL

At 12 Midnight

Saturday, October 24th, 1936

F. H. RICHARDSON is to Projection what Thomas A. Edison was to Science; C. Francis Jenkins to Television, and S. L. Rothafel to Theatrical Genius, and is, as were these distinguished gentlemen, an Honorary Member of our Society.

He, through his indomitable will and his everlasting quest for "Perfection in Projection," is responsible, more than than any other single factor, for the vast improvement in projection today over what it was when he entered the field, more than three decades ago.

To most of us, the name "Richardson" is identified with our earliest memories of the technical aspects of projection. What can be more fitting and proper than a show of some degree of the esteem in which he is held, by, not only us of the projection fraternity, but by the entire industry, of which he is so important a part.

This, then, will be truly an occasion, so often commented upon, and so seldom brought to realization, when we shall be presenting the bouquets while the recipient is still capable of enjoying the fragrance.

That you will be assured of an utterly enjoyable evening can be attested by the spontaneous cooperation extended by personages from every walk of life in the Motion Picture Industry. . . . W. W. Byrne, President, American Projection Society

Columbia

AND SO THEY WERE MARRIED: Mary Astor, Melvyn Douglas—Good picture that will suit any place if you can get them in. Played September 30-October 1.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

KING STEPS OUT, THE: Grace Moore, Franchot Tone—Better than the previous Grace Moore production. Our audience reacted for the most part favorably. Franchot Tone helped lots. It would have helped the box office had they chosen a title minus the word "King." The mere suggestion of royalty keeps many of our folks at home. Played September 23-24.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

First National

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown, Ann Dvorak—Not a favorite in this locality. However, I played this picture late and the print was very poor, many remarked. One of Joe's best. Running time, nine reels.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

BULLETS OR BALLOTS: Edward G. Robinson, Joan Blondell—The best from this star in a long time. Some pronounced it better than "G Men." An excellent story. One of our 30 per cent pictures with a drizzling rain and almost freezing weather. The company helped me stand a part of the loss. With a guarantee and 35 per cent I wouldn't have had film rental. Patrons have requested me to return it at some later date as the rural customers were unable to get in. Played September 25-26.—John J. Metzger, Oriental Theatre, Beaver City, Neb. Small town patronage.

BULLETS OR BALLOTS: Edward G. Robinson, Joan Blondell—A very fine racketeer story almost ruined by a very bad ending. We all know that officers of the law have given their lives in pursuit of their duties but we also know that officers and G Men have succeeded in what they set out to accomplish and lived. In this particular picture the death of Robinson was not needed and to have him live would not weaken the dramatic value of the picture and to be killed by a rat such as the one who shot him only made it worse. It looked to me as if those who had the say said: "Let's kill Robinson in the picture and get away from the happy endings for a change." Here is one picture that did not need the tragic ending they gave it. The picture as a whole is so snappy that the ending could not entirely spoil it. Business on this was better than average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

CHINA CLIPPER: Pat O'Brien, Beverly Roberts—A very good show but very much patterned after the other air stories of this same producer. It didn't draw any too well but the patrons seemed pleased, so will give the picture credit.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

EARTHWORM TRACTORS: Joe E. Brown, June Travis—A dandy picture that sure made them howl throughout the whole show, and it drew better than average business for us.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SHIPMATES FOREVER: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler—Drew the crowd for 35 miles around. Wonderful entertainment for a small town and country audience. Played September 19.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

SNOWED UNDER: George Brent, Genevieve Tobin—Lively comedy drama; pleased the Saturday crowd.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

STAGE STRUCK: Joan Blondell, Dick Powell—Really a disappointment and very mediocre because anyone would expect this cast to produce something very entertaining. No catchy songs that you hear after the show is over, and while Dick does well enough, the rest of the cast is a complete washout. Running time, five big reels.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

Liberty

SWEEPSTAKE ANNIE: Marian Nixon, Tom Brown—An amateurish effort that belongs on double bills. Mild audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

PETTICOAT FEVER: Myrna Loy, Robert Montgomery—A high class comedy that pleased most of the patrons no end. Slightly disappointing from the box office standpoint. Story at fault here. Hardly the vehicle for Myrna Loy. Running time, 75 minutes. Played September 21-22-23.—Mrs. E. L. Tait, Lauder Theatre, Mount Forest, Ontario, Canada. Small town patronage.

ROBIN HOOD OF ELDORADO, THE: Warner Baxter, Ann Loring, Margo—Good picture that drew quite well at the box office. Running time, 85 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SAN FRANCISCO: Clark Gable, Jeanette MacDonald, Spencer Tracy, Jack Holt—A wonderful show that did business and it pleased some of our patrons so well that they were back to see it over. The earthquake scenes look plenty real and the cast sure carry the story. Run it and advertise it. You won't be sorry.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SMALL TOWN GIRL: Janet Gaynor, Robert Taylor—Very good. Running time, 106 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SPEED: James Stewart, Wendy Barrie—Good for Saturday or the other half of your double bill. A lot of everything that it takes to please action lovers.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SUZY: Jean Harlow, Franchot Tone, Cary Grant—Patrons liked it. Running time, 95 minutes. Played September 30-October 1.—Wilbur V. Cole, Park Theatre, Dexter, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

SUZY: Jean Harlow, Franchot Tone, Cary Grant—A good picture of the type our patrons like. Nothing big but will satisfy the averge fan, we believe. Played September 27-28.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SUZY: Jean Harlow, Franchot Tone, Cary Grant—A good picture that seemed to please. Metro mounts a picture better than most of the producers and they use a lot of names, but the new product looks like big-city stuff to me.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

TROUBLE FOR TWO: Robert Montgomery, Rosalind Russell—Robert Montgomery and Rosalind Russell try hard but the story must have been much better reading than is the picture good entertainment. Our folks just couldn't get much out of it and several told us so. And yet it's not as bad as we expected it to be, but cancellation would have saved us many dissatisfied patrons. Played September 25-26.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

UNGUARDED HOUR, THE: Loretta Young, Franchot Tone—Don't know exactly what to say on this one. Theatre staff liked it fine, as did many patrons, and yet we had perhaps more walkouts than on any picture we've played in a long while. Business was average for the weekend. Played October 2-3.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Paramount

AND SUDDEN DEATH: Randolph Scott, Frances Drake—A darn good lesson in accident prevention that is worthy of playing time if for no other reason than to at least show up a few traffic hazards to a careless public. The folks liked it, though, and were apparently satisfied as to its entertainment value. Played September 25-26.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

BIG BROWN EYES: Joan Bennett, Cary Grant—Pretty good but poor at the box office. Running time, 70 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

BIG BROWN EYES: Joan Bennett, Cary Grant—An entertaining program picture which the women complimented by calling "cute." Fair box office attraction.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

DESIRE: Gary Cooper, Marlene Dietrich—Good program picture. Running time, 92 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

EARLY TO BED: Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland—Everybody had a lot of fun laughing at this picture. It did average or better business and when you can make them laugh they are being satisfied. This picture will do that. Play it.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

EARLY TO BED: Mary Boland, Charlie Ruggles—Patron reaction to this comedy was divided. Some thought it screamingly funny while others considered it too silly to be humorous. Business could have been better.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

PALM SPRINGS: Frances Langford, Smith Ballew—Practically nothing except for Frances Langford and she is not liked in this town. Poorest Monday and Tuesday in years. Running time, 72 minutes. Played September 28-29.—Wilbur V. Cole, Park Theatre, Dexter, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

RHYTHM ON THE RANGE: Bing Crosby, Frances Farmer—All Bing Crosby. Not much good as a western, but patrons seemed to like it, part of them. Running time, 87 minutes. Played September 25-26.—Wilbur V. Cole, Park Theatre, Dexter, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

13 HOURS BY AIR: Fred MacMurray, Joan Bennett—No. 1 program picture. Interesting and entertaining all the way through. Running time, 72 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Republic

HARVESTER, THE: Alice Brady, Ann Rutherford, Russell Hardie—Not strong enough to bring them in or to stand alone. Good double feature picture. Played September 22-23.—Wilbur V. Cole, Park Theatre, Dexter, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

HARVESTER, THE: Alice Brady, Russell Hardie, Ann Rutherford—This picture offers homespun entertainment that should do particularly well in rural communities. Our patrons liked it.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

MELODY TRAIL: Gene Autry, Ann Rutherford—One of the poorest Autrys that I have played but plenty good for small town patronage. These westerns are altogether too short, as double billing is too expensive for a small town theatre. Running time, 56 minutes. Played September 5.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

OH, SUSANNAH: Gene Autry, Frances Grant, Smiley Burnette—Despite the fact that this western is below the high average established by Autry's previous films it did a very large business, part of which was due to the appearance of The Lightcrust Doughboys, as band entertainers, in the film. This musical aggregation of local origin is tremendously popular in the Southwest among radio fans, and many people who seldom come to the theatre were present during the picture's run. The film itself was disappointing to Autry's admirers, who found the story implausible and abounding in crudities. The strongest entertainment asset in the entire picture is Smiley Burnette, who has the best comedy material of his screen career. He is decidedly good.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

RKO Radio

BRIDE WALKS OUT, THE: Barbara Stanwyck, Gene Raymond, Robert Young, Ned Sparks, Helen Broderick—Good. Running time, 82 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

BRIDE WALKS OUT, THE: Gene Raymond, Barbara Stanwyck, Robert Young, Ned Sparks, Helen Broderick—Ned Sparks is about the whole show in this one. Helen Broderick also furnished her usual amount of wisecracks, and clever, too. We have had so many bride pictures that I sometimes think the public gets confused in their pictures. Anyway, it pleased a good sized Sunday crowd and it's entertainment they are looking for. Running time, 80 minutes. Played September 27-28.—John J. Metzger, Oriental Theatre, Beaver City, Neb. Small town patronage.

BUNKER BEAN: Owen Davis, Jr., Louise Latimer—Good little program picture suited for Saturday. Running time, 68 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SPECIAL INVESTIGATOR: Richard Dix, Margaret Callahan—Richard Dix is this picture's major asset. Average program story. Played September 29.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Twentieth Century - Fox

CAPTAIN JANUARY: Shirley Temple, Guy Kibbee, Slim Summerville—Some reported this not up to Shirley's other pictures but I do not agree. Many commented on this being one of her best if there is such a thing. She is a swell little star and both old and young love her. Guy Kibbee and Slim Summerville supply the comedy and there are many laughs and a few tears as the story is unfolded. Running time, 80 minutes. Played September 26.—John J. Metzger, Oriental Theatre, Beaver City, Neb. Small town patronage.

COUNTRY BEYOND, THE: Rochelle Hudson, Paul Kelly—After the gratifying business on "White Fang" we expected this companion picture to be equally successful but were disappointed. As program pictures go, it is average entertainment that satisfied our patrons.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

EVERY SATURDAY NIGHT: June Lang, Thomas Beck—O. K. for Friday and Saturday. Running time, 62 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

HERE COMES TROUBLE: Paul Kelly, Arline Judge—Good for Friday and Saturday. Running time, 63 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

HIGH TENSION: Brian Donlevy, Glenda Farrell—Another programmer up in the special class. Not much, and you are better off without it.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

LITTLE MISS NOBODY: Jane Withers, Ralph Morgan—A good picture. Draw doesn't justify rentals, but if you can buy it right I would say to play it.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

LITTLE MISS NOBODY: Jane Withers, Ralph Morgan—With each succeeding picture Jane Withers becomes a stronger box office attraction at our theatres and never fails to please.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas.

POOR LITTLE RICH GIRL, THE: Shirley Temple, Alice Faye—A good picture that drew plenty of business. Maybe not as much as some of her other pictures, but she still has a big following here. Hope she can hold up the rest of Darryl Zanuck's pictures, 'cause I think they'll need it.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

READ THEIR REPORTS IN THIS ISSUE

New contributors to "What the Picture Did for Me" in this issue include the following:

Wilbur V. Cole, Park Theatre, Dexter, Maine.

Donald Visger, Mercy's Liberty Theatre, Kennewick, Washington.

Donald Visger returns to the fold after a year's absence.

POOR LITTLE RICH GIRL, THE: Shirley Temple, Alice Faye, Jack Haley—We consider this Shirley's best since "Little Miss Marker." Lavish sets, unique musical numbers and a top notch supporting cast contribute in making this a highly satisfying screen play.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

SING, BABY, SING: Alice Faye, Adolphe Menjou—Nothing big. Just another musical that didn't cause the patrons to overenthuse. I think Fox is slipping fast.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SING, BABY, SING: Alice Faye, Adolphe Menjou, Patsy Kelly, Michael Whalen—If you can imagine a more hilarious situation than that in which Adolphe Menjou, obviously impersonating Barrymore, the lover, clad in invalid gown and sipping Bay Rum from a hot water bottle with a glass straw, finds himself confronted by his Juliet, Alice Faye, you can probably name a funnier picture. We can't. The scenarists have written a smoothly paced musical comedy that is brilliantly original and uproariously amusing and the tunesmiths have turned out some exhilarating numbers that the radio is playing to death. A hit if for no other reason than that it has three hysterics called the Ritz Brothers who deserve to have their names in lights THAT big.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

SINS OF MAN: Jean Hersholt, Don Ameche—Seventy-six minutes of beautifully produced misery that fortunately has a happy ending. The sparse audience which saw it wept copiously and applauded the story for its human (too human) qualities. Decidedly one of the better program pictures of the year.— J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

36 HOURS TO KILL: Gloria Stuart, Brian Donlevy—Good program entertainment that drew well because of its title. Pleased all the patrons.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

WHITE FANG: Michael Whalen, Jean Muir—If you can buy this picture right I would advise you to play it because Northern pictures are scarce and some people crave them.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

WHITE FANG: Michael Whalen, Jean Muir—Our patrons are very responsive to titles of this type, so business was large despite the absence of marquee names. This picture is substantial entertainment for the family trade.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

United Artists

ONE RAINY AFTERNOON: Francis Lederer, Ida Lupino—A light, airy tidbit which seemed to please most of our patrons very much. A pleasing picture to pass in idle hour. Business a fair average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

Universal

SHOW BOAT: Irene Dunne, Allan Jones—Perfect! Swell! Marvelous! The best we have seen in a long time! That is the way they commented when leaving the theatre. While we didn't break any house records we followed to a mighty good business considering Shirley Temple had stood them out a few nights before. Muddy roads cut in a little. The singing of "Old Man River" by Paul Robeson is worth the admission price alone. Universal did well on this production. Running time, 112 minutes. Played September 29.—John J. Metzger, Oriental Theatre, Beaver City, Neb. Small town patronage.

SHOW BOAT: Irene Dunne, Allan Jones—Take a perfect cast, give them glorious music, a romance to warm the cockles of your heart, a director who seems to take a special joy with the materials he had to work with. Loosen the purse strings and spend all the money needed for an adequate production. Give it the kind of an ending that sends an audience home happy, and the result is a picture like "Show Boat." Business on this was above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

SUTTER'S GOLD: Edward Arnold, Lee Tracy, Binnie Barnes—This did not please. Too long drawn out. Not enough action. Running time, 90 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Warner Brothers

BIG NOISE, THE: Guy Kibbee, Warren Hull—An agreeable bit of entertainment that had little or no drawing power for us, and after all we're not running shows for our amusement only. Those who came enjoyed it, but it's those who didn't come that mattered this time. Played September 22.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

GREEN PASTURES, THE: Rex Ingram—A picture that is decidedly different but it certainly flopped here. We have no Negroes so our people didn't care for it, with the exception of a few church people who seldom patronize us.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

MAN HUNT: Marguerite Churchill, William Gargan, Ricardo Cortez—Good picture with enough action to satisfy and especially suited for the other half of your double bill.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

DR. BLUEBIRD: Color Rhapsodies—An excellent color cartoon with a cheerful message. Would be ideal for showing to invalids or sick children in an institution.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

PEPPERY SALT, THE: Andy Clyde—A good comedy.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SCRAPPY'S CAMERA TROUBLES: Scrappy Cartoons—Good black and white cartoon. Would be fine for an occasion where house was helping put over the idea a camera is better for shooting animals than a gun.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SCREEN SNAPSHOTS, NO. 2: A very satisfactory short subject which we played to a weekend audience of western fans. This picture closed with the screen stars at a rodeo, which proved in keeping with the western feature.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

STARS OF TOMORROW, NO. 3: A very interesting amateur short subject costing one-third of what we paid for Major Bowes Amateurs.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

THREE LITTLE BEERS: Three Stooges—A comedy that is a comedy. We all laughed until we could hardly walk. They seem to be growing in popularity and have as big a draw as the feature.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Educational

FARMER AL FALFA IN THE HOT SPELL: Paul Terry-Toons—Fair cartoon.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

FAST FRIENDS: Treasure Chest—Good subject for all dog lovers.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

HOLD THAT LINE: Treasure Chest—Average football reel. This time it's the professional angle that is described and pictured.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

HURRAY FOR RHYTHM: Song and Comedy Hits—Very good band act. Running time, nine minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

EARLY BIRD AND THE WORM, THE: Harman-Ising—Good.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

LET'S DANCE: MGM Miniatures—Interesting subject. Dancing is good and Pete Smith's dialoguing okay. Slow motion shows how they do it.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

OLD HOUSE, THE: Harman-Ising—Dandy color cartoon full of fast action and several belly laffs.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

RKO Radio

HIGH BEER PRESSURE: Edgar Kennedy Comedies—A funny comedy from this well known comedian and his scrappy screen family.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

PATHE TOPIC: This subject, sent us as a substitution for one of the "Struggle to Live" subjects, wasn't anything to brag about. There is one good sequence in it, however, showing the sled dogs of the snow countries.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

RKO RADIO COMEDIES (1935-36): In summing up the past seasons' two-reel comedies from RKO we can say that our choice in a nice selective arrangement has given us a pretty good grade of shorts with honors going to the Edgar Kennedy series. —L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Twentieth Century - Fox

SHOOTING THE RECORD BREAKERS: Adventures with the Newsreel Cameraman—Thrilling. Running time, eight minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

United Artists

GOLDEN TOUCH, THE: Silly Symphonies—Another satisfactory Disney with a fine moral. Especially suited for our children program.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Universal

CLUBHOUSE PARTY: Mentone Musical Comedies —Acceptable entertainment. Several good acts.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Vitaphone

BY REQUEST: Claude Hopkins and his Orchestra, Tip, Tap and Toe—One of the best short subjects of this company. Good singing and dancing; first-class entertainment. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

FLOWERS FOR MADAME: Merrie Melodies—A beautiful reel worth playing at any time, only these reels are too short. Running time, seven minutes. Played September 5.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

MISS GLORY: Merrie Melodies—Delightful short subject enjoyed by both grownups and children. Running time, 7 minutes.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

Club To Aid Films

Members of the Southern California Motion Picture Council are planning a telephone campaign to support better films. Members will contact friends by telephone to urge attendance at theatres showing high quality pictures.

India Manager in New York

Simons Joins Universal

Sylvan Simons, formerly test director at Warners in Hollywood, has joined Universal to act as talent scout and direct tests. He will also serve as general assistant to Rufus LeMaire.

John A. May Nominee

John A. May of Gloversville, N. Y., an executive in the Schine enterprises, is the Republican nominee for New York state comptroller.

Metro Signs Bartholomew

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer announces the signing of a new contract with Freddie Bartholomew, starred in "The Devil Is a Sissy."

Management Changes Made In Famous Canadian

Changes in management in the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Ltd., as the result of recent divisional meetings, place Winnipeg, Saskatoon, Brandon, Shaunavon, Weyburn, North Battleford and the balance of the Manitoba FPCC houses under the supervision of John Hazza who also has charge of the Alberta division. Port Arthur and Fort William which have operated out of Winnipeg, will be operated from the Toronto office under the direction of Morris Stein. T. Ray Tubman, city manager at Winnipeg, will be transferred to Ottawa, Ontario.

Film Club Officers Named

Officers for the year, elected at a business session of the Northwest Film Club at its headquarters in Seattle, are: L. J. McGinley, Universal, president; Roy Cooper, Sterling Theatres, and Leroy V. Johnson, Jensen-VonHerberg, vice-presidents; Ed Lamb, RKO, secretary-treasurer, and Ben F. Shearer, Al Rosenberg, Al Bloom, Neal East, Fred Mercy, Jr., and Neal Walton, trustees.

Governors at Variety Banquet

The Variety Club banquet of the Pittsburgh tent will be honored by the presence of Albert B. Chandler, Governor of Kentucky; George H. Earle, Governor of Pennsylvania, and Martin L. Davey, Governor of Ohio, according to the latest announcement by the committee in charge of the affair, which is scheduled for October 25.

St. Louis Auction Set

Assets of Skouras Brothers Enterprises will be sold October 22 on the Civil Courthouse steps in St. Louis, and separate bids will be received on or over 52 per cent of the stock of the St. Louis Amusement Company by Nelson Cunliff, trustee in bankruptcy.

First Feld Assignment

Milton H. Feld, former operator of the Publix de luxe theatres throughout the country and for almost a year serving his production apprenticeship at Twentieth Century-Fox, has been given his first assignment as an associate producer on "Career Woman."

Harmon-Ising Signs Five

Merrill Gibson has been added to the Harmon-Ising staff as animator, and Howard Baldwin and Paul Murphy have been signed as assistant animators. Maurice Day and Charles McGirl have joined the company's writing staff.

Theatre Permits Denied

Applications for eight theatres on Park, Madison and Fifth Avenues, New York City, have been denied by Paul Moss, commissioner of licenses, in the last 18 months. The Fifth Avenue Association opposed the erection of the theatres.

Blackstone Signs Laemmle, Jr.

The Blackstone Agency has added Carl Laemmle, Jr., and George Hirliman to its accounts. Ruth Scherwin, who handles the film department of the company's business will contact the new interests.

Independent Films Gaining: Johnston

An increase in the number and the cost of motion pictures by independent producers utilizing current events as central themes for their stories is predicted for the near future by W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram Pictures.

"I am convinced," Mr. Johnston said, "that the independent has a certain advantage over the large producer in that he can utilize the flexibility and rapidity of his production methods to keep in step with world developments and offer to the public topics of interest such as the strife in Spain, the rise of Fascist groups or national elections while they are still of absorbing interest to everyone."

Mr. Johnston expressed the opinion that the market outlook today is favorable to independent production and feels that the increase in that direction will raise standards generally by "stimulating a wholesome rivalry."

Exhibitor Is Candidate

Jack Aemes, veteran exhibitor and theatre circuit head in New Hampshire, is a candidate for state senator from the north New Hampshire district.

Alperson, Rowland Deal

Edward Alperson, president of Grand National, and Richard A. Rowland are holding conferences in Hollywood this week on their proposed deal for production for Grand National by Mr. Rowland.

ANSWER TO QUESTION NO. 40

Question No. 40 was: (A) Explain how the cause of low volume may be traced. (B) How far or to what extent is the projectionist responsible for maintenance of good quality in sound?

The following acceptable answers have been received to date: S. Evans and C. Rau; D. H. Danielson, J. R. Prater; W. C. Brown; W. H. Edmonds; L. Cimikoski; A. L. Cooper; G. E. Doe; C. L. Loft; W. Limmroth; T. F. Bochert; C. Oldham; P. and L. Felt; W. Dinsmore; S. O. Sears; C. G. Jones; M. and J. Devoy; O. H. Schmidt; J. A. Zachritz; C. A. Ellison; D. E. Birdsong; R. R. Lee; H. B. Smith; H. Jones; H. P. Richardson; G. Lathrope and C. H. Lowrie; G. Thompson; W. S. Jones; C. L. Stanhope; B. R. Creed; F. Madden; D. L. Johnson; F. M. Brown; T. L. Barton, L. A. Beechwood and M. F. Robinson; W. S. Jones; P. F. Maxwell; T. L. Redhouse; C. L. Davis, H. T. Plum, B. L. Sanderson and R. V. Manning; T. L. Candale; W. B. Little; W. Porter; F. H. and L. Klar and T. H. Morton; W. Winkle and R. R. Robins; C. and S. E. Gay; T. C. Hood and B. Simms; M. Mitchell; B. Nally and S. L. Lynch; S. T. Lane and W. R. Cohn; W. N. Bolton and G. Lantry; H. A. Aims and F. E. Dorp; F. L. and L. Savlor; G. N. Guidotti; H. T. Appleton and M. F. Singleton; R. K. Holt and D. L. Maxwell; E. and G. E. Lomax; U. S. Logan; D. Pollock; J. R. Davidson; G. T. Jones and A. L. Leonard; D. H. Purcell; P. N. Davis, H. J. Abernathy, R. Tomkins and W. R. Baxter; B. Caldwell; S. Neilson; B. B. Hornstein and R. R. Jacobs; T. L. Dennis; T. Turk; D. D. Lilly; R. W. Nickles and S. Samuels; C. W. Baxter; O. Hunt; L. A. Dodson and H. T. Todd; J. Wentworth; F. H. S. and P. Dlabey; N. Prane and B. R. Mills; L. M. and C. B. Traxler; T. T. Golley; S. T. Snow; T. R. Tomlinson and W. G. Matthews; T. R. Fanning and W. Burns; S. Carberry.

Out of many excellent answers to section (A) I have selected ten about equally good, closed my eyes and picked that of J. R. Prater. He says: "The best asset in locating the cause of low volume is a written record of all possible tests and meter readings, including the entire sound system, from exciter lamp to loud speakers, the same taken when the system is operating satisfactorily, this being determined by the use of a standard test film.

"An output meter is perhaps the most valuable instrument for use in tracing low volume trouble location. A good voltmeter is also very useful, as are high impedance head phones, though unless one knows just what the results should be normally, these instruments at best provide only a good guess, even in the hands of an expert.

"When no test equipment is available the projectionist must do the best he can by searching for visible faults, such as may be found in the exciter lamp and its optical system, loose or otherwise poor connections, dirty switches, fader, tube sockets, and by substitution of spares known to be in proper condition. In fact, save for the conductors themselves, almost anything anywhere in the sound system may cause a condition tending to lower volume. Even a dirty sound gate may do it.

"If the volume loss pertains to only one projector it is evident the trouble lies within those various things having to do with it and its component parts, up to the main amplifier. In such case one of the first things is to switch the P. E. cells from one projector to the other, which same may also be done with some other interchangeable parts. If both projectors have equal volume, but both low, that is conclusive evidence that the trouble lies beyond the point where both join the main amplifier. Tests on both sides of each connection beyond that point should reveal where the high resistance point lies, or in what equipment the trouble is. By comparison with previous tests, these should locate the trouble pretty definitely."

D. Pollock says: "First, is one projector low and the other normal? If so I would first of all very carefully examine everything on the low one up to the point where the two join the main amplifier, starting at the exciter lamp. Is its meter reading correctly? Is its contact perfect? Is its filament O.K. and in proper position? Is its optical system clean and the beam properly centered at the slit? Is the film gate aperture unobstructed by lint or other deposit? Is the fader functioning properly, all contacts clean and in good order? Are all electrical connections throughout clean and tight? I would change its amplifier to the other projector and vice versa, which would provide positive proof that the trouble was or was not in it.

"If the trouble be present with both projectors, then it would certainly lie beyond the point of their connection with the main amplifier circuit. I then would clean all tube contacts thoroughly, and thereafter, if that did not work, substitute spares one after the other until all showed up clear, or one or the other mopped up the fault. Next I would examine the fader and all possible electrical connections up to the speaker and, finally, the speaker itself.

"Of course, if one is fortunate and has suitable testing meters, et cetera, on hand, and thoroughly understands their use, that should simplify matters, but I have none. They are too costly to buy with my wages and the manager—well, he just won't, and that's that. So I must just do the best I can and if I can't get by, call in a sound engineer."

(B) C. and S. E. Gay say: "The projectionist is responsible for excellence in sound quality only insofar as what he is provided with by the management will enable him to produce it. If he is willing to keep the equipments in repair, but is unable to do so because the management will not permit the required expenditure, then resultant sound fault cannot justly be blamed to him. If he is supplied with film having dirty, scratched sound track, then the fault is not his. If the auditorium be itself acoustically faulty, then the fault is not his.

"The projectionist is responsible for (a) knowing his business and applying his knowledge 100 per cent; (b) For being "on the job" while he is on duty; (c) Doing all he can do during working hours to maintain projection equipment in as nearly perfect condition as is possible, and handling it in the best possible manner. For things beyond his control (and they are many) that compel less than perfect results, he is not in any degree responsible."

Oscar H. Schmidt replies: "I believe the projectionist should go as far as is possible in maintaining good sound quality. However, it is impossible for him to judge of quality of sound that is not audible to him from the loud speaker of the auditorium, hence he must rely upon cooperation by the manager or his assistants, whose duty to check auditorium sound it should be, and must be if perfection is to be attained. If the sound checker and he talk the same language with regard to sound faults, such as wows, flutter, loss of high or low frequencies, one or more loud speaker units 'out' or off—where two or more units are employed—then sound quality can and should be maintained." (Provided equipments be themselves maintained. —F. H. R.).

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 45

(A) Describe the difference between choke coils and transformers and the action of a transformer; also, what is "magnetic kick"?

(B) From what is secondary wattage derived and in what manner?

(C) What controls proportions of primary to secondary voltages?

(D) Suppose primary and secondary transformer coils to have an equal number of turns. What would be the result?

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

ENTHUSIASM OFTEN DOES IT

At the head of the list of virtues and qualifications that go into the makeup of your top-line showman, this pen writes down a solid vote for enthusiasm—unconscious, uncontrolled, ever-bubbling and on tap 24 hours a day. Which statement is made regardless of the men who will on reading these lines immediately start shooting from both hips as follows:

> "How are you going to be enthusiastic 24 hours a day when you have to work most of that time seven days a week?"
> "How can a man be enthusiastic when he has to wonder how long the job will last?"
> "Why expect a manager to be ever-bubbling when he has to play the sluff-offs; when he is turned down for a few extra dollars to put over a big campaign?"

In spite of which, we still hold our ground and still vote the same way.

Your enthusiast, fortunately for himself and his box-office, is so busily engaged in getting a wallop out of his work, in digging up selling angles, that it never occurs to him to wonder how he can retain the hot pepperino and go-and-grab-it. Like Old Man River, he just keeps rolling along and it's surprising how often he rolls a natural.

No, we're not kidding ourselves or the members that the old sockeroo can be exchanged for the rent money, and neither is it maintained that a continuous grind of cheerio will make a diet of peanuts taste much like anything else. Only the lucky laddie who can only see the silver lining on the cloudiest days is that much ahead of the man whose eyesight merely takes in the gloomy weather.

Of course, it's no sin not to be born an enthusiast and there's many a fellow who does a pretty good job of work without frothing at the mouth in eagerness. But with everything else equal or even not so equal, the smart executive will place his bets on the bird who sees the doughnut rather than the hole.

And more times than not, the man who can whistle "Happy days are here again" without flatting, slides into the better job a durn sight sooner than the lad whose repertoire is limited to a monotone of dawg-gone blues.

WHY ADVERTISE THE UNDERTAKER?

Some of the more imaginative theatremen in the field are inclined from time to time to wax realistic in putting over their exploitations, and the point is emphasized by a newspaper yarn recently received which spoke of a "lifelike grave" in a theatre lobby to plug a date.

Well, no one ever wrote the complete book of show-business, and it's going to be a task, if at all possible, to compress between the covers the million and one things a man must know and do before he can take bows for being a showman.

In fact, it's much easier to tell offhand what not to do, and a good "don't" to start with is not to use the lobby to advertise your undertaker.

ON GOOD MANNERS

Embodying the service policy of the company and its attitude toward patrons as expressed by Joseph Bernhard, General Manager, Warner Bros. Theatres, is a message distributed to all managers and offices of the circuit. It reads in part:

"The patron is the judge. To thousands of patrons you are the company. If they like you they praise the company. If they dislike you they blame Warner Bros. Your actions determine the public reaction to this company. If you are courteous in every personal contact . . . self-controlled even when angry or resentful . . . if you remember at all times in hearing every complaint . . . in dealing with every type of patron that the slogan of Warner Bros. is: 'The Public Be Pleased,' then you are in step with our ideals and policies. . . ."

The more ambitious manager regards himself as a host, his patrons as guests gathered to enjoy pleasant entertainment in comfort and courtesy.

Good manners in the conduct of the theatre may be counted as not the least part of successful showmanship.

And then there's the theatreman who in answer to our query "Are You Ready For Football?" wrote in to say that he was and would the Round Table notify him what to do now.

Mayor Proclaims Texas Day For Dallas on "Rangers"

With Oklahoma but a stone's throw (if you can throw far enough) from Texas, David Dallas, Grand Theatre, Holdenville, succeeded in having Mayor Frank Crane day ahead of opening of "Texas Rangers" proclaim premiere as Texas Day to honor all native born Texans, staging a parade headed by band and followed by ox team and covered wagon.

Business men paraded in true Texan garb with ten-gallon hats, loud neckerchiefs, boots and even heavy beards to make the day more realistic of the old West. Indians on cow ponies brandishing guns, whooped it up in line of march and cowgirls appeared as pretty Indian maids. Others were adorned in pioneer dresses and prizes were given to the owner of the oldest automobiles driven in the parade.

Opening night a pioneer dress pageant was held, girl contestants appearing in three modes of dress, Indian, cowgirl and pioneer, with a free trip to Ft. Worth given the winner, where she was the guest of Billy Rose. In honor of native-born Texans, those presenting proper identification were admitted as guests of the theatre and leading stores cooperated by offering gifts to former Texans registering at their stores.

Leading baker donated cakes to former Texas couples who had celebrated their golden anniversaries and haberdasher selected off-size hat and to each man entering shop who could wear it guest tickets were awarded.

"Have You Contributed Lately?"

FOUR WINDOWS. Above is one of the four displays in prominent windows of Bonwit-Teller, leading Fifth Avenue store, tying in with "March of Fashion" reel shown at the new Criterion Theatre.

"Have You Contributed Lately?"

Limelight Dance Staged By Murray on "Limelight"

Harry Murray, general manager, Paramount Theatre aided by Robert Graham, representing Herbert Wilcox, producer, for the "Limelight" engagement in Manchester, England secured the cooperation of the local gas company in tying in their entire showroom windows for two weeks on displays featuring limelight and their latest gas cooker.

Musical instrument dealer devoted window to cards and "street singer" records, in addition a lifesize cutout of Tracy standing next to a lamppost was placed at entrance to the store. A "limelight" dance was arranged in local ballroom, special dances were run and limes played on the couples, as music stopped so did most of the limes and to each couple standing in the lime tickets were awarded.

Arizona Governor Tucson Guest At 'Ramona' Opening

As much of "The Gay Desperado" was shot in and around Tucson, Ariz., United Artists consented to the world premiere in that spot and it was put on at the Fox Theatre with a really bang-up campaign by Manager Roy P. Drachman, who was able to have the Governor and other important officials take an official part in the opening.

Publicity of course was more than generous along the lines that Tucson could at last see the picture that was made in that sector. Stories started 10 days ahead with lists of official guests, photos of telegrams from Mary Pickford and Jesse Lasky, shots of the stars at the famed San Xavier Mission and announcement that the Governor would be at the premiere. Co-op pages and location shots of the company were also featured.

Unusual Photo Contest Draws

Interesting was the newspaper photo contest planted by Drachman and local photographer to find the best shots taken by readers of the 20th Century-Fox company while in Tucson. Over 500 entries were received with 10 prizes of term passes and enlargements of winning shots. Paper also ran the photos and contest was plugged daily with inclusion of entry blanks. Photographer also got behind it with ads and windows.

Lobby announcements and congratulatory wires were decorated with velour background, Mexican shawls, Indian rugs, cactus plants, etc. Entire lobby carried the Spanish-Mexican-Indian motif and after the opening much of the display was taken out front.

Governor Starts Picture

As many of the stills had local backgrounds, Roy was able to plant these in windows not usually accessible for picture tieups. Displays were also placed in the four best hotels. Streets were decorated well in advance, announcements made at college and high school football games, wrestling matches. Wires were sent to all lunch clubs and one of the hotels advertised a "Gay Desperado Ball" immediately after the opening. The hit numbers of the picture were also plugged in night clubs and by leading orchestras.

At the opening, Governor Moeur was the guest of honor, accompanied by many state and city officials, Mexican consul, heads of civic clubs. Governor introduced by member of the City Council, who acted as M. C., praised the occasion and then pressed a button supposed to start the projection machines.

The proceedings of course were broadcast and the opening attended with all the Hollywood fixings, carpets, kleig lights, etc. Mexican band played in front of the house, ushers garbed in costumes and another feature of the stage ceremonies was the introduction of all locals who took part in the picture. House was reserved for the premiere and Drachman reports complete sellout two days ahead.

THE POLITICAL TRAILER COPY

In connection with his Election Forecast angle as carried out in the folder reproduced and explained in another column, Joe Kinsky sends along the trailer copy in which both Democrats and Republicans are ribbed amusingly to build up the coming attractions at the Capitol Theatre, Davenport. Here 'tis:

FLASH! ELECTION FORECAST: DEMOCRATS ADMIT DEFEAT!

(Cartoon of donkey saying: "I Can't Compete with the Happiness Party".)

REPUBLICANS CONFESS THEY CAN'T WIN!

(Cartoon of elephant saying: "What's the Use of Trying to Lick the Happiness Party".)

EXTRA! EXTRA! OLD MAN SUNSHINE'S HAPPINESS PARTY TAKES OVER THE CAPITOL IN OCTOBER! OUR PLATFORM:

The Greatest Lineup of World Famous Pictures Ever to Play Any Theatre in Any City.

Then follow six frames with the coming attractions, the final frame reading: "Vote for the Happiness Party Every Week—At the Capitol!"

Judge and Probationers See "Devil Is A Sissy"

For sizable newspaper breaks, judge of local Domestic Relations Court and 200 probationed boys were guests of Manager Russ Bovim, Loew's Ohio, Columbus, at the world premiere of "Devil is a Sissy." Governor Davey, Mayor Gessaman, ministers and heads of groups attended preview the day before. Leading clergymen took the title for topic of Sunday sermon.

Stilt-walker made the schools, unique bookmarks distributed and downtown newsboys given imprinted aprons. Classified contest with readers asked to match characters the stars played with pictures in which they appeared, helped as did girl ad solicitors who mentioned picture at each call. Radio station put on "knock, knock" contest with prizes for best using title and names of stars.

October Deadline: October Judges

Midnight of Saturday, November 7, is the deadline date for entries in the Quigley October Awards. So please have those campaigns at headquarters by that time.

The October judges are as follows: Neil F. Agnew, Paramount Distributing Corp.; S. Charles Einfeld, Warner Bros. Pictures, and Arthur Mayer, Rialto Theatre.

How Politics Are Handled In Tri-State Theatres

Zone Executive Favors "Middle-of-the-Road" Policy

by JOSEPH KINSKY

District Manager, Tri-States Theatres

By virtue of the fact that we deal with the masses in the theatres in my district, which includes the cities of Davenport, Cedar Rapids, and Waterloo in Iowa, Rock Island and Moline in Illinois, we must necessarily take the "middle-of-the-road" attitude toward the national political situation. We imagine this same thing applies to almost any theatre anywhere, with the possible exception of such theatres operated by independent exhibitors who care to risk their business future by publicly declaring their theatre as being for one party or the other.

However, this does not mean that we neglect Politics in any manner whatsoever. We realize Politics is a topic in which the public is intensely interested at the present time, and we try to cash in on it from a standpoint of timeliness. We do not, however, express an opinion unless it is a sort of burlesque of some political issue which we can cleverly tie into the advertising of one or more of our pictures.

As an example of what we do along this line is a folder which the Capitol Theatre, Davenport, distributed during the visits of Governor Landon and Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace to Davenport. This folder is nothing more nor less than a comic "ribbing" of both major parties with the "Happiness Party" worked in as a third party angle; the "Happiness Party," of course, being the audiences of the Capitol Theatre, whose platform is the pictures to play the theatre in October.

The Capitol also got out a trailer made up from the same type of copy. From time to time during the campaign we plan to do things of this nature to exploit many of our attractions.

Plans Election Tieup Stunts

One of the things which we have discussed at our managers' meetings has been whether or not we should eliminate political shots from our newsreels. In the opinion of the managers in this district, we should by no means eliminate such scenes from our newsreels. All of the managers say that their audiences seem to enjoy to the utmost these political scenes regardless of party, not so much because they are entertaining, but because through the applause of the audiences, people in the theatre can ascertain for themselves the feeling of the town. Our patronage does seem to get a "kick" out of these scenes, and for that reason we plan to leave them all in our newsreels. However, we do occasionally eliminate shots of exponents of radicalism, also strike scenes and pictures of human misery. In other words, we do not want to encourage our audiences to know of anything but good times. In none of our theatres do we accept political advertising of any sort, although I do know that a few independent theatres in this territory accept such advertising.

During the coming weeks of the campaign we have several stunts which we intend to work. One possibly will be the old torchlight parade with big, box-shaped banners, but instead of carrying ads for political candidates they will carry titles of pictures and "Vote for So-and-So Stars."

During the week immediately preceding the election we plan to carry special ads to contain large heads of both Roosevelt and Landon, with the heading, "Good Luck to You Both, But Only the Capitol Theatre Can Win All the Time!" This would be followed by a list of some of the coming attractions, which would be given as a reason why the "Capitol" is a winner all of the time.

Below is illustrated the cover of the two-fold "Election Forecast" folder, size four and a half by five and a half, of which Kinsky speaks. On being opened, folder shows the donkey and elephant cartoons with copy similar to that in the trailer. At the bottom copy reads: "Open Up This Flap. Good Times Are Here Again."

Inside full spread is headed: "Here's the Platform of the Happiness Party. We Promise Relief From Gloom." Then follows picture copy with box below reading: "Campaign Headquarters, Capitol Theatre, Davenport," with box across: "Our Motto: You Can't Beat Fun." Back page of the folder is cartoon of the donkey and elephant in ring costume and boxing.

The importance that Kinsky attaches to this year's presidential election is also recognized by other theatremen who are arranging in various ways to announce the returns to their audiences on Election Night. Slides, p.a. system, lobby posters, etc., are among the slants set for use.

HISTORIC DISPLAYS TOP "RANGERS" DRIVE

August Bronze Winner Exhibits Relics and Flags of State; "Rangers Day" Is Proclaimed

In celebration locally of the Lone Star State 100th anniversary, Manager George Limerick of the Yale Theatre, Cleburne, Texas, took the opportunity to tie up the occasion in various ways to his date on "Texas Rangers," outstander being a "Texas Rangers Day" proclaimed by the Mayor. With this, Limerick promoted a co-op page and planted other publicity hooking in the statewide celebration to the picture. Featured in the newspapers was a three-day coloring contest for children from six to 12 who were invited to color pictures of Texas under six flags, two flags run each day. Over 300 entries were reported for the first-prize of a 30-day term pass and single tickets.

Advance plugging was stressed in foyer display of telegrams from star of the picture congratulating Limerick on being the first to play "Rangers" after the Dallas world premiere. Other foyer decoration included Ranger's saddle, rope, gunrack, etc., backed by Lone Star state flag.

Exhibits Early Texas Relics

Displays in prominent windows showing state relics, flags, native animals, etc., were interesting and highly effective. Below left is reproduced photo of animal exhibit showing bobcat, badger, skunk, coon, deer, armadilla, pelican, prairie chicken, etc. To right is a showing of early Texas relics backed with the six Texas flags. Other windows carried old-time guns, spinning wheels, etc.

Outside advertising was augmented by unusual posting such as cards cut in shape of the map of the state. These were planted around the public square and tacked to telephone poles at street intersections. Road signs were posted consecutively, each carrying name of one star, and others with theatre and title, so that advancing motorists could read the ad as they drove. Special kid show was put on with the Kellogg Company, which sponsors the "Ranger" program on the air, the cereal manufacturers planting sizable ads as a further buildup. Window cards were placed in local grocery stores by the company salesmen.

Stenciled "good-morning" cards were hung on store doors and at homes the night before opening and other stenciled window cards placed in downtown spots. Tiein was also made with a Ranger fiction magazine whereby cash prizes were offered for best ending to the story that was different from the one in the picture, the publishers furnishing copies for free distribution.

Street parade was staged with high school band, junior Rangers, bicycle-riders, police escort and just before the first showing at night fireworks and aerial bombs were set off from the theatre roof as high school band gave special concert. To all inquiries about the fireworks, the folks were told that the "Rangers" had come to town. The junior Rangers were organized by head usher Raymond Wood, some 50 members reporting at the theatre for five mornings ahead to distribute advertising and generally plug the picture. House personnel was clad in Ranger outfits week ahead and during date.

For his front, Limerick made up a log cabin effect with animal hides tacked on outside. Porch from box-office to street was covered with trees and shrubs with title placed on stars on marquee, made up of box board in silver and black. Hitching rack, saddles, guns, etc., were also used.

This campaign on "Texas Rangers" was awarded the Quigley September Bronze Plaque. The Yale Theatre is a Griffith circuit house and Cleburne a town of about 10,000.

GEORGE LIMERICK

Crosby Impersonator Ballys "Rhythm"

Scouting around for a lad that resembled Bing Crosby, Arnold Gates, Loew's Park, Cleveland, Ohio, finally located one, dressed him as a cowboy and had him ride about town on bannered horse singing tune hits from "Rhythm on the Range." In addition to the boy's singing as a bally, the pony was capable of many tricks, which were used to advantage to attract crowds.

Pollock Celebrates Mickey's Birthday

Les Pollock, Loew's Rochester, Rochester, N. Y., made an effective tieup with the Rochester Journal on Mickey Mouse's birthday party, distributing twelve Donald Duck dolls autographed by Walt Disney to the winners of a coloring contest. Each youngster attending received a special balloon and it is reported that more than 5,000 kids stormed the boxoffice early in the morning.

LOUIS CHARNINSKY

Charninsky Reports Posing With Wild Animal in Exchange for Plugs on "Bengal Tiger" Date

Well, Daniel went into the lion's den but it seemed that he had nothing on Louie Charninsky, who, to build up his date on "Bengal Tiger" at the Capitol, Dallas, went into the tiger's cage at the Hollywood Animal Show at the Texas Centennial and posed with the beast, said to have been the original "Satan" in the picture. The gag came about as the result of a dare, with the manager of the animal show agreeing to make announcements of the picture date and to post window cards around the lot if Louie would do a Clyde Beatty. And Charninsky did. Photo of man and beast hit the local papers of course and in last week's issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, Jim Cunningham reproduced the shot in his "Asides and Interludes" department.

Circus Sawdust on Floor

Display was in keeping with the circus atmosphere, the two photos below showing the front and tent covering above and front of lobby. Special marquee lettered "Main entrance" was extended from box-office to curb. Floor was heaped with sawdust and to add to the excitement, Louie had caged bears and monkeys, clown, ringmaster, barker to build-up the bally. Box-office was covered so as to resemble a circus ticket wagon with all other decorations circused. Pet show and street parade were similar slants.

Further newspaper assistance was obtained from a classified tiein and week ahead special operator was employed to phone names from the directory on the date. Radio was also utilized. Through tieup with largest parking station special setpieces were planted in waiting room and with all parking tickets cashier also distributed small teaser "Beware" cards with title and cut of tiger.

Windows were quite plentiful, barbershops carrying cards urging baldheaded men to see the picture to "raise" their hair, gun-shops calling attention of local sportsmen with action shots, pet stores plugging the pet contests, etc. Imprinted bottle-holders and soft drink stands and imprinted pay-envelopes were widely distributed. In the latter a number of passes were placed at random to build up interest among employees of the various companies contacted.

Street stunts were numerous, including tiger-claw stencil, bannered trained dog, baby buggy wheeled by girl and carrying sign reading: "I'm taking my baby to see," etc. Others were the man carrying large umbrella lettered: "Rain or Shine, I'm going to see," etc., and the baldheaded man gag. Permission was also received from the city to place window cards on lampposts.

All in all, some 64 ideas were lined up and as extra stimulus to the house staff Charninsky held a contest for suggestions on the date offering three cash prizes with many interesting slants forthcoming.

The campaign submitted by this member in the Quigley September Awards was voted the Silver Plaque, the first to be won by Interstate Theatres, of which the Capitol is a unit, and also the first to be won in Texas.

Seattle Fifth Avenue Sells "Adverse" with Big Campaign

Vic Gauntlett and Edwin B. Rivers, used effective stunts and displays for "Anthony Adverse," when the picture played the Fifth Avenue Theatre, Seattle, Wash. One of the highlights of their campaign was the securing of window display spaces at the Bon Marche, with the store devoting its most important window to a display of two of the actual costumes used by Olivia de Havilland and Anita Louise in the picture, tying in with current fashions based on designs for the "Adverse" gowns. One of the most important local book stores devoted an entire window to displays of the book, with a large photo enlargement of the novel, carrying appropriate copy.

In addition to these displays, an easel was placed in the window of the Hudson Bay Company showing "Adverse" stars wearing late model furs, and for the first week leading taxis in town carried copy plugging the picture on their tire covers.

Unusual Twist Used By Kane in Co-op Ad

A little different twist was given to the usual full page co-op ad by Tommy Kane, Sequoia Theatre, Redwood City, Cal., on "Girl's Dormitory" by offering guest tickets to the first fifty persons naming the correct number of times that Simone Simon's name appeared in each merchant's ad. For instance in dairy ad copy read "Simone Simon drinks three glasses of milk a day," "Simone Simon says milk gives you energy and pep," etc., etc.

Doughboy Usher Plugs "Road to Glory"

An effective street stunt for "Road to Glory" was used by Ted De Grazia, Lyric Theatre, Bisbee, Arizona, by dressing usher as doughboy and planting him in streets with sign (see photo) thumbing rides. Stunt broke papers with gag stories.

To plug the recent fight pictures, Ted had a truck touring streets on which was replica of ring with white and colored boy in shorts and boxing gloves "fighting it out." Truck was properly bannered and created much excitement.

Roger Uses Novel Stunt For "The Song of a Nation"

On the Warner two-reeler "The Song of a Nation," Roger Ludy, Hines Theatre, Portland, Ind., suggests promoting a large American flag, planting it on the right hand side of the stage and just as Donald Wood, who plays Francis Scott Key, in the picture raises his right hand and points to the flag on Ft. Henry, have operator light the flag with a white spot and keep it there until the final fadeout. Roger reports the stunt as getting a terrific hand and recommends it to his brother showmen.

"Have You Contributed Lately?"

Slavik's Gift Box

Two weeks ahead of opening, Al Slavik, Granada Theatre, New Prague, Minn., as part of his teaser campaign took a box four feet high by two and a half wide, wrapped it to represent a gift, with all the ribbons, etc., and simply put a card on it reading "To Mary, With Love." Following week Al came out with a personal endorsement and picture copy.

Works "Godfrey" Stills Into Merchandise Ads

William N. Wolfson for his "My Man Godfrey" campaign at the Paramount, Montgomery, Ala. not only made excellent use of the accessory tieup stills in landing numerous window displays, but induced many of the better stores to use them in their newspaper ads. The stills worked nicely into ads for tables, kitchen utensils, etc. in each case ads including sizeable breaks for the picture.

"Follow the Fleet" Dance Held At Leading Calcutta Hotel

Remi Crasto of the RKO Radio Pictures, Calcutta, India arranged a ball at one of the leading hotels to usher in the premiere of "Follow the Fleet," hotel band was dressed as sailors and band rostrum made to look like the deck of a battleship. Ballroom was decorated with flags and dance was preceded by gala dinner, courses on the menu named after leads in the picture.

A reported first time for Calcutta was the use of a bannered battleship float on which cutouts of Rogers, Astaire and sailors were seen walking on the deck. Float covered main streets week ahead of opening. Girl made up like Ginger Rogers in conjunction with her partner enacted numbers from the picture at local cabaret. Picture opening coincided with biggest sporting event Calcutta ever witnessed, a football match between All-India and the Chinese Olympic Team who were proceeding to Berlin for the games. Arrangements were made to book advertising space on official program card and below the words India vs. China, a line was added "but there is no doubt that Follow The Fleet is the winner."

Ark Lobby Display Used For "Green Pastures"

Louie Fishkin, Commodore, Brooklyn, N. Y., for "Green Pastures" constructed an ark for his lobby display (see photo) measuring ten feet long by five high. For background Louie utilized an old hand-painted sky effect with cutout waves set around the ark. Tieup was effected with local furrier for stuffed eagle, fox, peasant, raccoon and an odd assortment of toy animals was promoted from local toy shop. Entire display was lighted, as was the boat from the inside.

For "Fury" a ten-foot jail was built and Louie utilized a six-sheet poster cutout of mob scene and prisoner which was placed behind bars. Various catchlines painted in flame effect and red crepe paper behind the prisoner with fan playing on it gave forth the impression of shooting flames.

"Have You Contributed Lately?"

Gibson's "Death" Warning

An eye attractor was the display board constructed by Clarke Gurley's artist, Sam Gibson at the Ritz Theatre, Bainbridge, Ga., for "Sudden Death" and mounted atop marquee. Enlargement was done in charcoal and copied from drawing that appeared in a newspaper, made from beaverboard and measuring four by six feet. It was hung in front of house week ahead and during engagement, copy reading "drive carefully or you won't see the 1001 thrills in," etc.

"Have You Contributed Lately?"

Teaser Radio Plugs Used on "Green Pastures"

On the Earle Theatre engagement of "The Green Pastures" advertising man Frank LaFalce used radio publicity to help publicize the attraction. A popular morning program ran a spot announcement beginning four days before the picture opened. The first four announcements were teasers, the name of the picture not being mentioned until the day it opened at the Earle.

"Have You Contributed Lately?"

Scotch Couple Bally "Mary of Scotland"

For his street bally on "Mary of Scotland" W. W. Risley, RKO Palace, Rochester, N. Y. dressed a man and woman in Scotch kilties and sent them out to cover city playing bagpipes as they circulated. Magazine boys paraded through streets carrying banners on their march to the theatre, cards were planted in hotels and cigar stores and leading merchants came through with attractive window displays. Highlight of campaign was the Johnstone Memorial Bag Pipe Band which attended the theatre in a body, playing out front before entering.

"Have You Contributed Lately?"

Indian Chief Ballys "Mohicans" for Perry

Accompanying photo shows attractive lobby display for "Last of the Mohicans" with tepees, Indian relics and other paraphernalia used by Fred Perry, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Binghamton, N. Y. Theatres of Cleveland Are Community Centers

Showmen In Ohio City Found Ready to Cooperate With Associations and Clubs

by ELSIE LOEB
from Cleveland

Cleveland is probably the largest small town in the United States.

Although it rates sixth in size with a population of over a million and a quarter souls and industrially ranks among the foremost manufacturing cities of the country, domestically, Cleveland continues to be a small town.

As in most small towns, Cleveland is a city of home owners. In the five largest residential suburbs—Cleveland Heights, Shaker Heights, Garfield Heights, East Cleveland and Lakewood—105,000 out of a total of 270,000 homes are occupied by home owners. This is practically 90 per cent of the population in these suburbs and is indicative of the type of people who inhabit Cleveland and the kind of lives they lead.

Retail Center Concentrated

Another parallel between Cleveland and the small town is that Cleveland's retail life is concentrated on a Main Street. True, it isn't called Main Street. It's called Euclid Avenue. And it didn't start out as the village cowpath, but follows the original Indian trail from Detroit to Buffalo, and is today the highway link between two strategic lake points. It is a matter of history that the Indians made the trail so far inland instead of along the Great Lakes, so as to prevent its obliteration from washouts. Efforts have been made periodically ever since Cleveland was in the early growing stage, to develop other downtown business streets. But with little success. As the years passed Cleveland grew from a small Connecticut settlement founded in 1736 by Moses Cleveland to a city of vast size and commercial importance, but it continues to be a Main Street city, with only one important business artery.

All of Cleveland's first run theatres are grouped on Euclid Avenue. All but one are within an area of two blocks in a section developed as Playhouse Square. Five movie palaces and one legitimate theatre are situated in this small area.

Until recently, there were two legitimate theatres in the same Playhouse Square. The Hanna was Shubert owned. The Cole, owned by Loew's, played Klaw and Erlanger shows. Now only the Hanna remains, and in movie parlance, it plays only a part-time policy. During the winter season, stage shows are presented there on occasional three-day runs. Once in a great while a show will run a full week. A couple of times a year the house is turned over to the movies for a road show engagement of some outstanding screen production. For example, "The Great Ziegfeld" and "Midsummer Night's Dream," each held up for three weeks at $2.00 top admission price. All of the downtown first run movie houses are producer owner. Warners' Hippodrome, the RKO Palace and the Allen are operated jointly by Warner Brothers and RKO interests. The State and the Stillman are Loew owned and operated.

From London described in last week's article to Cleveland covered on these pages is quite a jump. But though situated in widely separated countries these key communities have something in common in that both spots are on the conservative side with many of the residents occupying their own homes in the suburbs.

The low-down on the status of the theatre and local conditions as affect showbusiness in the Ohio metropolis continues the second series of the Showman's Travelogue now current in the Round Table.

A-MIKE

Called Poor Stage Show Town

Being either actual or potential home owners and consequently home lovers, Clevelanders are not essentially theatre minded. In fact, it is famous as being one of the worst towns in the country for stage shows. Time was when Cleveland was the official dog town for new shows. The theory was that if a show clicked in Cleveland it would do business anywhere. Today the city has only one "stage" theatre in constant operation. This is the Roxy, a burlesque house. It is run by Warren Irons, George Young and associates, and does consistently nice business.

Paradoxical as it may seem, Clevelanders while not stage show minded are practically one hundred per cent movie minded. Neighborhood theatres can take most of the credit of educating the public to the movies. They make it possible for the home owners to water the lawn after dinner and still catch the opening reel of a feature without dragging out the family chariot and taking a half-hour buggy ride downtown.

River Divides City

To appreciate the Cleveland psychology, it is necessary to know the city's topography. In area it measures 450 square miles, stretching twenty miles along Lake Erie and extending six or seven miles inland. Its twenty-mile length is divided approximately in half by the Cuyahoga River. But while the Cuyahoga River divides its length in two parts geographically, several fine bridges, one a double-decker, unite them commercially.

What is now known as the West and East Sides were originally two separate cities. The West Side was called Ohio City. Cleveland was on the east side of the river. Today, although the bridges join these two sections industrially, socially they continue as independent communities. This is clearly reflected in the theatre situation. West side theatres are seldom, if ever, in direct competition with East Side theatres. Only an unusual occasion can coax a West Sider to attend an East Side neighborhood house or vice versa. However, Martin Printz, manager of the Alhambra Theatre, on the East Side, reports that he has many West Side names and addresses on his Bank Night ledger, showing that the distance can be bridged. How rare this is, is seen in the way the exhibitors in the two sections work. Exhibitors on one side of the river operate as a group for their individual benefit regardless of operation policies on the other side of the river. The independence of the two groups was shown when double features were systematically kept out of the West Side while flourishing all over the East Side.

Downtown theatres, however, being equidistant from both sections, drew equally from both the West and East Side. It is estimated that approximately 150,000 people drawn from all directions attend the downtown first run theatres weekly.

Access from the suburbs to the downtown theatres is convenient. Streets are wide and straight and relatively good for auto travel. Parking is cheap and parking facilities compare favorably with other cities of its size. The average price for theatre parking is 20 cents to 25 cents in open lots and 35 cents in indoor garages—most of them located within 200 feet of the amusement places.

Extending as it does twenty miles along Lake Erie with a time element of about half an hour from the residential sections to the center of town, the factor of distance is a serious consideration when it comes to choosing between a downtown and a neighborhood theatre, especially since there is no general subway system of speedy transportation. As a result the average Clevelander thinks twice before taking a half hour ride downtown to see a show when he can reach his neighborhood house in five minutes without spending either car fare or the cost of gasoline plus parking charges. Exhibitors have taken advantage of this general attitude and have encouraged it by maintaining neighborhood houses that not only compare favorably but in several instances outstrip the first run houses in size and elegance.

Economic Status High

As to the type of people who live in Cleveland, 65 per cent are either foreign born or of foreign parentage. Cuyahoga County of which Cleveland is the largest city, is about 55 per cent foreign. The Cleveland Chamber of Commerce lists the nationalities as follows: 35,000 Czechoslavakians: 33,000 Polish, 22,500 German Americans, 23,500 Italians, 19,000 Yugoslavs, 19,000 Hungarians and 75,000 Negroes. Most of the latter have come to Cleveland within the past fifteen years. They were brought here during the post war economic boom days and have remained as a serious problem for relief agencies. It is a fact that the Polish, Italians, Yugoslavs, Hungarians and Negroes are colonized and live in groups. Germans and smaller groups, however, are scattered throughout the Greater Cleveland area.

Theatres located in these colonized areas do not, as a rule, play foreign films. Occasionally Hungarian and Italian pictures get a short run of two or three days, but generally speaking the showing of American pictures is the adopted policy of theatres in the foreign settlements.

Economically Cleveland rates high. The biggest wage earning element of the population is 145,000 to 160,000 in normal times. Today, according to Chamber of Commerce estimates, this is reduced to about 138,000. The average earning power prior to the depression was $1,500. Now it is $1,350.

Maintains Small Town Virtues

Cleveland, as was stated in the beginning, is a small town, but a small town which has outgrown its size while maintaining all of its original small town virtues. And nowhere are these characteristics more clearly reflected than in the amusement habits of its population. Here, as in its habits of living, it is conspicuous by its conservatism. It is slow to adopt new ideas. Accustomed to popular priced movies, only a very small percentage of the population will go for road show prices of either stage or screen. It is no strain on the Cleveland temperament to pass up a road show picture and wait until it plays at popular prices. The rush of a big city and the competition to be among the first to see it, is entirely absent in Cleveland.

STAGE WEDDING. Lynn Smith, Crystal, Gonzales, Tex., promoted costumes for bridal party shown in accompanying photo. Auto dealer also donated car to take couple to Honeymoon destination.

"Have You Contributed Lately?"

Differing from cities like New York, Chicago, and Los Angeles, Cleveland is not a city of transients. Essentially it is made up of generations of Clevelanders. Local operators know this. They know that they must make their appeal week after week to approximately the same clientele. That's one reason why the first run theatres were not particularly worried about what the Great Lakes Exposition would do to them. As Col. Harry E. Long, Loew division manager predicted, the regular first run patrons would attend the Exposition, but they would continue their regular theatre attendance. And that's how it turned out. The regulars have remained regular, and there has been the addition of the transients to swell the first run coffers.

Patrons Found Discriminating

Another thing that Cleveland movie operators know is that the local movie fans are not only conservative, but they are also discriminating. All the ballyhoo in the world wont put over a mediocre show. Ask Milt Harris of Loew's or Charlie Deardourff of M-G-M or Sid Dannenberg of Warners or Al Gregg of RKO. They'll tell you that a show must come up to scratch to go places at the box office even though it has been ballyhooed all over town. There are those who say the town is ultra conservative because it doesn't fall for the circus type of advertising. Soft pedaling the superlatives in advertising has one great advantage. Once in a while Everett Steinbuch, manager of Loew's State, or Eddie Miller, manager of Warners' Hippodrome, steps up and gives a picture his personal endorsement. This happens only rarely. And Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland know these endorsements are honest opinions, not just an effort to sell a picture regardless of entertainment value.

One of the great enigmas of the city is its apathy to foreign pictures. Although 65 per cent of the population is foreign born, the foreign movie is a step-child in Cleveland. It has been tried again and again. So far, every effort to establish a foreign policy theatre has been a failure. Right now Jack Shulman has under consideration a plan to establish a list of patrons and patronesses to underwrite a foreign policy at his Penn Square Theatre. A proper social setting might give the policy a firm bedding, Shulman thinks.

All Cleveland theatres are community centers. Neighborhood owners especially are always ready to co-operate with Parent-Teachers' Associations and women's clubs for benefits, for special Thanksgiving and Christmas benefit performances.

Henry Greenberger regularly turns over his Cedar Lee Theatre for benefit movies and bridge games in the foyer. M. B. Horwitz is always ready and willing to contribute his Heights Theatre for any good civic cause. Children receive special attention both as to their physical comforts and the type of entertainment provided for them. It is taken for granted that the Friday-Saturday pictures in the neighborhood houses are always of the family type of entertainment.

First Runs Aid Civic Projects

The first run houses co-operate on a larger scale. They contribute time, effort and assistance in all civic movements, and are especially generous in playing host to children of all institutions during the holiday season. Just recently, the publicity of all the downtown theatres combined to help Mrs. William Fiske, president of the Cleveland Cinema Club put on a Cinema Day at the Great Lakes Exposition. Through the efforts of Messrs. Harris, Deardourff, Dannenberg and Gregg, the movie stunt was so well executed that the Cinema Club was invited to continue it indefinitely.

City building inspection makes it necessary to maintain a high standard of sanitation in theatres, good business makes it imperative that the service, equipment and management, both at first runs and at subsequent runs, be of the best. Loew's theatres and Warners' theatres employ boys in snappy uniforms, who are trained to serve, but not over-trained. The RKO theatres dress up their theatres with pretty usherettes in smart attire and theatrical make-up.

Probably because the theatres have always kept faith with the public, the newspapers of Cleveland are ready at all times to co-operate in a publicity campaign, especially if the campaign includes a contest, because contests always go over big. The Doodlers' contest for "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town", the small town contest for "Small Town Girl" and a silly poem contest for the Jack Benny - Mary Livingston engagement are just a few of the popular contests staged in conjunction with newspapers. Contests that tie up with the classified ad department of the newspapers are always easy to put over and are popular with both newspapers and readers. A cash prize is always the bait.

Theatres here are lavish with newspaper space, especially if they are sold on their

JOHN HAMRICK'S BLUE MOUSE

Opening at the Paramount in Portland, Oregon, held over for second week and then moved to Blue Mouse Theatre for an extended run, "Mr. Deeds" was built up until at this writing it is now in its twenty-first week at that spot. Much was done by Manager Herb Sobotka in the way of contests and other publicity builders and on this page are some of the smart ads used.

Hamrick-Evergreen theatremen in Portland who co-operated to make this unusual showing in addition to Sobotka include Hal Daigler and his crew at the Paramount Theatre, Mose Mesher, circuit ad head, and Earl Hunt, assistant to Mesher.

MERCHANTS EXPLOITATION-MINDED

picture, but Cleveland demands dignified advertising, with extravagant raves used sparingly. They use window cards by the thousand, heralds by the tens of thousand and billboards wherever available. Not long ago Milt Harris of Loew's copped all the downtown telegraph poles for advertising when he volunteered to supply the city with "Wet Paint" cards. Beneath the warning sign he added a line advertising the Loew houses.

Merchants are quick to join a campaign in cooperation with the pictures. One of the most conspicuous of recent campaigns was a tie-up by Loew's State with one of the largest department stores on "These Three." The store advertised groups of three articles at a special price such as tie-handkerchief and sox—hat, gloves and shoes—shampoo hair cut and wave. Every group so advertised carried "These Three" in quotes. The stunt did a lot to sell the picture.

Picture Critics Carry Weight

Theatre critics occupy regular departments in all three of Cleveland's daily newspapers. There's W. Ward Marsh of the Plain Dealer, Charles Schneider of The Press and Arthur Spaeth of the News. They wield a world of influence locally, and their reviews carry much weight with the readers. Newspapers also figure and rightfully, that good movie reviews boost circulation. The syndicated movie columnists including Louella Parsons, Sidney Skolsky et al are also important.

Theatre advertising rates in Cleveland are about on a par with other large cities. Neighborhood houses, almost all of which are members of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, are grouped under an association heading and use uniform type and space. Theatres are listed alphabetically. They double space the big office attractions.

Cleveland movie men are all good joiners. Col. Harry E. Long, Loew division manager, and Nat Holt, in charge of the RKO theatres in the Great Lakes Division, are both active Rotarians. Col. Nat Wolf, Warner zone manager and all of his aides are members of all kinds of local civic organizations. It's considered good business out here to mix and be a member of the community. The first run downtown theatre executives—Col. Harry E. Long of Loew's, Nat Holt of RKO and Col. Nat Wolf of Warner Brothers—all belong to a merchants' association which meets regularly. It's a "happy family" attitude with all working toward improved business in Playhouse Square instead of the old time cut throat competition.

Library Plan Adopted Nationally

Socially the movies stand high in Cleveland. The Cleveland Art Museum, whose membership is made up of the intelligentsia of the city, is sponsoring a series of educational movies. The Cleveland Public Schools have adopted visual education as an integral part of their system. The Cleveland Public Library, one of the largest in the country, through its publicity director, Mrs. Ina Roberts, has made history with its plan, now nationally adopted, of assembling book displays to supplement movie releases. Right now Mrs. Roberts is on the west coast making closer contacts with the studios for bigger and better cooperative displays on forthcoming screen productions. So, you see, in Cleveland the movies move in the best social and intellectual circles.

"Have You Contributed Lately?"

Like its sister cities from coast to coast, Cleveland has been in the economic dumps. But it has definitely emerged from the doldrums. Ever since the early part of January 1935 when the spring automotive industry took a spurt that lasted well into the summer, there has been a steady rise in business conditions. Translated into the human equation this means that there has been a steady increase in employment and that the industrial wages have been distributed in fair volume for the past eighteen months without a setback, giving tone and stability to the Cleveland picture.

The movie theatres reflect this condition. Attendance started to go up simultaneously with the increase in manufacture and employment. It held a steady high all winter. It has held to a new summer high. In spite of record breaking heat spells, all theatre precedents have been broken in several instances.

Few Ten Cent Houses

In spite of the steady rise in theatre grosses, admission prices are still at the depression level of 40 cents top. Only the RKO Palace which plays a combination picture and stage show charges 60 cents top regularly. On occasions when a stage show plays Loew's State admissions there are hiked to 60 cents, but they drop to 40 cents with resumption of the straight picture policy. First run neighborhood houses are getting 30 cents top with subsequents running the gamut down to a dime. There are very few ten cents houses, however, and they are frowned upon by the majority of theatre owners. Col. Harry E. Long of Loew's does not see any immediate rise in admission scales. M. B. Horwitz, on the other hand, feels that the present run of pictures aren't good enough to warrant any higher scale. However, it is understood that Allied States Association favors a hike in prices.

Nat Wolf of Warner Brothers thinks the increase in local theatre business is here to stay. Basis for this is the announcement that approximately 104 conventions have been booked for Cleveland this year. We have had the Republican convention and the Allied States Convention, and also the American Legion convention in September.

Exposition Helped Grosses

The Great Lakes Exposition, lasting 100 days from June 27 to October 4, brought thousands of people into the city daily. Downtown theatres got the cream of this extra business, but neighborhood theatres expected to get their share judging from the way they spruced up with new equipment. One of the best indications of the healthy state of the local movie business is the fact that every one of the city's 103 theatres with a total seating capacity of some 128,000 seats is open and operating full time.

While all of Cleveland's first run movie houses are producer owned, practically the entire subsequent run field is independent. Of 71 circuit theatres, 12 are affiliated and 59 are unaffiliated. In addition, there are 40 independent theatres operated individually.

It is the policy of the first run theatre to play pictures a full week. In rare instances Warners' Hippodrome holds its attraction two weeks. And just once in 18 years Loew's State held a picture a second week. All first runs are shown on a single feature bill with assorted shorts. Subsequents change from three to five times a week. For several years there were no duals in Cleveland by common agreement. That agreement blew up last summer, and now duals flourish freely whenever and wherever the exhibitor feels it necessary. However, Cleveland exhibitors are opposed to double features. That the public does not agree with the exhibitors was revealed when several of them passed ballots to their patrons.

The personnel behind the theatres understand the psychology of the people. They have made their theatres comfortable places to visit and have, figuratively speaking, hung "welcome" signs all over from entrance to exit, in the true spirit of Cleveland.

Harvard's "Pink" Street Bally

To plug his "Strike Me Pink" engagement at the Princess, Baxley, Ga., Johnny Harvard put a boy out on the streets with his head, arms and legs bandaged, as boy hobbled around and was questioned by passersby as to his accident, he handed out cards with copy reading: "No sir, didn't get this way in an airplane fall, I got in this shape from laughing at," etc., etc.

YOU ARE INVITED TO JOIN UP

is up in Vernon, British Columbia managing the Empress Theatre and we're always glad to welcome a Canadian member, since they always prove to be good active ones. However, we haven't heard from you since signing up, Walter, and that isn't living up to the reputation of your brother showmen. How about getting out the old typewriter and jotting down some recent stunts?

manages the Imperial Theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y., and started as an usher at the Luxor Theatre there, then doorman at the Gem for Mr. Renaud, who took over the Imperial and placed Dave at the house as manager. What about dropping in to see us on your next day off?

is up in Jamaica Plain, Mass., managing the Jamaica Theatre. George has been with the M. & P. Circuit for the past three years, the first year and a half of which was spent at the Wollaston Theatre under J. J. McDermott and then at his present house first under Abner Pinanski and now Phil DePetro, all good friends of the Round Table.

J. RUSSELL PAYNE
manages the Federal Theatre in Williamsburg, Md., and says he was 16 when he entered showbusiness, delivering handbills and window cards, then ushering and taking tickets. R. N. Christopher sent him to Church Hill, Md., to manage his house there and returned to the Federal to do advertising, from which job he was promoted to his present assignment.

A. H. KEENER
acts as assistant manager of the Paramount Theatre for the Minnesota Amusement Company in Grand Forks, N. D. and since neither that circuit nor theatre is strange to these pages, we are hoping we shall hear still more from them now that another showman is represented in the club roster.

in Winchester, Ky. manages the Leeds Theatre and is the kind of member we like to welcome, since he has already sent in various accounts of his activities that have been duly publicized in our section. Sandefur started making signs for the Henderson Amusement Co. and later opened a shop and did work for Warners, later he accepted a position as poster artist for the Frankfort Amusement Co. working there two years in that capacity before he was promoted to his present job for the same company.

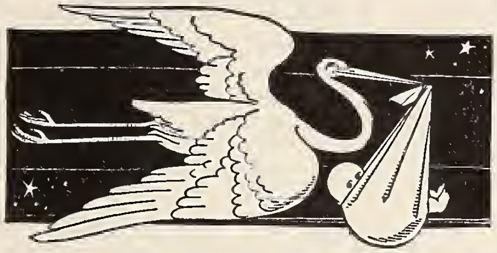
is the assistant manager of the Famous Players Tivoli in Toronto, Canada, working for Dan Krendel, and started in that house in 1934 as usher, then promoted to chief of service, and then to his present job. Stan is no stranger to us since he dropped in to pay a visit when he was vacationing here this summer. We wish we could meet all our new members that way.



JOHN CHARLES STEIN to Mr. and Mrs. J. Francis Stein on September 26th. Daddy manages the Windsor Theatre in Canton, Ohio.

is the assistant manager and operator for the Rose Theatre in Roseboro N. C. and in his dual capacity should certainly have something of interest to send along for reproduction in our pages.

GILBERT F. McKEON
manages the Avalon Theatre a New York City Consolidated house and of course the same invitation is extended to him to drop in and say hello. Your obligation to the club has just started when you signed on the dotted line, Gil, we expect that you shall report your activities from time to time.

HARVEY HILL WHALEY
manages Lucas & Jenkins Capitol Theatre in Macon, Ga. studied theatre management under A. P. Barry, city manager and before entering showbusiness worked for the largest textile manufacturing plant in the south as artist and designer.

SYDNEY E. SOLOMON
is in Newport, R. I., at Shea's Paramount, acting as Harry Brown's assistant and handling publicity and exploitation. Back in 1925 Syd worked in the executive office of the old Nathan Gordon Olympia Theatres. Since then he ran his own advertising agency for several years in Boston and later freelanced as publicity representative for several big shows in the Hub city. Sid also handled considerable advertising work for Publix and is now learning house operation from Harry Brown.

is in York, Penna., managing the Capitol Theatre and we're sorry to report that Paul has been mighty silent and since he comes well recommended by Eddie Moore, we'll wait for the campaigns to roll in since we've been promised big things by Ed.

is the assistant to Harvey Cocks at Warner's Strand in Akron, Ohio, and since Harvey took especial trouble to propose Bud for membership in the club and since he's working under a swell showman, we're going to expect big things from this new member. How about telling Harvey we haven't heard from him in some time?

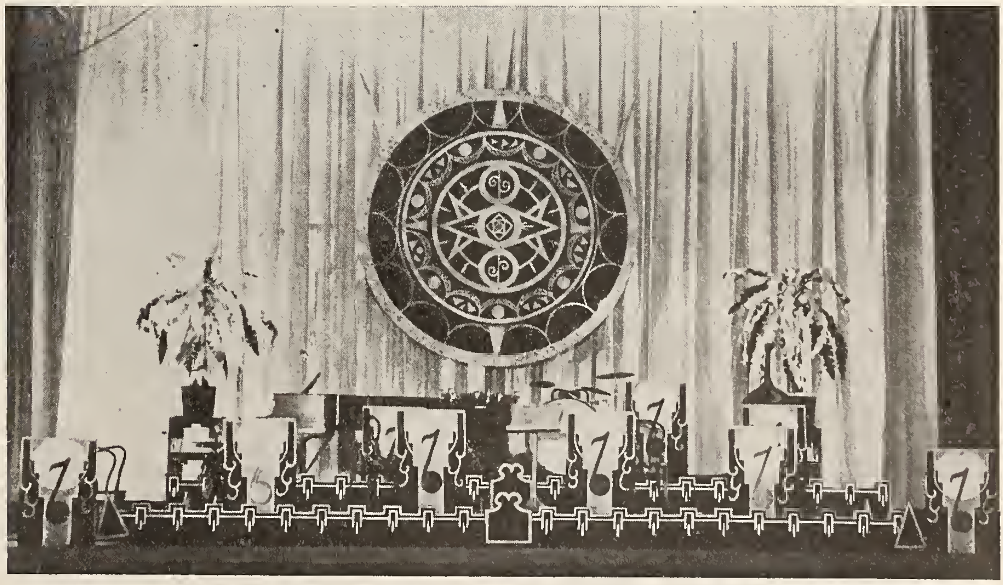
manages the Pavilion in Renfrewshire, Scotland starting in showbusiness on the technical side writing articles on sound and production for the Kine Weekly and other magazines. After winning a prize for his technical report on carbons, Agnew became manager for the Scott Theatres, Ltd. where he has been for the past ten years. Agnew more recently won the Grace Moore award for exploitation of "On Wings of Song."



Above display was created by Ted Halmi, RKO Orpheum Theatre, Denver, Colo., in a distinctly black and white design. The circle center piece was black velour with white metallics and small pieces of mirror. Outer circle was 14 feet in diameter and each circle raised about two feet, between circles were colored light bulbs which revolved. The music stands were carried out in the same color scheme with mirrors and metallics.

CHICAGO DUALS SPEED INDEPENDENT PRODUCT

Capitol Exchange Alone Will Have 98 Features; 2,000-Foot Reel Issue Awaits Solution

by WILLIAM F. CROUCH

With double features starting this week at the Balaban & Katz theatres outside the Loop, independent exhibitors are expected to follow the plan immediately, having dropped the law suit which they had planned to file in federal court in the next few days.

As the result of double features again being a part of the local exhibition policy, the independent film exchanges have been busily engaged in a battle for product adequate to supply the expected demands for pictures by the local independent exhibitors.

Three of the largest independent distributors in the Midwest are in Chicago. These three concerns have made deals for 165 feature films to release in the coming season and more are expected to be scheduled later.

Capitol Film Exchange, under the management of Henri Elman, announces it will have 98 features ready for release during the coming year. This gives this rapidly growing concern more pictures than any major company. Mr. Elman has had to hire more salesmen, bookers and other personnel to handle the increase in business.

Slated for release by Capitol exchange are the following groups: Thirty Chesterfield-Invincible productions, 12 Burroughs-Tarzan pictures, 12 C. C. Burr films, 8 Tom Keene historical melodramas, 6 Variety Thrill-O-Dramas, 6 Fanchon Royers, 8 Tom Tylers, 8 Rex Bell action pictures and 6 James Oliver Curwood stories featuring Kermit Maynard. In addition, Mr. Elman has arranged for distribution of two pictures for roadshowing, "What Becomes of the Children" and "Prison Babies." Four serials and a selection of short subjects also are offered.

Superior Pictures, under the management of J. J. Jovaney, will distribute 47 features and 12 "Screen Travelers" short subjects. The features include; 6 musical westerns starring Fred Scott and produced by Spectrum Pictures, 8 Mitchell Leichter action dramas starring Conway Tearle, 6 stunt pictures starring Miss Margaret Morris and made by Leichter, 8 Bobby Nelson action dramas made by Ray Kirkwood, 8 features from Banner Pictures and a special group of eight pictures called the Superior group. Three for roadshow also have been slated for distribution. They are "Gambling With Souls," "The Voice of India" and "Jungle Goddess."

The B. F. Judell exchange will distribute at least 20 features. Included are eight melodramas made by the Halperin Brothers, four Pinky Tomlin musicals, four Frankie Darro action pictures and four Kermit Maynard westerns.

From the looks of things the coming season appears to be the best the independent distributors have had in some time. The advent of double features will mean many more bookings for them and should the independent exhibitors continue to withhold their buying of major product it would be a Roman holiday for the independent exchange.

Five Balaban and Katz theatres were scheduled to start double feature policies Friday. The Marbro, Uptown and Tivoli have "Girls' Dormitory" and "Texas Rangers" set for the opening of the dual plan, while the Southtown and Riviera have "My Man Godfrey" and "Charlie Chan at the Racetrack" for their twin bills.

Other B & K theatres are expected to follow with double features within the coming weeks. The only B & K theatres which will not play the duals will be the Loop theatres.

Pictures such as "Anthony Adverse" and "The Great Ziegfeld," which are extra long, do not lend themselves to double feature programs, according to B & K executives, and such films will be shown alone.

This is the first time in four years that double features have been prevalent in Chicago. Just four years ago, to the month, the dual policy was abandoned after a strenuous fight between the circuits and the independent theatres. At that time the circuits were opposed to the dual plan and used all possible means to abolish them. At present B & K are the only group advocating the twin bills, as Warner, Essaness and others are strongly opposed to starting them again.

With pressure being brought to bear upon the IATSE office in Washington this week in order to get sanction for the use of the 2,000 foot reels in Chicago, it is expected that the acute situation here regarding the showing of the long reels will be relieved soon.

At present the operators are under orders from their national headquarters and have refused to run film on the 2,000 foot reels. Nothing more than 1,000 feet is being allowed at this time.

The city ordinance is such that it will have to be revised before the 2,000 foot reel can be run in local theatres. The local difficulty is in the size of the spool. The city ordinance calls for reels that are 14 inches in diameter for use with the standard 16 inch magazine. The distributors are sending out their reels on 14½ inch spools.

Local officials think that the city will change its requirements as soon as the union adopts the use of the longer reels.

General opinion has been that the union possibly has been holding out on the use of the 2,000 foot reel in an attempt to get two men in a booth here. So far nothing definite in this regard has been reported.

Local distributors say they will take the matter before Mayor Edw. J. Kelly if the authorities who set the regulations do not change their opinions.

Marshall Neilan and William Wright of Selznick International pictures are in Chicago this week trying to find youngsters to play in "Tom Sawyer." As a result of the announcement in local dailies that they were looking for talent, hundreds of youngsters have been storming their quarters at the Sherman hotel. They have had to use the grand ballroom to take care of the crowd.

Chicago Theatre's Bookings

Bookings for the Chicago theatre finally have been decided upon, for the coming four weeks at least. "Ladies in Love" is set to start this Friday with "Valiant is the Word for Carrie" the next week. "The Big Broadcast of 1937" then will take the screen for a two weeks run at this deluxe house. "Dodsworth," scheduled to open its Loop run at the Chicago, will follow "Libeled Lady" into the United Artists theatre about October 30th. It is reported that Sam Goldwyn ordered the booking changed from the Chicago to the United Artists where the picture will play on a percentage basis as against the flat rental basis at the Chicago.

At the Oriental theatre the Tuesday night business is beginning to grow with the advent of a giveaway that is increased weekly by $250. Now at the $1,500 mark, the award is expected soon to better the giveaway now offered around the corner at the State-Lake theatre, where the figure is $2,700 and increasing weekly by $150. Both theatres have been doing heavy business on the giveaway days. More than $100,000 is now dangled weekly before patrons of Chicago theatres.

Publicists' Publication

The "CAPA Tattler" made its appearance this week and gives the members something to boast about with its flow of wit and wisdom. Irving Mack fostered the idea, which proved an instant success. The mimeographed sheet is scheduled to appear weekly and is being distributed among the members of the Publicists' Association.

Bartlett Cormack, MGM writer, is in Chicago getting material for the foundry picture which that company will make this fall. The picture will star Jean Harlow.

Leonard Rejoins United Artists

Charles A. Leonard has been appointed by Monroe W. Greenthal, United Artists advertising and publicity head, as chief of the company's exploitation department. Mr. Leonard rejoins United Artists after an absence of two years, during which period he was associated for a time with Twentieth Century-Fox and served, later, as advertising manager of Universal.

Win Warner Sales Drive

The Warner Theatres' 17-week summer drive for extra business in Chicago was won by Herb Wheeler's team, consisting of the Stratford, Highland, Avalon, Orpheum and Paramount. The individual winners were M. Connors of the Grove, E. Arkin of the Lexington and S. Lambert of the Shore, who won $125, $50 and $25 respectively.

Giegerich in Own Office

Charles J. Giegerich, formerly connected with Celebrity, has opened his own office in New York as an independent distributor.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1935, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parenthesis after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1936-37 season.

J. C. JENKINS—HIS COLYUM

Neligh, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

There now, this is something else again. For eight weeks we have been going around in our shirt sleeves and gasping for breath like a dying bullfrog, because of the heat, and last night old Jack Frost came down from Valley City, North Dakota, and monkeyed around here like he owned the place, and our housekeeper moved the thermostat up to 70 and turned on the oil heater and this morning our radiators feel like they do when it is 10 below zero. Oh boy, fall is here, and there is no place on earth as nice as Nebraska in the fall, that is, outside of the dust storms and a few other things. And last night it rained pretty much all night. Say, Abner, isn't it just wonderful today?

We wonder if you ever met E. W. Kerr, of the Broadway theatre at Council Bluffs, Iowa. If you haven't you have missed something.

E. W. used to be a resident of Denver, Colorado, and that's probably why Denver, Colorado, is such a good town. He left there to take charge of the Broadway theatre at Council Bluffs, and from now on Omaha had better look out for Council Bluffs, for she's going to go places. E. W. told us he wanted the HERALD because he wanted to keep up with the theatrical procession. You bet, that's the way to do it.

The National Poster Exchange of Des Moines, Iowa, sent us word that they wanted the HERALD. This would indicate that this exchange wanted to keep up with the procession also. Good judgment, we call it.

Almost every time we go to Omaha we meet Ralph Brown, that tall, heavy set guy who helps his mother operate the Phoenix theatre at Neola, Iowa, and we never met him that we didn't feel like we were in pretty good company.

As we remember it, Neola is located close to the Nishnebotny river. You may think that Nishnebotny comes from the Polish language, but it doesn't. It is pure North American Indian and is used without abbreviations. Translated into United States talk it probably means "Come up and see me sometime," at least that's what Brown always tells us.

Last night we met a fellow with a cowboy hat and an arsenal strapped on him, who had been out on an inspection tour with John Barleycorn from Peoria. We asked him who he was and where he was from and he let cut a war whoop and said he was a bull from Montana.

It looks right now like we might have a freeze tonight, and if we do we are wondering what those poor starved grasshoppers will do out on our garden fence. Poor things, gosh darn 'em.

The Capitol Theatres, with S. H. Stern as manager, seem to be going ahead regardless of the depression. In fact, S. H. said there was no depression as far as Capitol Theatres was concerned. S. H. is not only a good manager, but he is known as a good golfer as well, and if Sam can handle a rod and reel as well as he does a driver it would be all anyone could reasonably expect.

The manager of Republic Pictures seemed considerably worried when we called. We asked him what was the matter, and he said he was afraid his subscription to the HERALD had expired. We told him that it had and he reached for his check book, and now he is back to normal again. It beats all what a little thing will do to a man sometimes.

H. A. Van Housen, who sells the theatre boys some reliable equipment for their theatres, was running with the cut-out open at the banquet out at the golf club house the other day. We used to buy film of him some years back, and whatever Van said was so whether it was so or not. If Van wasn't part Scotch and part Swede he'd make an awfully good Dutchman.

Willsonville, Nebraska, is going to have a theatre. We met J. F. Lloyd in the Scott-Ballantyne office getting a complete line of equipment, and the indications were that Willsonville folks will soon have a place to go for entertainment. Mr. Lloyd agreed with us that he should have the Herald in order to start off right.

W. F. McCarty of the Lebanon theatre at Lebanon, and George E. Hall of the Rose Bowl theatre at Franklin, Nebraska, are now members of the HERALD family and in excellent standing. These two boys know a good thing without having to be told. There are a few theatre folks who require a little argument, but that's because they haven't been reading the HERALD as they should.

When the wind begins to blow
And we see the falling snow
And we know that it will cover up the land,
Then we hope that we can go
Down where they have no snow
And see the boys down on the Rio Grande.

Every once in a while our mind runs back to the days when we operated a theatre in this metropolis of the west and when we played such stars as John Bunny, Flora Finch, Bronco Billy, Alkali Ike, Flo Turner, Herbert Rawlinson, Beverly Bayne and dozens of others equally good, but to compare pictures of those days with those of the present day would be like comparing liver and onions with huckleberry pie. To say that pictures are not improving would be evidence of a lack of knowledge. The average program picture today would have been considered a feature de luxe back in those days, and if this improvement keeps up we wonder what pictures will be like twenty years hence.

We hope to get several stars for closing this right here. We are going to run down to Red Cloud to see our old friend Bert Beams and stop at Harvard and see J. W. Frank on our way back, and last night they had 15 inches of snow in Denver. Oh gosh, gee whiz.

THE era of dramatic sound is here! Thundering artillery—shattering earthquakes—stifled anguish—every emotional appeal known to the realm of dramatic art responds instantly to the magic of MIRROPHONIC! Intimately, stirringly, these intense climaxes are made literally to live again for box-office dollars!

YOUR PATRONS WILL GET NEW THRILLS FOR THEIR EARS

WHEN YOUR THEATRE IS EQUIPPED WITH

MIRROPHONIC SOUND

Box-office dollars are proving, with every MIRROPHONIC installation, what E. R. P. I. promised a month ago: "MIRROPHONIC'S epoch-making sound reproduction, with its powerful exploitation campaign, brings to exhibitors everywhere the first new large-scale money-making opportunity since Western Electric first gave sound to the silent films!"

Box-office dollars are proving, in terms of actual cash, that it pays to extract the last "ounce" of quality from every picture—that with MIRROPHONIC greater grosses attend every presentation!

And box-office dollars are proving that increased receipts from only a few pictures quickly pay for a change to the world's new standard of reproduction excellence!

How a modern PITTCO Theatre Front puts Money in YOUR Pocket

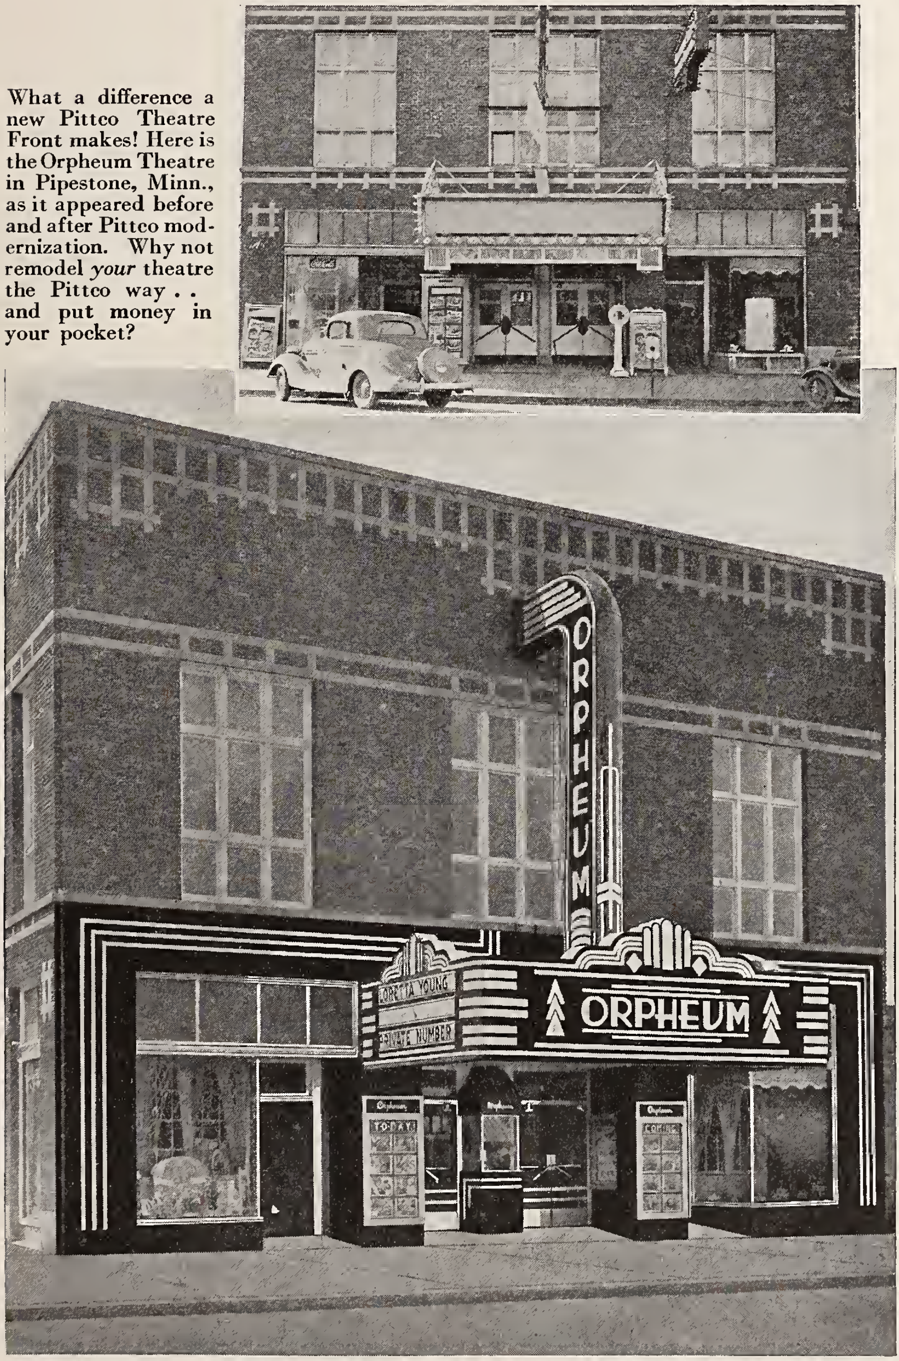
What a difference a new Pittco Theatre Front makes! Here is the Orpheum Theatre in Pipestone, Minn., as it appeared before and after Pittco modernization. Why not remodel your theatre the Pittco way . . and put money in your pocket?



APPEARANCES count heavily, today. The theatre that presents a modern, inviting exterior to the eyes of prospective movie goers, will usually draw more patrons and a steadier clientele, will have far better box office returns than the theatre whose front is old-fashioned or uninviting. This is not theory, but fact . . . proved time and again by theatre managers throughout the country. Today, the "eyes" have it.

Thus, when you remodel your theatre with a handsome new Pittco Front, you are really building box office returns. Bigger profits for you . . . money in your pocket.

Join the trend toward theatre modernization. Our staff of experts will gladly cooperate with you and your architect in planning a Pittco Front for your theatre suited to your needs and purse. Send the coupon, today, for our free book containing photographs, facts, and figures on Pittco modernization.

PITTSBURGH TIME PAYMENT PLAN

Take up to 2 years to pay for your new Pittco Front. Merely make a 20% down payment, and then settle the balance in easy monthly installments at low F.H.A. rates.

A splendid example of good modern architecture and decoration. The Plaza, Stamford, Ct. . . newest house added to the fast-growing Harry Brandt circuit. Architect, Thomas W. Lamb, New York.

Streamline Seats by

HEYWOOD Streamline SEATS

are simply "made to order" for the modern theatres being built today. Note how perfectly H-W streamline seats blend into the modern decorative scheme of Harry Brandt's PLAZA, Stamford, Ct. (shown above). This beautiful house is a splendid example of modern architecture. It's a splendid example, too, of the marvelous decorative possibilities in Heywood Streamline Chairs. These sleek, swanky seats will help you to add good modern styling to new houses or to remodernized interiors. Their lustrous, streamline-edged backs (either in colored Ceramite or Chromium plating) prevent soiling of upholstery . . . add extra years of wear . . . quicken house traffic because they enable patrons to find seats quickly and easily. May we tell you more about this streamline seating . . . demonstrate in detail why it will pay you at the box office to streamline your house with H-W seats?

A BRITISH DESIGN CONTRASTING EXTERIOR AND INTERIOR TREATMENT

The Odeon theatre in Southall, England, is one of the most recent and, particularly with respect to the interior, in some ways one of the most interesting of the later additions to the swiftly extending British circuit operated under the direction of Oscar Deutsch. This Odeon, of which the architect was George Coles of London, has a severely plain, classical facade of stone with a sparing amount of illumination. The interior, however, is distinctly modern, with a blue and gold color scheme and trough lighting. The auditorium, which is on a two-floor plan, depends importantly on colored illumination from concealed sources for the decorative effect. Interior treatment is in plaster with coloration emphasizing turquoise blue and gold. The seating has peach seats, light blue backs and blue row end standards, while the proscenium drapes are in turquoise blue and peach. The Odeon plan places the box office inside entrance doors, in an outer lobby (in accordance with practice quite general in England), with approach to the auditorium directly into foyer area immediately associated with the auditorium.

VOLUME 125 OCTOBER 17, 1936 NUMBER 3

New Theatre Plans Continue Year's Pace

CONTINUING the pace set earlier in 1936, new theatre construction is reported active in most sections of the country.

In New York City Arthur L. Mayer, managing director of the Rialto, in association with independent circuit operators, Rapf & Ruden, have acquired title to the northwest corner of Lexington Avenue and 23rd Street for construction of a 600-seat house. Richard M. Lederer will build a 600-seat theatre in the Bronx. Harry Brandt, operating 68 theatres in New York, New Jersey and Connecticut, has bought property in Malden, Mass., for Number 69.

Construction of the Circle theatre, with 1,600 seats, and of the Congress to have 1,800 seats, in Detroit, are announced by Stoia and Miskinis and by Associated Theatres, respectively.

Warner Brothers have broken ground in Chicago for their new Rhodes theatre, designed by C. W. & George L. Rapp, and to cost approximately $250,000 when completed.

Malco Theatres, Inc., will build a 700-seat theatre in Memphis, and Cumberland Amusement Company plan a new theatre at Pulaski, Tenn.

Craver-Little Motion Pictures, Inc., have awarded a contract for a $100,000 house in Charlotte, N. C. Atlanta reports that Lucas and Jenkins will build the Techwood theatre adjacent to the Techwood government housing project. Hogansville, Georgia, will soon have a new house to be erected by Lam Amusement Company.

The Saenger interests have bought property for another theatre in Baton Rouge, Louisiana. Southern Amusement Company will build in Lake Charles, Louisiana. Louisiana is the scene of a minor theatre building boom, with new theatres planned or building in Cotton Vallel, Ida, Harrisonburg and Jackson.

Mississippi will have new houses at Kosciusko, Louisville and Belzoni.

A total of approximately $23,500 will be spent by three exhibitors in various parts of Missouri on the three new houses announced the last week in September. Of this amount, $15,000 will be spent by J. D. Wineland, on the new Mystic at Carthage, Mo., an 850-seat house. Construction will start immediately.

At Ozark, Mo., where there hasn't been a theatre, Paul Bloomer and Lloyd Lee have remodeled a building for October opening. The partners are spending approximately $3,500. At Aurora, Mo., Glen Caldwell has spent around $5,000 on the construction of the New Caldwell, which has a capacity of approximately 300 seats.

[Other theatre projects are reported on pages 19, 20 and 21.]

Governments Checking Continue Year's Pace

GROUND-WATER studies by the U. S. Geological Survey, now in progress, will include investigation of loss of ground water through use in theatre air-

"THEATRE BUILDINGS DO NOT DEPRECIATE—THEY BECOME OBSOLETE!"

Our heading is the conclusion reached by an eminent theatre architect. It occurs in a response which he was moved to make to what we called "an editorial inquiry" into the somewhat arbitrary application of so-called modernistic architecture to the motion picture theatre, regardless of the character of a community, which sometimes is widely at variance with modernistic stylizations, in local culture, tradition and scene. Our "inquiry" is, in a sense, continued, with this letter from Mr. S. Charles Lee of Los Angeles:

I was much interested in the discussion in Better Theatres, a few issues back, of fitting theatre styles into the local scene. In thinking about the matter since reading this discussion, I have concluded that the observations made apply to all buildings. The idea really springs from the various styles that were developed in different parts of Europe when materials were not transported great distances, and when few architects traveled much beyond their home cities. And there was no photography to compensate to some extent for this lack of travel. Then, too, land was held and developed by only a few families, growth was slow, and buildings were used for centuries. Also, there were no chambers of commerce!

In America things have always been different. Few communities have developed with a definite plan or character. In earlier days particularly, landlords were numerous, and each owner wanted to impress his individual tastes upon his property. According to these influences the typical American community developed.

Another factor of influence is the insistence of the American business man on "something different." He asks the architect to give him a building which will stand out from the buildings of his competitors. It is almost impossible to design a good-looking store building, because each tenant wants to plant his sign where it will be most easily seen, caring not at all about the ensemble.

Maybe the showman is the worst offender of the lot, architecturally. If the whole town is in blue, he wants his show house to be green. The marquee is a good example of the showman's desire to steal the architectural show from his neighbors.

There is also this angle: The very purpose of the theatrical business, to entertain the public, makes it necessary for the show place to be up to the minute, architecturally, and the motion picture itself is the showman's own Frankenstein, because it is constantly showing the public in all types of communities, big and small, important and obscure, the latest ideas in building styles and interior treatment, and the showmen's sensitivity to public reaction tells him to keep abreast of the times.

Localized architecture has passed the point of practicability except for a few communities, and I have reconciled myself to the fact that to be in the swim today, every building must be built with an eye to periodical remodeling. I am convinced that theatre buildings do not depreciate—they become obsolete.

If I can devise a theatre with exterior and interior treatments that can be buttoned on and unbuttoned off like a shirt, I will become the Rockefeler of Architecture.—S. CHARLES LEE.

conditioning systems, according to Arthur A. Baker, Acting Director.

In Brooklyn, New York State authorities have sought to compel theatres with air-conditioning equipment to return the water used to the ground through a diffusing pit or well, as required by law.

Warner Group Adopts RCA Sound Apparatus

WARNER BROTHERS' Chicago theatres, under the supervision of James Coston, will have RCA Photophone sound systems. Every one of the houses there will have its present equipment replaced with the new rotary stabilizer equipment.

Low Admission Prices Are Blamed on Drought

DROUGHT in Midwest States, declares Myron Blank of the Central States circuit, will hold down admission prices in Iowa and Nebraska. Conditions may permit an advance in scattered locations, in connection with special pictures, Mr. Blank added.

Trade Group Defines Air-Conditioning

AIR-CONDITIONING equipment is not any fan, radiator or ventilator, according to the National Better Business Bureau, which holds that the phrase is to be restricted to apparatus that performs certain definite functions according to season. These functions are listed by the Bureau, and represent the minimum requirements of air conditioning apparatus properly so called.

Summer air-conditioning, according to the Better Business Bureau, cools and dehumidifies the air; winter air-conditioning humidifies and warms the air; both provide suitable circulation.

Under a stipulation entered into with the Federal Trade Commission, use of the phrase "air-conditioner" to describe an apparatus which performs only part of the required services, is to be banned.

Walter Reade Group To Build 100 Theatres

IN ASSOCIATION with American Seating Company, as represented by its vice-president, L. N. Olmstead, Walter Reade, now operating 30 theatres in the East, and Thomas W. Lamb, architect responsible for many large and well-known picture houses, have organized a $5,000,000 privately financed corporation to build 24 new theatres a year for the next five years. Theatres recently opened in Elizabeth and New Brunswick, N. J., have been tied into the project, which aims to compete with obsolete theatre buildings in towns between 5,000 and 100,000 population throughout the United States. Local interests in each town will be invited to associate themselves with the project.

Complete air-conditioning and cooling will be featured in the new houses, which will be of steel-and-concrete construction, with chairs, carpets and other comforts of a metropolitan quality. There will be no balconies, and no dressing rooms or other provisions for stage performances. In addition to the newest extended frequency sound reproduction, the projection rooms will include means for reproducing important radio programs, including radio appearances of Hollywood stars. Projection rooms will be designed to meet the requirements of television.

Space often used for stores or other commercial side lines in theatre buildings will be devoted to playrooms, recreational halls, reading rooms and other features of interest to the local communities in which they are built. Construction on seven theatres is to start shortly.

General Changes Typify Modernization

THEATRE modernization is indicated to be of a general nature in current projects, rather than confined merely to refurbishing and equipment replacement. Equipment replacement is of course an important part of present revisions, particularly sound equipment, but according to reports from many sections of the country, general redecoration, new fronts and quite a few structural changes, especially for the purpose of increasing seating capacities and improving traffic and lounge provisions are typical of the work being done.

Remodeling of the Denham theatre in Denver, represents an expenditure of about $30,000. The improvements include complete interior redecoration, a new marquee with vertical sign, and complete reseating.

The roof of L. A. Stein's Valdosta theater in Nashville, Ga., is being raised to make room for a larger balcony, while the front is also being remodeled. Other improvements include new seating and projection equipment.

The entire interior of the Rivoli theatre in New Orleans has been revised. The area of the auditorium has been reduced in the interests of acoustics, while the lounge provisions have been increased.

Glen W. Dickinson is spending about $10,000 for general modernization of the Booth theatre in Independence, Kan., installing new seating, carpets, drapes, neon illumination at the front and refrigeration.

La Crosse Theatres has made rather a a new theatre of the Majestic in La Crosse, Wis., installing a 70-foot marquee and a 58-foot vertical sign. The soffit of the marquee has quarter-inch plate glass mirrors and 1500 feet of red and blue gas-tube illumination, erected by Electro-Lite Signs, Inc., of Milwaukee. The interior has been completely changed with the addition of 300 seats to the capacity and revision of the decorative scheme.

Al Levin of San Francisco has begun modernization of his Ellis theatre there, to cost $60,000. Henry Lazarus has completed remodeling of his Wonderland theatre in New Orleans at a cost of $15,000.

The interior of the Gem theatre in Barnesville, Ga., operated by Wallace Smith, has been closed for modernization work which will completely change the interior.

Projection Local Host At Convention Party

THE PROJECTIONISTS' local of Rochester, N. Y., held a clambake the night of the second day of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers convention, especially for visiting projectionists and manufacturers of projection equipment. S. K. Wolf, newly elected president of the Society, was also present, as were a number of city and State officials. A total of 150 persons attended, among them the following:

Herbert Griffin and P. A. McGuire, International Projector Corporation; W. C. Kunzmann and E. R. Geib of National Carbon Company; Carl ("Enarc") Brenkert, J. E. ("Peerless") McAuley, Harry ("Mogul") Strong, Glen Humphries, J. J. Finn, and the following projectionists:

Theodore P. Hover, Lima, O.; Charles Pashley, Cambridge, Mass.; Dale Danielson, Russell, Kan.; Messrs. Seeley and Rose, Syracuse. Also present was F. H. Richardson. Louis Townsend was the master of ceremonies.

The Use of Fabrics for Theatre Interior Decoration

● Examining into the adaptability of woven and related materials to the peculiar requirements of the theatre, and suggesting practical schemes for them

By EUGENE CLUTE

THE USE OF fabrics for the interior treatment of theatres has increased rapidly during the past year, and it is interesting to note that this has been in spite of certain practical objections to such wall surfaces. These objections issue from those in charge of maintenance. On the other hand, the architect and interior designer have become rather enthusiastic, it would seem, about fabrics, while the acoustics engineer adds that in some parts of the auditorium, especially at the rear, a fabric is the best answer to the acoustical question, since it provides a decorative covering for sound-absorbent material of a kind particularly advised at these points.

It is not the purpose of this discussion to engage in a controversy, but to tell how fabrics are adapted to the theatre interior, economically, decoratively and acoustically, so that the theatre operator may judge for himself whether he wants to use fabrics in remodeling or for a new theatre, and so that he may have practical information concerning the selection of materials and the installation of them.

Many of the motion picture theatres opened during the past year show the extensive use of decorative fabrics on the walls of their auditoriums as well as in other spaces. Fabrics for the decoration of walls in theatres have been out of fashion for quite some time. Now, they are in again. There is a reason for their return to favor —rather there are several reasons: psychological, decorative, acoustical.

SUITABILITY OF FABRICS

The psychological or emotional effect produced by the use of a suitable decorative fabric on the walls of a theatre auditorium is the creation of a sense of richness, elegance and intimacy that it is difficult, if not impossible, to equal by any other means at so moderate a cost.

The wide variety of patterns and colorings available in fabrics for wall decoration make them especially desirable. It is possible to choose a fabric that will carry out the color scheme or character of design that is suitable for almost any theatre. And, it is possible to be sure in advance that the design and coloring in the fabric will be the same on the wall as in the sample, which is not always the case when a means of decorating is employed into the execution of which the artistic skill of the decorator's workmen enters—painting, for example. Painters having the necessary skill are not always available locally.

Stencilled all-over designs in paint, resembling fabric designs, are used on the walls of some of the best new theatre auditoriums and such stencilling is capable of producing very handsome and entirely satisfactory results. However, patterns can be woven in fabrics by machines and simply tacked on the walls for less than patterns of equal beauty can be produced by men working directly upon the wall, while the weave, the texture of a fabric, creates an impression in theatre patrons of warmth and luxury.

Though cotton-and-rayon damasks, which are particularly well adapted to auditorium walls, look costly and very rich when in place, fabrics of this type, 50 inches wide, cost in the neighborhood of $1.25 a yard, occasionally less.

In the rear portion of the auditorium and in the lounges and foyer, where the fabrics are closer to the eye and can be seen more clearly, a higher grade of material than is employed on the main spaces of the auditorium walls is usually desirable, but as the areas covered are smaller, the cost is not necessarily greater.

It is not possible to give any useful comparison of cost between fabric wall treatment and other means of decoration, excepting in the case of the particular theatre under consideration, owing to the varying conditions and requirements. Colorful, tastily patterned fabrics suitable to lounges, foyers and auditoriums are available at prices well under a dollar per square yard.

To use an expensive fabric, of the quality that is employed in covering the walls of How the Obsolete Christie Was Restored

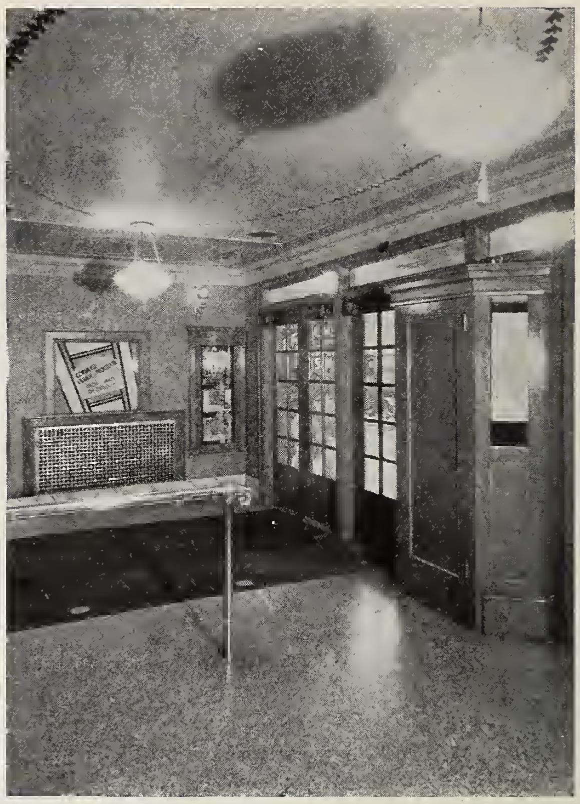
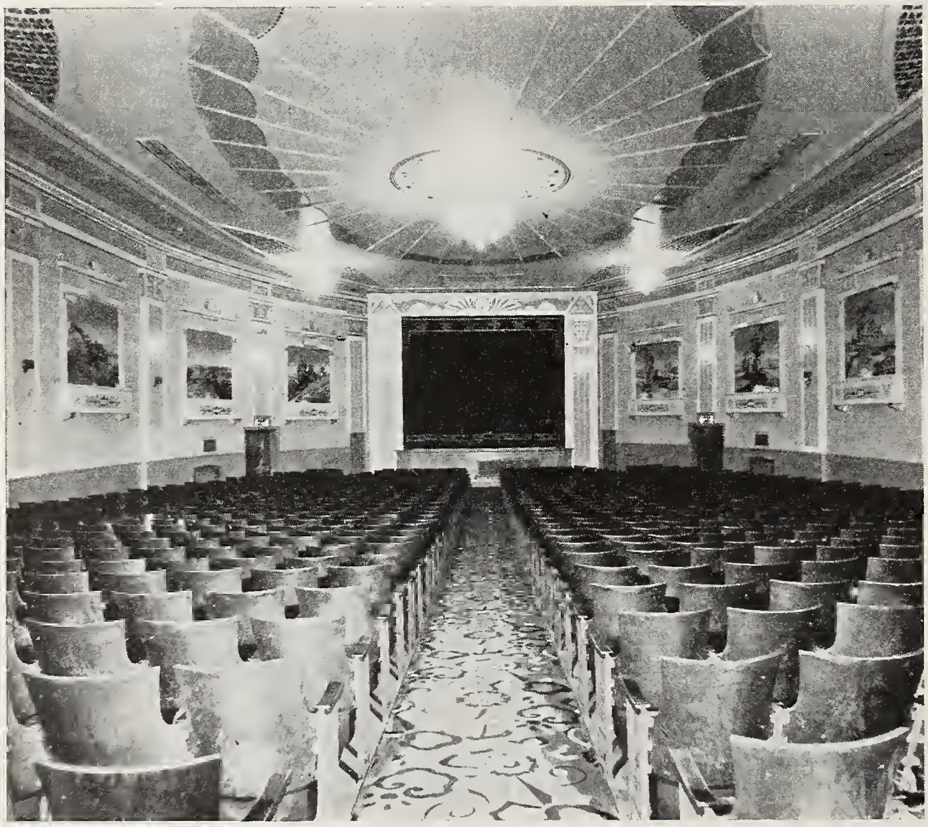
BEFORE REMODELING: The front.



BEFORE REMODELING: The lobby.



BEFORE REMODELING: The auditorium.

THE CHRISTIE theatre in Toronto was a pretty fair example of how motion picture theatres were designed a decade or so ago. In some alteration jobs, nothing is used but the shell of the building, but in remodeling the Christie theatre, most of the original remains.

With the exception of lowering the floor, no structural changes were required to alter this house into one of the finest theatres in northwestern Toronto. Six entrance doors became four. More display frames were added, and one of the widest marquees ever used on a Canadian theatre was erected.

This marquee is triangular in plan over the entrance; the balance consists of boxes for interchangeable letters flanking it on both sides over the complete width of the theatre, giving about 75 feet of letter space in each row.

The entire facade, below the marquee, has been covered with Vitrolite in three colors, polished black, tango red and primrose yellow. Toilet room windows were covered with metal grilles. All the existing display frames were replaced with new boxes illuminated with tubular lamps and four display frames were added.

THE LOBBY

The existing lobby was stripped to the walls. All the applied plaster ornament was removed and new plaster furring and ceiling troughs were built in to make a thoroughly modern design. The lighting installed is indirect, with 4 ceiling troughs running across the room. These troughs have metal sides of such shape as to conceal the source of light. The ceiling between the troughs is flat, with three fluted strips between the troughs. There is a window in the door of the box office for use in inclement weather, if desired. The floors are terrazzo in a three-color pattern.

The lobby color scheme employs cobalt blue walls and ceiling (white between the troughs) and chrome yellow trim, doors and display frames. The walls were stippled and the trim varnished.

The display frame unit incorporates an air-conditioning grille at the top, illuminated display frame, and a painted metal louvre concealing a radiator.

THE AUDITORIUM

The auditorium, of classic design with plaster moulding, was not changed, but only freshened with paint. The floor, however, was lowered as much as possible without underpinning the walls. The change did not affect the appearance, but greatly improved the sightlines.

With the lowering of the floor, a new proscenium arch was built. This arch houses two lines of neon tubing in red and blue. The original plaster design was not copied, but merely suggested in this arch. The inside line of neon is blue and the outside is red. The rear wall has been surfaced with acoustical tile.

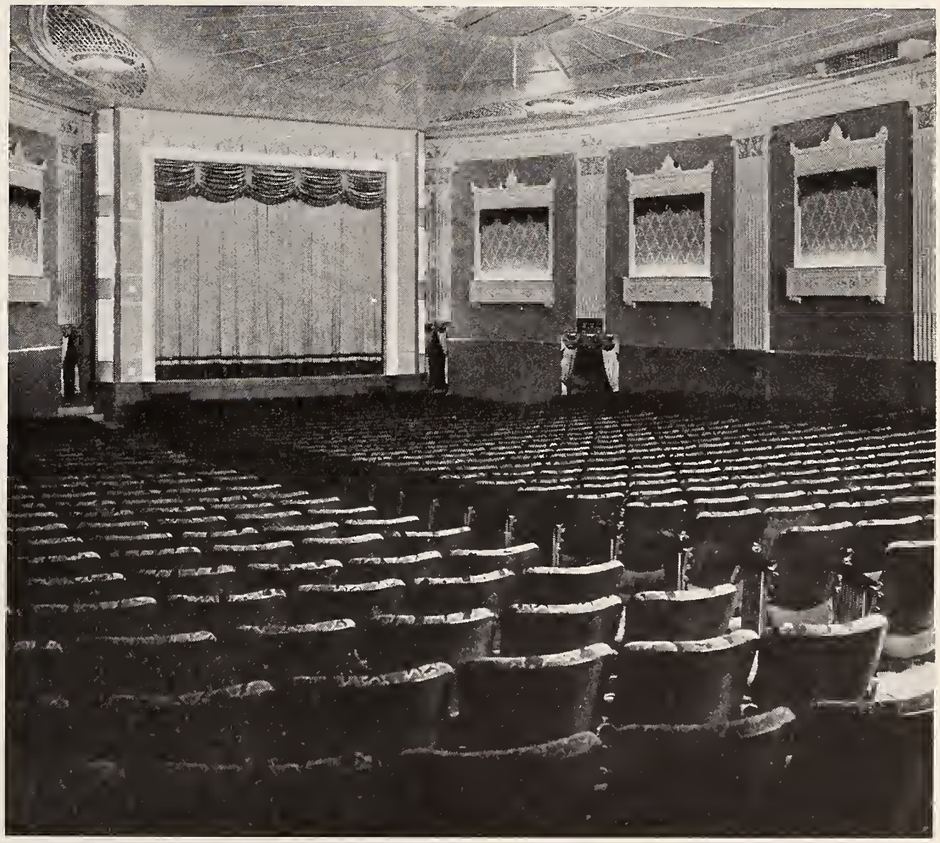
A new air conditioning system was installed, which necessitated hanging plaques for the proper diffusion of conditioned air. It was decided to place concealed bulb lighting in this space, between ceiling and plaques. Some of the plaques are round, others are rectangular in plan, so that as far as possible the original ceiling design has not been changed.

Four specially designed gold-plated and red fixtures for emergency lighting were placed on the side walls at the rear. All existing wall brackets were removed.

COLOR SCHEME

The auditorium walls have been painted in four colors, off white, gold, pale mulberry in two tones, and dark red. The ceiling design has been painted over in off-white, pink, gold and blue.

The delicate and discriminate touching up of the plaster ornament and the use of these colors, especially the white and gold, combined with the soft diffusion of light from the concealed neon tubing in the proscenium arch, and the indirect lighting from the ceiling plaques has distinctly freshened the interior into a neo-classic design.



AFTER REMODELING: The auditorium.

The lavatory accommodation for men consisted of one large room. This was divided into two rooms by a new 2-inch metal lath and plaster partition with an arched opening, making a small rest room. The walls were glazed in red, and the ceiling painted pale yellow.

The women's room had two wood sheeting toilet partitions in one corner. In revising this, the entire toilet area was enclosed with a fibre board partition with wooden door. The toilet partition doors were painted a bright red, the remainder of both rooms green and silver glaze at the walls, and pale yellow at the ceiling.—H. S. KAPLAN.

Precautions That Reduce Theft And Liability Insurance Rates

● The greater the loss experience, the greater the cost of protection—but here are some practices that make theatre owners a better risk

By FINTON H. JONES

THE EXHIBITOR, not the insurance company, pays for burglary and holdup losses. If the exhibitor eventually didn't pay enough to offset his losses, the insurance company wouldn't be in business! The exhibitor and not the insurance company makes the rates he has to pay.

The exhibitor unfortunate enough to be held up and robbed of several hundred dollars, or whose safe is looted of a substantial sum, may well feel a sense of satisfaction with the recollection that he has coverage. But he should keep in mind that in the long run he will pay out of his own pocket, in insurance premiums, for that loss. For the general experience in a given town or area governs burglary and holdup rates. These coverages are hard to get, even if the exhibitor is willing to pay the high premiums. Most companies insist on collateral lines in order to have a chance to come out on the deal.

One theatre man thought he was covered when thieves broke in and looted the safe of $200. But he had an unpleasant surprise when he found the insurance company wasn't liable because he had carelessly forgot to lock the safe. The loss was his.

PRECAUTIONARY PRACTICES

In a number of cases theatre men fail to bank for three or four days at a time. The money accumulates on the premises, and when there is a robbery the loss is three or four times what it should have been. Thieves study the habits of their intended victims and know these things. If a theatre man banks once or twice a day, the thief knows there isn't going to be a whole lot in the till to pay him for the bother of breaking in or holding up. Exhibitors banking frequently have a much better holdup and burglary loss experience than ones negligent in this respect.

A laudable custom of many exhibitors is to take the big bills from the cashier once or twice during the day. If the box office is held up, the loss is kept at a minimum.

In some smaller cities, exhibitors have a policeman or nightwatchman come around about the time the show is out and go with them to the bank, where they deposit the money in a night depository. A few passes to the watchman's family now and then is all it costs.

Those persons responsible for taking money to the bank should not go to the theatre for that purpose at the same hour every day. In several instances in Kansas City irregular hours have caused the failure of planned holdups. The robbers went into the theatre at what they thought was the manager's regular time for appearing, bound the janitor, and waited for a while. When the manager failed to appear, they gave up and went on.

LOCKING OF DOORS

A bad common practice among theatre men is to leave the doors unlocked before the theatre opens to the public. A thief can slip in and hide till the manager appears. One theatre used to experience morning and midday holdups frequently, so frequently it had difficulty in securing coverage. The thief slipped in through an open door while the janitor was in some other part of the house and waited behind the seats until the manager came in to go to his office. The thief followed and forced him to open the safe.

Doors should be locked until the show is opened. Theatre employes and the manager might either have keys or use a bell for summoning the janitor to let them in.

Booth doors ought to be locked. Then the robber doesn't know, because he can't see clear into the booth, how much is there; the cashier could hand out one box of cash to a robber, probably saving a large amount that has been kept out of sight.

Some theatres are equipped with slot safes in the booths. Thieves used to flood them to float the bills to the top where they fishhooked them out, but now these are equipped with a drain. Of course better type equipment, alarm systems, etc., will help lower burglary and holdup rates, but these are expensive, and for the average exhibitor other small, costless precautions that are observed widely and constantly, will do the job.

The point is that every deterrent the exhibitor can place in the way of the thief saves that much loss to the insurance company—and, eventually, to the exhibitor in way of premiums.

PROTECTION AGAINST CLAIMS FOR INJURIES

INSURANCE companies have more liability claims today than when theatre conditions were much poorer. This is due to fake claim racketeers, who are aided and abetted by unethical doctors and lawyers. Fake claimers pull up carpets, then fall into the aisle; or they slit the carpet and catch a heel in it. They fall or trip, especially on stairs. Usually they stage the accidents in the middle of the show; if they waited till the end, when everyone is moving out, no one would notice it.

The Independent Theatre Owners of Kansas City helped a bad situation of this kind two or three years ago when it hired an attorney and established a file where all information on liability claims was segregated and classified. In this way they discovered who were "repeaters," the lawyers and doctors who took that sort of case, and a similarity in types of fake accidents. With this ammunition they were able to smoke out most of the illegitimate, chronic claimants. This can be done in any city, small or large, where there are more than two or three theatres.

CLAIM "EPIDEMICS"

Only when the public becomes claim conscious do claims start climbing. Particularly in the smaller cities and towns, one good way to prevent the development of this general claim-mindedness is for the exhibitor who has such an accident to interest himself personally in the matter and show the injured person every courtesy possible.

In a small Kansas town a woman leaned on a glass-topped counter. It broke under her hand and inflicted a deep cut. The manager of the store immediately took charge, had the doctor in to treat the wound, called a taxi to take the woman home, and sent her flowers. Under similar circumstances many persons would have bustled her out, making light of her injury, and tried to get rid of her as quickly as possible. The woman naturally would resent such treatment and begin to figure how she could get even.

One not unusual method of getting even is to sue for damages, which she very likely would have got—all the way from $50 to $500. In this case, however, the manager made a friend. She liked so well the way she had been treated she later sent him flowers—and baked him a cake!

A similar type of accident occurred re-

Adaptations to Site and Structure

- Examining three theatre plans representing the remodeling of existing buildings in which conditions presented specific obstacles to efficiency of space.

By BEN SCHLANGER

IN MANY INSTANCES the plot of ground upon which a theatre building exists, or upon which a theatre is to be erected, may not seem to be adaptable for properly planned and improved motion picture exhibition. The same is true of existing buildings which may be available for transformation into theatres.

In many instances these available plots of ground or existing buildings may receive only passing consideration by exhibitors interested in new theatres, although an appreciable economy might be effected if they could be used. Also, there are many instances where available buildings offered for remodeling are at first thought unacceptable to the exhibitor because he imagines the construction costs necessary to adapt the building for his use will be excessive. Uusually these plots of ground or existing buildings are found in locations that are highly desirable.

It would be advisable to use careful reconsideration before eliminating such possible plots or buildings in desirable locations rather than resorting to more costly property in the desirable area, or the seemingly more adaptable property in a less desirable location.

For successful and profitable operation the theatre, of course, must be properly located, its construction cost must be limited, although all necessary accommodations for the patron must be provided. A minimum construction cost and land cost is usually imperative. Modern, scientific motion picture theatre planning enables us to adapt more readily the seemingly unadaptable properties, and also to keep down construction costs while doing so.

Illustrated here are three motion picture theatres, two of which have been recently completed, while the third now is under construction. In each example, a larger seating capacity and more accommodations for the patron are achieved within reasonable cost limits than would be apparently possible upon first investigation. In the Bell and Mapleton theatres illustrated, stores were newly included in the schemes to help carry the cost of maintaining the theatres. The addition of the stores was achieved without any loss to the theatre portion.

MAYFAIR THEATRE

The Mayfair theatre, formerly the Auditorium theatre, at Terryville, Conn., is a remodeled theatre. The mezzanine is new, with a capacity of 168 chairs. The main floor seats 688.

It should be noted that this mezzanine was included without the necessity of raising the existing roof construction, which is approximately only 21 feet above the orchestra floor, measured to the finished ceiling line. Neither was it necessary to lower the orchestra floor to gain height for the mezzanine. Many distinct advantages were achieved here by the use of the compound downward and upward curves of the orchestra floor, such as has been used in the Pix theatre in White Plains, N. Y., and other theatres. The mezzanine was added within the present structure, and excavation was avoided. Also avoided was a low level of the forward orchestra floor, an important factor here because of the possibility of floods. Moreover, proper sight lines were obtained from both the mezzanine and orchestra levels.

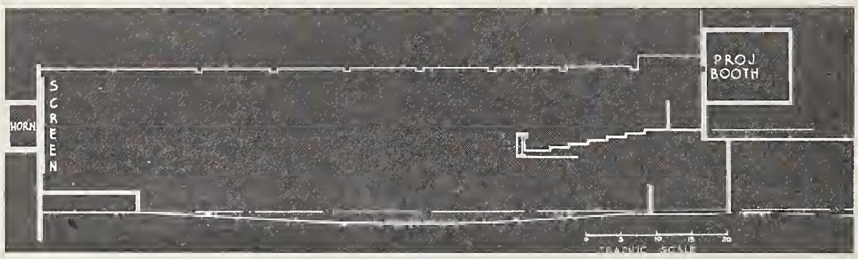
Schematic longitudinal section of the Mapleton theatre. Max Roche, Architect.



Longitudinal sketch of the Mayfair theatre, showing floor change.

The Maiyfair auditorium was redecorated in a scheme, by Vincent Fiori of New York, which has side walls of gold cloth on which figures are painted in silver, black and red, and overdrapes of rust-red conceal light sources below. Acoustical treatment is associated with the decoration at the ceiling and rear of the auditorium. The ceiling is of Celotex tiles, which has been tinted with non-bridging paint. At the rear the wall is laid with orange and red damask, which is backed by rock wool. The Mayfair is owned by Joseph Faith.

BELL THEATRE

The Bell theatre, another Brooklyn house and recently completed, has been fashioned from a building formerly used as a public food market. The orchestra floor has a capacity of 348 seats, the mezzanine holds 215 seats, making a total of 563 seats. There are two stores, and a large lounge room is located under the mezzanine floor and projection room. The toilet rooms were placed in an existing basement level, easily accessible from the main lounge. If all the seats had been placed on one floor, instead of according to the new arrangement with the addition of a mezzanine, it would have resulted in a loss of the main lounge and the stores, both of which were considered essential to the successful operation of this theatre. Here, too, the mezzanine level was constructed within the limits of the existing structural height, sufficient room having been provided by the design of the floor slope.

These views of the Mayfair auditorium show the front reversal of the floor slope, adopted in working out the plan for complete reseating. Chairs are by the American Seating Company.

The treatment of the Bell interior is that of bold simple architectural surfaces in white plaster finish, decoration consisting in lines of indirect lighting in colors, which soften the white plaster finish. The new seating is by American Seating Company.

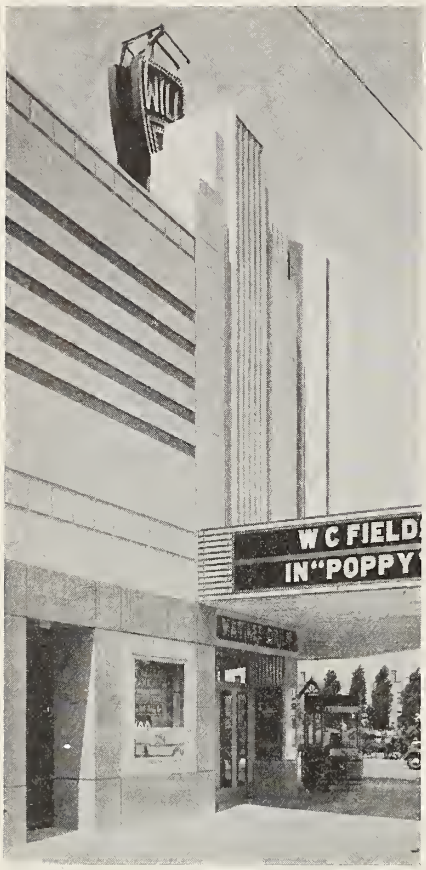
The ability to add a mezzanine to the theatre layout is important. It can provide additional space adaptable to stores which may be leased, space for lounge and foyer area so essential to modern theatres, and space for increasing the capacity.

The cost of mezzanine construction is not excessive when the planning does not include changes to the fundamental structure. There are many theatres in which the same advantages can be attained as illustrated in the theatres discussed here, and at a cost quite as reasonable.

MAPLETON THEATRE

The Mapleton theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y., will have its seating capacity increased from 450 to 597 seats. Stores are also being added, while a small mezzanine where smoking will be permitted, toilet rooms and a new projection room are among the changes. The entire cost of this remodeling, including air-conditioning and decorations, is $19,000.

The present building size is 40x90 feet, and the new size will be 40x130 feet. The existing roof is being left undisturbed, while the orchestra floor slope is also being retained. The existing floor slope would not have been suited to the new viewing distances. However, this was overcome by the use of the reversed curve in the new position of the orchestra floor near the screen. Here also the level of the exit court near the screen was more easily reached without the use of inside steps, which would have been undesirable.



The Will Rogers Theatre: An Architectural Tribute

DESIGNED AS a memorial to the late comedian, the Will Rogers theatre in Chicago is of modern classical architecture, with interior treatment of subdued modern coloration and pattern. It is the latest addition to the Balaban & Katz circuit and was designed by C. W. & George L. Rapp.

The theatre is located in a semi-residential neighborhood on the Northwest side. Construction is of steel and monolithic concrete. Besides the theatre, the building contains two stores. Overall dimensions of the structure are 132x126 feet.

The monolithic concrete provides the exterior surface as well as the wall structure, with the surface rubbed down and painted. Along the exterior are medallions, moulded in place, representing Will Rogers in his various roles. The lower exterior trim is in macotta, which is an enameled steel backed with concrete. The metal marquee is a part of the facade design, with attraction boards (by the Adler Sign Company) of silhouette type. The name sign combines an incandescent border with neon-illuminated letters.

The outer lobby has doors of glass and stainless steel. Walls are of concrete painted a cream color, while the ceiling is surfaced in gold leaf with a painted border in peacock blue. The lobby floor is covered with perforated rubber matting in a green and white pattern. Lobby illumination is supplied by four crystal and aluminum fixtures, one at each corner, set flat against the ceiling, each about 3 feet long.

The foyer has four large mirrors on the walls, and on each side wall is a mural, 7x7 feet, delineating Will Rogers in some of his screen roles. Except for the murals, the foyer walls are essentially done in mirrors. At the inner wall, flanking the doors to the auditorium, are panels of light oak veneer. This foyer serves as a main lounge as well as a traffic lane, and furnishings include large sofas of light wood frame and yellow and red covering. The foyer is carpeted in a light green broadlook having a dark green border. Foyer lighting is entirely indirect, the light sources being concealed behind aluminum panels 16 inches long and 8 inches wide, set flush with the wall.

There is no men's lounges, only toilet accommodations, but a women's cosmetic room has been provided, semi-circular in shape and done in pastel pink.

The auditorium measures 129 feet wide, while from the rear wall to the screen platform it is 121 feet deep. The walls are of haydite concrete tile, which was selected partly because of its sound absorptive characteristics. These have been painted with a pattern in tan, pink, coral and cream in water color. The proscenium arch is of concrete.

Auditorium illumination is by means of bracket fixtures of a semi-circular pattern with frosted glass.

Additional light sources have been con-

The Theatre Must Be Kept Modern

Says MORGAN WALSH

THE MOTION picture theatre is the most modern retail institution in the world, insists Morgan A. Walsh, dynamic vice-president and general manager of Redwood Theatres, Inc., important circuit headquartering in San Francisco, and having many affiliated groups of houses. And he holds that to keep it in its present proud position, the motion picture theatre must be kept just a step ahead of the business procession.

A few glances around his office reveal numerous plans for new theatres and others for remodeling and re-equipping existing ones. One learns of a commitment of a hundred thousand dollars for this city, two hundred thousand for another, and quite surprising sums for communities not to be classed as large—all to keep entertainment on a modern plane. The best part of it is, the plans go through, the new houses are erected and the old ones are modernized—with a smoothness that is refreshing.

"We do not operate our theatres on the so-called 'chain' or 'circuit' plan," volunteered Mr. Walsh. "Rather, they are operated as a group. A 'chain' business is predicated largely on the idea of increased buying power, permitting it to buy cheaper, whether of film service, supplies or labor. We do not believe in this.

"Our idea is that through group operation we can be better retail merchants of entertainment, for that is exactly what we are, and give better service to the public. Through group operation we are in a position to give a better balance of quality to each theatre commensurate with admission price.

"Where we have more than one theatre in a town, we select one where the picture makes the policy. This enables us to run pictures of real merit longer than would otherwise be the case and permit more people to see them. This policy draws patrons from a wider territory and helps other retail merchants. This brings larger returns to us and to producers of better pictures and makes possible better and more modern theatres.

• ONE OF A SERIES OF INTERVIEWS WITH • INTERESTING CINEMA FOLK

"The public no longer goes blindly to the theatre, feeling that whatever is offered will be satisfactory. It selects its entertainment so carefully that real features gross more than ever, while standard program pictures gross less. We believe that the newspaper forms the best medium of advertising, and we believe in featuring the attractiveness of our theatres as well as the entertainment we have to offer.

"We do not permit our theatres to deteriorate but try to keep each house in good shape. As retail merchants of entertainment we do not sell a tangible article of definite cash value. Rather, we sell a stimulation of human emotion, and the surroundings we offer must be as agreeable as possible. Only by offering comfort and beauty can we be sure that patrons really enjoy the efforts that have been put into the filming of the modern picture."

Many of the managers of the twenty-one houses in the group directed by Mr. Walsh have been brought up from the ranks and he is constantly on the lookout for new and promising talent. Few have served other exhibitors. It has been found advisable to train men for these responsible posts within the organization. Most of the theatres are located in comparatively small communities and it has been found that the best managers are men who have been brought up in such communities.

Mr. Walsh is a firm believer in cooperating in civic affairs, particularly when pleasure can be brought to unfortunates. Throughout the group of theatres, work of this kind is carried on, particularly during the holiday season. That this is appreciated is shown again and again. When the theatre operated at Woodland was destroyed by fire a few months ago, the school department came to the front with the offer of a school auditorium for theatre purposes until a new house could be made ready. The American Legion Hall was also offered and has since been used for the purpose.

A rather ambitious program of construction and modernization is now under way. A new 1,600-seat house is being erected at Modesto, and the capacity of two others is being increased at a cost of about $175,000. A 1,000-seat house is being built at Eureka, and another is being remodeled at a combined cost of $200,000. A 1,000-seat house is being erected at Woodland, and the old post office building is being transformed into a 500-seat theatre, the estimated cost of the two being $175,000. New houses are being planned for Marysville and Yuba City.

An order for new sound equipment for fourteen theatres has been placed, and installations have been made in three. The rest of the equipment will be in place by the end of the year. Ten new marquees have been bought for existing houses, and eight are already in position. Five of the theatres have been completely reseated this year. Reseating, in fact, is treated as something of a consistent maintenance matter. By an arrangement with the American Seating Co., an expert of this concern visits all the theatres and keeps in touch with their requirements.

Morgan A. Walsh, who now is 45, has been associated with the motion picture industry since 1909. He was with the Laemmle Service at Omaha when Westerns ruled and two-reelers were ambitious productions. When the Fox Film Corporation was organized, he cast his lot with it and later became branch manager at Los Angeles. Getting exhibitor's fever, he took over a first-run theatre at San Diego and operated it about a year. The state-right field then proved alluring and he secured the Warner Brothers franchise for California, Nevada, Arizona and the Hawaiian Islands. He sold his interests to this firm when it acquired Vitagraph, and for a time managed the San Francisco exchange.

In 1931 he took over the T. & D. Theatre in Oakland, at that time the second largest house on the Pacific Coast, and a year later became associated with George M. Mann, who had several theatres in Northern California. The list of houses

About People of the Theatre

NEWS OF THEIR ACTIVITIES REPORTED FROM ALL SECTIONS AND BRIEFLY TOLD

James Frank, Jr., has resigned as assistant to the manager of the RCA Photophone sales division to become assistant sales manager of the International Projector Corporation. Mr. Frank joined RCA in 1928, assisting in the organization of the installation and service department as commercial engineer.

J. Fletch Lankton, Peoria architect, is building a new 700-seat theatre to be called the Beverly. George Kerasotes of Springfield has leased the new house for a long period and expects to open it on Thanksgiving Day.

Lester Simansky and Louis Kuttnauer of the Midwest Theatre Supply Company, Chicago, have moved their establishment to larger quarters at 1223 South Wabash Avenue.

A. O. Ott will erect a new motion picture theatre in Kentwood, La., to cost approximately $25,000 and to have a seating capacity of 550.

Louis Sutter, head of the Athens Theatre Corporation, has opened the Princess, a new negro theatre, in Kansas City, Kan.

Nathan Vinegrad has completed plans for the construction of a 600-seat theatre in Jackson Heights, N. Y.

The Mode theatre, now under construction in Thomasville, Ga., will be opened November 21.

A new theatre at Upper Sandusky, Ohio, will be built by Leo T. Jones, operator of the Star theatre there.

A new theatre is to be erected in London, Ont., by the Central Theatre Company of Toronto.

Six new theatres have been opened in Texas. They include R. & R.'s 700-seat Amusu, Corpus Christi; R. C. Smoot's Palace, Gustine; the Park, 400-seater, operated by M. M. Lewis, in Houston; Tom White's 180-seat Rio, Marble Falls; E. A. Kelly's Roxy, seating 250, in Round Rock; and Karl F. Tate's 250-seat Ritz in Valley Mills.

F. S. and F. W. Meade of Kingman, Kan., have opened the Parama theatre there.

Elmer Dattolo, operator of the Happy Hour theatre in Springdale, Pa., will erect a new house there. He has engaged J. C. Nichols as the architect.

Hanson Theatres, Ltd., will construct a 1,200-seat theatre at Timmins, Ont.

The Academy of Music in Charleston, S.C., is to be demolished and a new theatre is contemplated by the Pastime Amusement Company.

A new theatre in Lake Village, Ark., will be opened soon by C. H. McCroskey.

L. W. Conrow, newly appointed general operating manager for Electrical Research Products, Inc., has named G. L. Carrington operating manager of all technical field activity east of the Rockies; and W. W. Simons, reporting to Mr. Carrington, will henceforth direct the servicing and installation activities of the company throughout the Great Lakes area. P. T. Sheridan, with headquarters in New York, will continue in charge of equipment planning, and J. P. Dinsmore, as merchandise manager in New York, will remain as head of Erpi's merchandising and warehousing activities.

C. A. MacDonald, who operates the Southland, Thurmania and Arlington theatres at Columbus, Ohio, is building a new theatre there to seat 1,000.

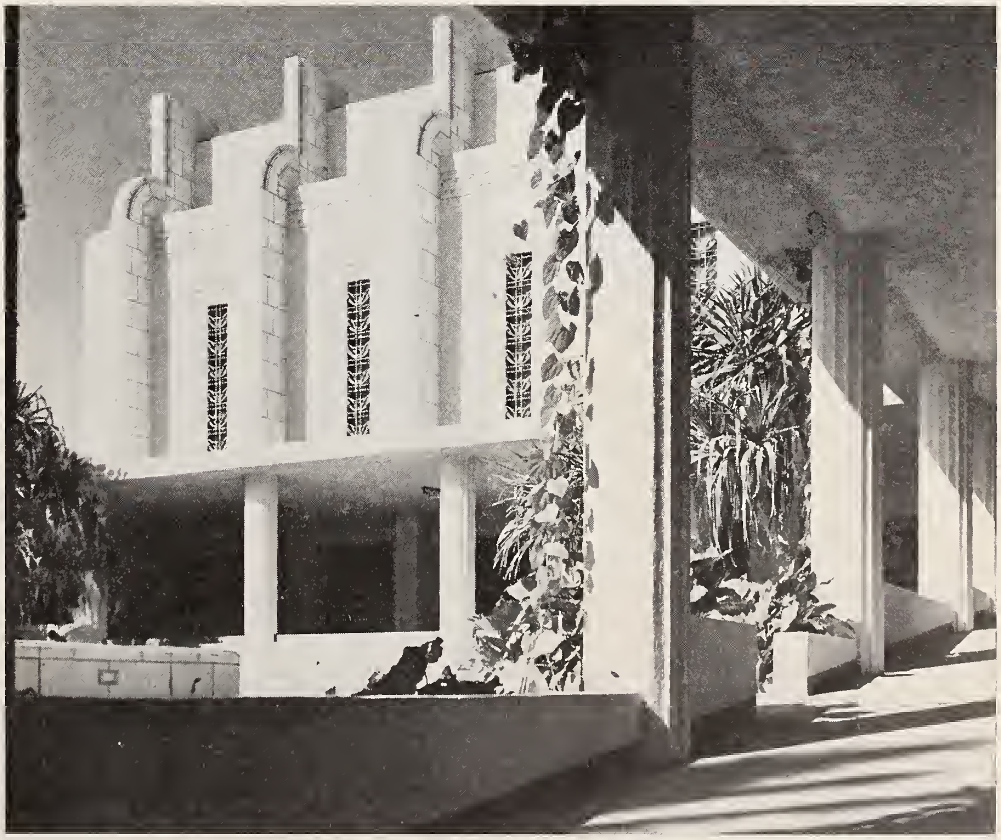
Chakeres Theatres, Inc., with headquarters at Springfield, Ohio, have leased a site at nearby Hillsboro, Ohio, on which an 800-seat theatre will be built.

The new Berea theatre in Berea, Ohio, built by P. E. Essick, Dan Stearns and Henry Fickenger of Cleveland, and Harry Flynn, has been opened. Mr. Flynn is resident manager.

Mary Farley has purchased the equipment of the Rose theatre, Tacoma, Wash., from J. R. McKinnell.

The Mercy Amusement Company has reopened the Roxy theatre, Toppenish, Wash., following alterations.

J. C. Allman has arranged to reopen the theatre at Canby, Ore., on completion of remodeling.



The new Waikiki theatre in Honolulu, one of the most unique, and certainly one of the most fetching to the eye, in American territory. The house, which was recently erected by the Consolidated Amusement Company of Honolulu, is set in a tropical garden and decorated with mural painting depicting the progress of that section of Hawaii from primitive Polynesian times to the modern culture of these people. An interesting feature of the Waikiki is its Fountain of the Stars, bearing the autographs cast in metal, of many Hollywood players.

H. Kuhn will erect a motion picture theatre at Lebanon, Ore.

Williams Peters will erect a $65,000 theatre at Manteca, Cal. Mark T. Jorgensen and Otto Deichmann of San Francisco, are the architects.

T. J. O'Leary will erect a 1,000-seat theatre at Rodeo, Cal., to cost $60,000. The architect is A. A. Cantin of San Francisco.

John B. Price, one of the early pioneer motion picture exhibitors of Missouri, died last month from injuries he sustained in a fall down a flight of stairs at his home.

The Annex Theatre in Gardenville, Mo., has been reopened following extensive remodeling and redecorating.

A new theatre to be operated by Harp & DeLasse in New Orleans, La., will be called Baby Grand.

The Jefferson Amusement Company, of Beaumont, Tex., has bought the Lyric theatre at Port Neches, Tex., and has re-equipped it.

Central States Theatres has opened a new theatre at Estherville, Ia., and plans to open the Boone theatre at Boone, Ia., about October 24. Weathearall & Harrison of Des Moines, were the architects for both houses.

J. J. Kametz has opened Rex, a new theatre, at Burlinghame, Kan.

W. H. Webb, operator of the Webb theatre at Shelby, N. C., has leased the new Rogers theatre there, erected at a cost of $52,000.

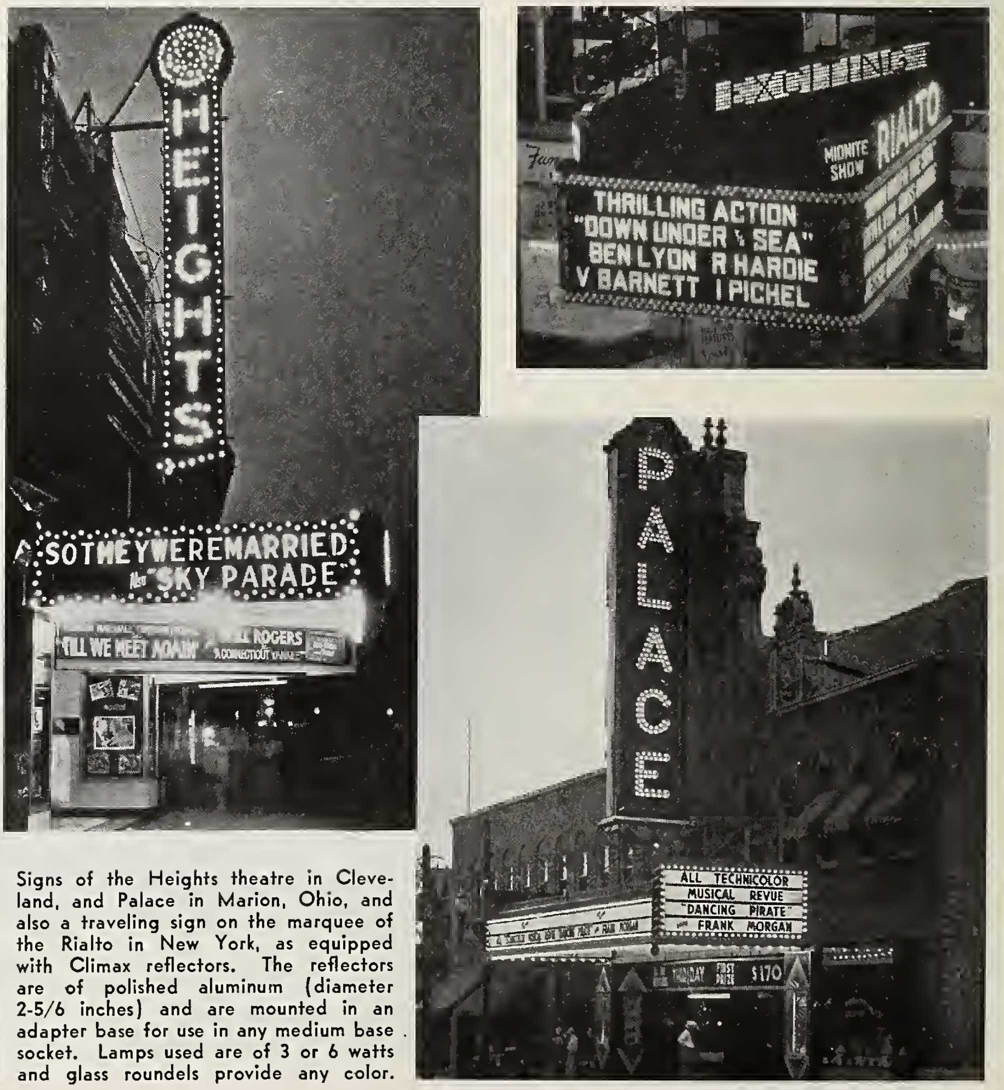
Don Landers and Bob Moore have acquired the Radio theatre at Harrisburg, Ark.

George H. Bucher has been elected executive vice president of the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, with headquarters at the home office in Pittsburgh, Pa.

G. L. Rose has opened a new theatre at Freewater, Ore.

B. E. Fisk has purchased the Rivoli theatre at Rockaway, Ore.

William R. and Albert Forman have purchased the Granada and Columbia theatres in The Dalles, Ore., from G. E. Matthews.



Signs of the Heights theatre in Cleveland, and Palace in Marion, Ohio, and also a traveling sign on the marquee of the Rialto in New York, as equipped with Climax reflectors. The reflectors are of polished aluminum (diameter 2-5/6 inches) and are mounted in an adapter base for use in any medium base socket. Lamps used are of 3 or 6 watts and glass roundels provide any color.

B. C. Steele has redecorated both the Kent theatre at Kent, Ohio, and the Ravenna theatre at Ravenna.

D. R. Bly of Conneaut, Ohio, has plans for a 500-seat theatre in Ashtabula. The architects are Potter & Bremmer of Cleveland.

The Liberty theatre, Coalinga, Calif., is being remodeled and will be opened under the management of J. J. Partridge.

Edwin Atkins and Miss Ruth Knacke have purchased the El Dorado theatre in Placerville, Cal., from the Mother Lode Amusement Company.

William E. Chamberlain, for many years secretary of the Berkeley Musical Association, recently celebrated his first anniversary as a motion picture exhibitor. He operates the Campus theatre at Berkeley, Cal.

D. P. Rathbone has opened the New theatre at Pasadena, Tex.

W. Stoeppleman will open a new theatre, as yet unnamed, at Silsbee, Tex.

The Leon theatre, a colored house, in San Antonio, Tex., has been reopened.

Ferd Midelburg will construct a $150,000 theatre at Logan, W. Va. The architects are Meanor and Handloser of Charleston.

The Wembley Amusement Company of Martinez, Cal., has transferred its principal place of business to San Francisco.

The Crystal theatre in Salinas, Cal., has been reopened with W. A. Gallemore as manager.

The Fox theatre in San Francisco, the largest theatre west of the Mississippi, has again been taken over by Fox West Coast Theatres, to operate under the supervision of A. M. Bowles, Northern California district manager. The house was originally opened in June 1929. Herman Kersken has been named resident manager.

The Amazon theatre in San Francisco, affiliated with the Golden State Theatre Circuit, is to be remodeled at a cost of about $7,000. The architect is A. A. Cantin.

W. A. Affleck who has been operating the Orpheus in Halifax, Nova Scotia, for the past eight years is retiring and the house will be operated by the Halifax Theatres Co., Ltd., who have have taken over the theatre on a long term lease. The new company was incorporated for the purpose of acquiring this theatre. Its president is F. G. Spencer, veteran theatre operator of Saint John.

READ WHAT OWNERS SAY ABOUT G-E COPPER OXIDE RECTIFIERS

G-E Copper Oxide RECTIFIERS For Motion Picture Projection have been installed in hundreds of theaters throughout the country. In every case, improved projection, reduced current-costs and increased profits have resulted. The following statements are typical:

"In our theater, these Rectifiers are pulling 45 amperes, an increase of 15 amperes over the old type .... Rectifiers, thereby giving us a finer, brighter and more defined picture. At the same time we increased our screen 25 per cent. This, however, has not increased our power bill, in fact it has shown a slight decrease."

"Referring to the G-E Copper Oxide Rectifiers we installed in our three theaters, I am happy to advise you that they are more dependable and much more economical than ...., and as far as durability is concerned, I believe that they will outlast any ...."

You can get similar results. G-E Copper Oxide Rectifiers are available in two standard sizes: 40-50 amperes for 6-7 mm trim; 50-65 amperes for 6.5-8 mm trim. Other ratings may be built to order. For operating a spotlight, two units can be connected in series.

Improve projection . . . increase attendance and profits of your theaters . . . reduce current-costs. A G-E Copper Oxide Rectifying Unit saves from 5 to 10 cents per hour in cost of current alone. Get full information. Mail the coupon NOW.

Operation and Maintenance Factors In Gas-Tube Lighting for Theatres

● The widespread use of so-called "neon" illumination for theatres advises some knowledge of it by managements. Here are its characteristics

PERHAPS THE most significant selling feature of any theatre is the theatre front. No one can question the statement that the marquee and vertical sign are the most predominating elements of a theatre front. Without marquee or vertical sign the theatre becomes very inconspicuous and commonplace in any commercial location after dark.

In traveling about the country and talking to theatre managers of their operating problems, it becomes very apparent that there is plenty of room for more knowledge of the gaseous luminous tube lighting, more generally referred to as neon. Neon is but the name of one of several gases used in the tubes. Most of the gases used are obtained by breaking down the atmosphere, yes, just the air we breathe.

KINDS OF GAS FOR TUBE LIGHTING

THE ATMOSPHERE is made up of many different gases, some in rather large proportions and others which are not so plentiful and generally referred to as the rare gases. It is these rare gases that are used in luminous tube lighting. Briefly and approximately, these rare gases are neon which occurs in the atmosphere in the proportion of one part of neon to about 80,000 parts of air; argon in the proportion of one part to about 107 parts of air; helium in proportion of one part to about 245,000 parts of air; krypton in proportion of one part to 20,000,000 parts of air; and xenon in proportion of one part to about 70,000,000 parts of air. It is easy to see that the last two named, krypton and xenon, are truly rare gases—as a matter of fact these two gases are so rare that for years they have been considered uncommercial, and the writer knows of no really commercial use of them in signs. They have, however, been studied in laboratories and we know their characteristics, but there is little benefit to be derived in describing those characteristics here. Suffice to say that xenon, the rarest of the gases, is many times more costly than gold.

In addition to the above mentioned rare gases, mercury vapor is used in tubes commercially for sign work. In most of the blue and green luminous tubing used today mercury vapor is used. Most of us can well remember the difficulties we had in cold weather with the blue tubing of only a few years ago. This trouble was caused by the cold contracting the mercury gas thereby reducing the pressure and consequently the distribution of the mercury gas within the tube. Nowadays, this has been largely overcome by mixing some of the other rare gases with the mercury in the tube.

Usually the gases mixed with the mercury are argon and neon, or argon, neon and helium. These gases form a support for the mercury gas and when the current is turned on these rare gases ionize first, generating some heat which vaporizes the mercury. However, mercury persists in being a trouble-maker, because in the ionized state it is chemically very active. It combines with any impurities that might be in the tube or with the electrodes and this activity tends to discolor or blacken the tubes rather quickly. In the preparation of mercury tubes the greatest care must be taken in cleaning the tubes with acid and in bombarding the tubes, then the purest mercury obtainable should be used.

NEON

Neon gas is undoubtedly the most widely used of the rare gases for sign work. It is probably for this reason that all luminous tubing is frequently referred to as neon tubing. Neon gas is colorless and odorless. As was pointed out earlier in this article, neon gas is not the commonest of the rare gases, and its particular electrical characteristics present certain problems which are not the easiest to overcome, but its color has a universal appeal. The red light of the neon gas is highly penetrating, particularly so in bad, hazy or light foggy weather, which is the reason why it is used for aviation and marine beacons.

It has been difficult to learn from any authoritative source the exact composition of neon light; however, we can feel sure that red and orange predominate, and the writer has been told that there are traces of yellow and even green in it.

Neon has become of increasing use in commercial sign work, because of its brilliance and because of the cheapness of operation. To compare red neon with incandescent lamps: an 11 mm. red tube will give 70 lumins per foot and consume 5.5 watts per foot, while a 10 watt incandescent lamp will give 100 lumens of light. A 10 watt incandescent lamp will consume almost twice the power and increase the light effect only about 43 per cent. This means that it would require about 25 feet of 11 mm. red neon tubing to obtain the equivalent lighting effect of a 150 watt lamp. But the above comparison was made with red neon as against white incandescent. In comparing the neon with red incandescent the result is even more in favor of the neon. Neon will provide 10 lumens per watt in the red while the incandescent will only put forth 2 lumens per watt in the red range.

ARGON

Argon gas was first used in the incandescent lamp. It was found that a lamp filled with argon gas burned more brightly than the vacuum lamp. It was only a few years ago that gas filled lamps were hailed as a great step forward in the incandescent lamp industry. Today most of the higher wattage incandescent lamps are filled with argon gas. Argon gas is an excellent con-

BAKELITE VARNISH: There is a material on the market that really has a place in theatre maintenance. It is a varnish made of bakelite. This material provides a final surface for any paint job that can be cleaned repeatedly without destroying the protective coat. It also resists the elements, rain, snow and sun to a remarkable degree. Even alcohol will not destroy a surface finished with this material.

Bakelite base varnish can be used as a vehicle for color in oil pigment which means that it can be applied as part of the final color coat. It covers about the same as any good spar varnish, that is, 450 to 550 square feet to the gallon.

It is an excellent material to use over a metallic paint in sea coast towns where the salt air quickly tarnishes any metallic paint surface. Its per gallon price is somewhat higher than the best grades of varnish but it has proved itself very much worth while, even at the higher price.

It finds its greatest need for exterior display frames, marquees and signs, all wood trim and wall surfaces to about seven feet above the floor line, and especially the walls and the wood or metal partitions in toilet rooms.

DIESEL ENGINES: Because diesel and gas engines are still the subject of many discussions as the prime movers for generating plants, I give you here a few basic definitions in preparation for a forthcoming article on engines.

INTERNAL-COMBUSTION ENGINE: An internal-combustion engine is any engine in which the working power medium consists of the products of combustion of air and a fuel supplied. This combustion, depending upon design, may either take place within the working cylinder or in an external chamber.

DIESEL ENGINE: A diesel engine is an internal-combustion engine in which the fuel is injected into the cylinder approximately at the moment when the compression within the cylinder is complete.

ENGINE CYCLE: The cycle of a diesel or other internal-combustion engine is the series of events beginning with the ignition of one charge of fuel into a cylinder and lasting to but not including the ignition of the next fuel charge to the cylinder.

FOUR-CYCLE ENGINE: A four-cycle engine is one in which the ignition takes place in each combustion space once in every four consecutive strokes, or saying it in a slightly different way, once in every two complete revolutions of the engine.

SINGLE ACTING ENGINE: A single acting engine is one in which the pressure of combustion (or compression) acts upon one end only of each of the pistons.

DOUBLE ACTING ENGINE: A double acting engine is one in which the pressure of combustion (or compression) acts upon both ends of the piston alternately.

TWO-CYCLE ENGINE: A two-cycle engine is one in which the ignition of fuel takes place in each combustion space once in two consecutive strokes, that is to say, once during each single revolution of the engine.

ductor for electricity but because of this characteristic it is comparatively of low efficiency when used by itself in a tube. Argon invariably is used to mix with neon or mercury as a carrier gas to aid and expedite the ionization of the other gases. Argon and mercury in a yellow glass tube give off the beautiful green light with which we are all familiar.

HELIUM

Helium is one of the lightest gases known and because of its non-explosive qualities has been used frequently in lighter-than-air aircraft. Helium may be obtained from other sources than from the atmosphere. Helium is used to produce a yellow or whitish light. Helium is not a good conductor for electricity and therefore it requires a higher voltage to produce a brilliant light. This particular characteristic has presented many problems and has retarded the use of helium in luminous tubing. Only about one-half the number of feet of helium tubing can be operated from a transformer as neon-filled tubing. This means that the operating cost of helium tubing is about on a par with incandescent lamps. Helium gas has required the development of special electrodes to reduce sputtering and fluctuation of the light.

In summing up, all the red, yellow, blue and green signs that we see today are dependent upon one or more of four gases: neon, argon, mercury vapor, and helium. We frequently see today tubing sold as "white neon." The effect is not a perfect white but shades somewhat toward a very pale blue. This effect is obtained primarily by the development of a special glass tube. This tubing is very expensive and unless the "white neon" is turned out by the very best shop, equipped with the latest type bombarding equipment, and worked by the most skilled craftsmen, it has in most instances proved highly unsatisfactory.

CHARACTERISTICS OF GLASS TUBING

GLASS TUBING is an important part of any neon display. Tubing for sign work is never larger than 15 millimeters, about ⅝ of an inch, and never smaller than 7 millimeters, about ¼ of an inch in outside diameter. The principal reason that larger tubing is not used is because of the current requirements, which would either increase the sizes of the transformers or so reduce the number of feet of tubing that could be operated from one transformer that it would make installations extremely awkward.

It is for this reason that for a given current and an equal number of feet of tubing a 15 millimeter tube will burn less bright than an 11 millimeter tube; and an 11 millimeter tube will burn less brightly than a 7 millimeter tube.

The pressure of the gas within the tube is another factor that affects the amount of current that will flow through the tube, and the amount of current affects the brilliance of the tube. Consequently it may be stated that the pressure within the tube affects the brilliance of the tube. With no desire to confuse the statement with regard to pressure it is proper to state here that the pressure in neon tubes is always less than atmospheric pressure. Atmospheric pressure is about 14.7 pounds per square inch. So, frequently, we think of any pressure less than atmospheric as being a vacuum, but in reality it is still pressure until an absolute vacuum is reached. In a successful neon tube the pressure and the voltage must be right, otherwise the life of the tube will be shortened or the light transmitted will be either too dull or too brilliant.

ELECTRICAL ACTION IN GAS LIGHTING

THE FOREGOING is preliminary to telling you what is believed to happen inside the tube. It is necessary to realize that the gas is made up of many millions of particles called molecules. Under usual conditions these molecules are electrically neutral. It is the accepted theory that each molecule is composed of electrons which are considered negative and ions which are considered positive. The fact that each molecule has as many electrons as ions is the reason why we say that the molecule is neutral; electrically it is "in balance." Now if something happens to that molecule to remove one or more electrons (negative) the ions (positive) outnumber the electrons and the molecule then becomes a positively charged electrical body.

The old law of electricity that like repels like and opposites attract opposites comes into effect and positive charged molecules repel other positive charged molecules, but positive charged molecules will attract negative charged molecules. As these positive charged molecules crash into the negative charged molecules the collision gives off light and this is the theory of the light emitted by the neon tube.

IONIZATION

This process explained here in rather unscientific language is known as ionization. The ionization of the gas is started and continually maintained by the passage of high voltage alternating current between the electrodes. The current, usually 110 volts, is furnished to specially built transformers which in turn transform the current by stepping up the voltage to the proper point for the operation of the particular tube. High voltage (12,000 to 15,000 volts) is required to start the ionization process, otherwise the positive ions and the negative electrons forming the molecule will not be torn apart, and the alternating current means that the two electrodes will be alternately positive and negative, thus causing great agitation among the millions of electrons and ions in the tube. Each time the electron and the ions crash together light is given off.

''BOMBARDING''

Earlier in this article the term bombarding was used. It is frequently heard in in any discussion on neon signs and it is important to have some conception of its meaning. The term bombarding as used here applies to a process of removing all impurities from the inside of the tube. This is best accomplished by passing a higher voltage than design operating voltage through the tube during the process of evacuating the tube. The electric current heats and vaporizes dirt and impurities and the vapors break down and ionize after the fashion described for neon gas. This bombardment of electrons and ions continues through the process of evacuating the tube. In brief, it is actually an electrical bombardment of the inside of the tube. Undoubtedly the most universal reason for the failure of neon is improper bombarding. Bombarding requires special equipment if it is to be well done.

The washing of tubes and electrodes in acid baths is not sufficient cleaning. The bombarding process because of the heat of the electric current gasifies all of the impurities and they are drawn off by the vacuum pump. The tube must be heated uniformly and all parts must be brought up to the right temperature. If the tube is not uniformly heated the cooler parts will collect the impurities thrown off by the warmer parts. The tube may be pumped, filled and sealed and appear perfect in all respects, but the impurities will in time be released and the tube will begin to lose color or turn black in spots. Theatre owners have a right to expect a one year's guarantee against discoloration of tubes resulting from improper bombarding.

The first commercial neon sign was displayed by Georges Claude in Paris in 1910. The industry is now only twenty-seven years old, which means that there is still a great amount of progress to be made. It has been estimated that last year the neon sign industry did a business approaching $50,000,000 here in the United States. Neon is new and it should be used in new modern ways. Many an old sign and marquee has been brightened up with the replacement of incandescent lamps by neon, but remained still an old sign. The ornateness of the older type signs does not lend itself to the simple beauty of neon. Neon being new demands new treatment to obtain the best results. Simplicity of line and masses of color are distinctive means of using neon. These points should be carefully studied in the design of neon displays. Generally speaking, the neon sign builders today are weak on design though many have solved the problem of manufacturing satisfactory tubing.

Neon can be used for interior lighting effects. The showmen of the country have not taken full advantage of neon for interior lighting in theatres. A few tubes of neon can create a great variety of color effects indoors by the simple means of throwing a few switches.

Neon is a theatrical lighting media when properly designed and installed. J. T. K.

Amplification and Speakers in New Western Electric System

• Describing the elements between the soundhead and the screen in "Mirrophonic" reproduction apparatus. The soundhead was described in the September 19th issue.

EACH ADVANCE in the art of sound motion picture presentation has placed added demands on the amplifiers of the sound system: greater reliability to assure continuous performance over long periods of time; more latitude with respect to frequency range, to more clearly convey the impression of naturalness; a further extension of volume ratio or output power, to permit the faithful reproduction of dramatic sound effects; reduction of background noise; convenience of operation; ease of maintenance; economy.

Two types of main amplifiers are used in the new Western Electric sound reproduction system—the 86 type, a combination voltage-power amplifier, which delivers an undistorted maximum power output of 15 watts and is used singly for the smaller installations; and for the larger installations, one or more of the 87-type amplifiers, added to the output of the 86-type. These units have a power output of 50 watts each. Where they are used, the 86-type functions as a "driver."

As shown in Figure 1, the 86-type has four stages, the three preliminary stages employing 262-A vacuum tubes resistance-condenser coupled, and the power stage employing two 300-A vacuum tubes in a push-pull arrangement. Transformer-coupling is used for the input to the first stage, and as input and output for the power stage. All amplifiers are entirely a.c.-operated, the plates being supplied from a 274-A vacuum tube which rectifies the high voltage supplied by the power transformer.

The power transformer is designed to operate from a primary supply voltage between 105-125 volts 50-60 cycles and may be operated continuously at room temperatures reaching as high as 110 degrees Fahrenheit.

To provide for future extension of sound system development, and to assure that adequate filtered direct current will be available for accessory equipment such as public address, hearing aids and a variety of other auxiliary apparatus, the "86" amplifiers are provided with excess power capacity and suitable connections from which one ampere at ten volts may be obtained for filament supply, and rectified and partly filtered plate currents of 5, 7.5 or 10.5 milliamperes at 400, 190 or 85 volts, respectively. This is sufficient to energize three Western Electric 80-A or 62-A amplifiers. Two small filter units have also been designed for providing the additional filtering required by the high voltage energy used for auxiliary amplifiers.

TUBE SUPERVISION

In a special circuit arrangement, a vacuum-tube test-meter, graduated to read in "percentage" of normal space-current values, is connected with each tube circuit in successive order by means of a rotary tube selector switch. To compensate for differences in the current values of the various types of tubes, shunts have been soldered into each of the circuits and the meter (known as the TA-4176) indicates the voltage drop across the several shunts. The "86" type amplifier is designed to operate from a 200-ohm impedance, while provisions may be made for operation into impedances ranging from 8 to 500 ohms. Continuous adjustment of gain is not provided, but fixed attenuators may be connected into the circuit by means of taps (see diagram, Figure 1).

Five-decibel attenuation is provided in the first stage; 10, 20, or 30 decibels in the second stage, and 10 decibels in the third stage. Connections from these taps are brought to a terminal strip beneath the chassis, where connections for the desired gain may be made. In addition, one or two of the preliminary stages may be cut out of the circuit. By these means the gain of the amplifiers may be adjusted in 5-decibel steps, from 38.5 to 98.5 decibels.

VOLUME EXTENSION

The amplification system is capable of delivering undistorted power in which the maximum volume exceeds the faintest sound by more than one hundred million times, by means of a "harmonic suppressor" or "electrical governor" that tends to maintain constant quality as the amplifier output power increases. Its action is automatic, it contains no moving parts. Through its use, vacuum tubes are operated at high efficiency, so smaller tubes are employed.

VACUUM TUBES

Since all amplifiers depend, fundamentally, on their associated vacuum tubes for their operational characteristics, a brief discussion of the new 300-A and 262-A vacuum tubes is pertinent here. The 300-A vacuum tubes employed in the power stage of the amplifiers are three-element tubes with a plate impedance of the order of 700 ohms. Two of these tubes in a suitable push-pull circuit are capable of closely approaching the theoretical limit of efficiency and harmonic generation for the ideal vacuum tube in Class A amplifier service; namely, 50% efficiency with no harmonic generation.

In the 86-type amplifiers the plate-circuit efficiency of the power-stage vacuum tubes, with negative grids, is approximately 47% over the frequency range where the harmonic generation is less than 1%. By allowing 5% harmonic generation, the efficiency of the vacuum tubes is increased to 57%, and the output level to 18 watts, an increase of 20%.

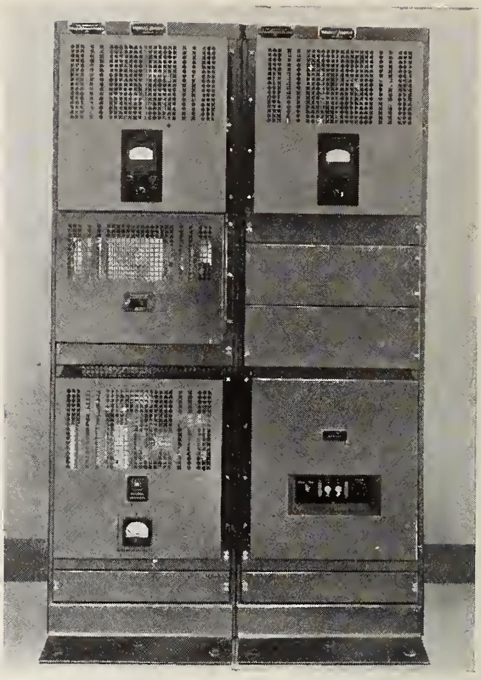

Fig. 4. Amplifier rack assembly.

NOISE LEVEL CONTROL

The use of an amplifier is sometimes limited by the noise level in the output circuit, the maximum gain of high-gain amplifiers being frequently limited by the thermal noise generated in the input circuit. In addition to thermal noise, high-gain, a.c.-operated amplifiers must contend with interaction, or cross-talk, between the power and voice circuits, the fundamental or harmonic frequencies of the power circuit being picked up in the circuit elements or wiring, or generated in the vacuum tubes, due to their operation on alternating current. To keep such noise at a sufficiently low value, the 262-A tube, which was designed particularly for low noise level, has been employed in the preliminary stages of the 86-type amplifiers, and in addition, the shield of the first-stage vacuum tube is provided with a permalloy liner.

Another source of noise in high-gain amplifiers is induction between the power and input transformers, which has led some designers to eliminate input transformers, the users furnishing their own and taking what precautions are necessary to prevent the introduction of noise. In the 86-type amplifiers, however, input transformers are incorporated in the amplifier, and the magnetic pickup from the power transformers is minimized by providing the input transformer with internal and external permalloy shields. These provide an attenuation of 40 decibels to induced noise. In this way, the equivalent attenuation between power circuit and the plate circuit is maintained at approximately 137 decibels.

As a result, the noise level is approximately 25 decibels below zero level unweighted—that is, without corrections for the deficiency of the ear with respect to hearing the various frequencies unequally; or 44 decibels when weighted for the audibility threshold characteristic of the ear. The volume range between the noise level and the overload limit is therefore approximately 80 decibels.

The mechanical construction of the 86-type amplifier is of the chassis type. All component apparatus is mounted on the chassis in such a manner that the terminals and wiring are concealed. The chassis carries the meter switch as shown in Figure 2. The chassis assembly is mounted in a perforated metal cabinet, arranged for either wall or rack mounting and measuring about 19 inches high and 10½ inches deep (see Figure 4).

HIGH-POWER UNIT

The 87-type high power amplifier (Figure 3) was designed to meet a demand for the high volume required in the larger theatres. This amplifier provides a gain of 10 decibels and a power output capacity of 50 watts when used with the 86-type voltage-power amplifier as a driver. When more than 50 watts is required, one or two additional 87-type amplifiers are connected in tandem with the first unit, giving increased power outputs of 100 or 150 watts. The "87" is a single stage push-pull amplifier employing two Western Electric 284-D vacuum tubes. The amplifier is entirely a.c.-operated, the plate supply being furnished by a pair of Western Electric 249-B high voltage mercury-vapor type tubes as a double half-wave rectifier, and the filament supply from the low voltage secondary of the filament transformer.

Like the remainder of the "Mirrophonic" system, the 87-type amplifier operates from a standard power supply of 105-125 volts, 50-60 cycles. It requires a maximum of 400 watts and may be operated continuously at room temperatures as high as 110° Fahrenheit.

The input and output transformer windings are brought out to terminal strips so that all regularly used impedance values are readily available. To aid in servicing, and also to make it unnecessary for the projectionist to remember plate current values, switches are placed in each circuit to permit of checking the 284-D vacuum tubes by a percentage meter, the scale of which is graduated to read percentages of normal or correct value, which is taken as 100%.

There is a means for discharging the high voltage condensers into the rectifier circuit when the power switch is opened, so that the amplifier may be maintenanced without danger of shock.

The "87" is arranged for rack mounting, the component apparatus being mounted on both sides of a steel panel and protected by perforated metal cabinets equipped with removable covers. As a safeguard against accidental contact and shock, a door switch is provided so that when the front cover is removed the plate or high voltage circuit is opened.

Monitoring power is not taken directly from the main amplifier system, but from a separate amplifier containing an exterior volume control adjustment, and a self-contained loudspeaker (see Figure 5). The projectionist may therefore make adjustments for best listening conditions.

SPEAKER SYSTEM

The increased power of the new amplifiers has necessitated speakers of corresponding capacity. Some three years ago, speakers of special acoustic and electrical characteristics were demonstrated experimentally, by the Bell Telephone Laboratories, as part of a "stereophonic" music reproduction system. The loudspeaker of the new Western Electric equipment known as the di-phonic speaker system, incorporates the basic design features of those speakers, departing from them as advised by the specific requirements of motion picture work.

The principles of the design may be presented in this way: It is well known that unless in some way corrected, a loudspeaker is directional in its characteristics at the higher frequencies. Low-frequency sounds spread in all directions from the mouth of the horn, but the higher frequencies tend to concentrate into a beam projected directly ahead of the horn, and the width of the beam becomes narrower and narrower as the frequency increases. When this is the case, the audience in a large auditorium never quite hears the proper blending of frequencies. Those directly in front of the horn receive too great a proportion of the higher frequencies, while those on the sides receive too much of the low frequencies. To avoid this effect, the elements of the "di-phonic" speaker — namely, the multi-cellular element and the bi-cellular low-frequency element—are constructed with diverging sections which spread the sound over an angle sufficient to cover the largest theatre auditorium (see Figure 6). The rated range is of the order of 80 decibels, or 100,000,000 to 1.

The speaker system is designed for unit installation. Disconnect plugs are provided on all speaker system power and sound cables, and heavy protective guards enclose the bi-cellular receiver units (see Figure 7).

Loudspeaker field current is supplied by a separately fused power unit. A special receiver test set is installed for the convenient testing of all receiver units, and each of the speaker units may be operated singly.

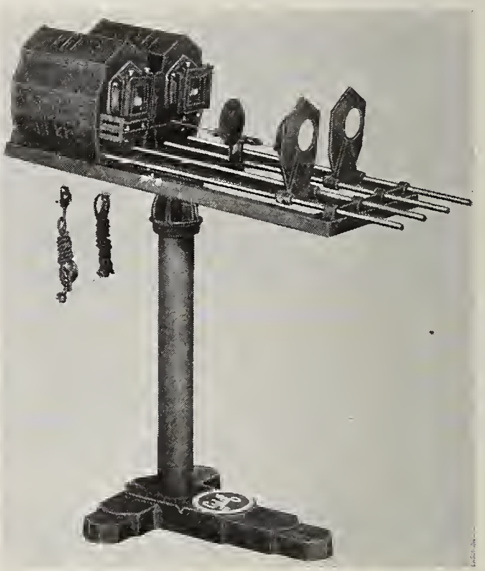
New Adjustable Double Dissolver Of Unit Design

A NEW dissolver for slide and effect projection, with a number of new features in equipment of this type and capacity, has been designed by the Golde Manufacturing Company of Chicago. It has a substantial base and stand, and a cast table on which are mounted the several units. The lamp element is adapted to 500-, 750- and 1,000-watt lamps. Lamphouses are adjustable forward and backward and sideways for centering on screen for any length of throw. All adjustments are provided within the lamphouse. Projection lens mounts have full horizontal and lateral adjustments.



Insertion of slides merely requires dropping the next slide and flipping a lever—the slide previously projected drops to the bottom.

The unit is finished in baked crystal with chromium plating trim. Projection distance up to 175 feet can be handled with this projector.

New Matched Units With Two Soundhead Models

TWO NEW models of soundheads, and a new amplifier have been developed by the Ballantyne Company of Omaha, Neb.

The Master series features include a direct-connected motor, a gyroscopic filter providing smooth film travel through the scanning beam, heat-proof exciter lamp socket, new type guide tension roller, and a new optical system. In this soundhead all mechanical contact with the emulsion side of the film rotates with the film.

The Super series soundheads provide for all film travel on revolving surfaces. The soundhead is driven by a direct-connected ball bearing motor which is integral with soundhead. Projector drive proceeds through a gear train of steel on fiber gears.

The amplifier uses two 6L6 tubes in the output stage, delivering 26 watts.

The volume control is stepped in decibels, each position of the control changing the output of the amplifier, plus or minus two decibels from the adjacent step.

Amplifier-Power Unit of Small Theatre Design

AMPLIFIER-POWER supply equipment designed especially to meet the operating and location conditions of many of the smaller theatres, is a unit measuring 7x9x17 inches and weighing but 22 pounds developed by the Wholesale Radio Service Company of New York. The power output is 15 watts.

Simplicity is provided by combination, in the single small unit mentioned, of 15-watt amplifier, a.c. exciter lamp power supply, d.c. speaker field power supply, and three ranges of photoelectric cell voltage supply. The reproduction range is from 50 to 10,000 cycles. A double-tap power transformer primary permits adjustment for various line power conditions.

equalizer circuit, and permits both adjustment of low-frequency response and very substantial modification of the sound at the higher frequencies.

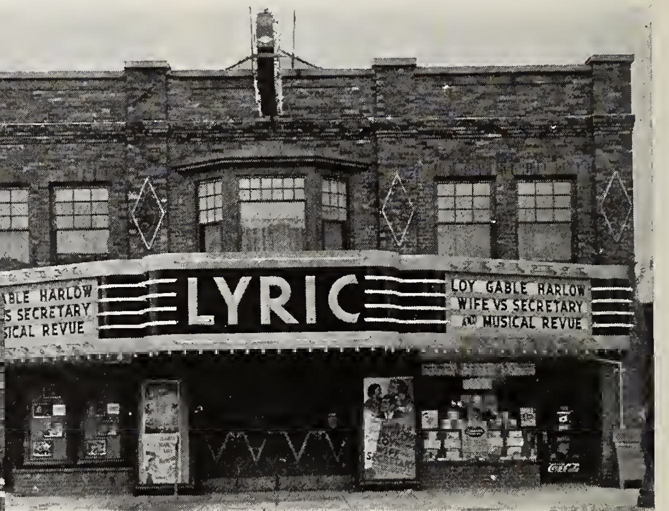
Parts used are similar to common radio parts, although heavier and more conservatively rated. By reason of this resemblance, however, it is possible to use radio parts, doubling up, if necessary, upon condensers, resistors, etc. The power transformers are the only parts that cannot easily be replaced in almost any American community.

Microphone input suited to sensitive microphones is included in the same unit, as well as volume control, and a changeover switch that transfers sound between projectors by switching the exciter lamps current.

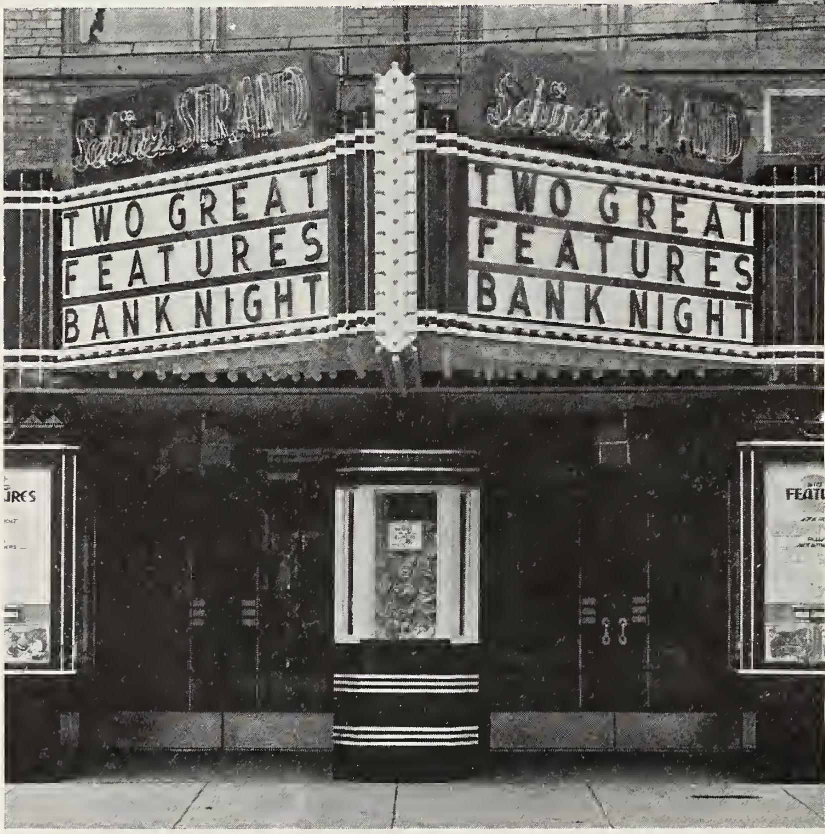
The electronic equalizer is electrically designed to permit operation with 16- or 35-millimeter sound tracks.

The same small, light amplifier-power supply unit forms the basis of a portable sound system which weighs less than 50 pounds. Two dynamic speakers are included, the whole mounted in a single, small carrying case, 17x17x7 inches. The speakers derive their field excitation from the amplifier unit. Installation and taking down are facilitated by plug-and-jack type connections, using multiple-prong plugs that provide sure and trouble-free contact.

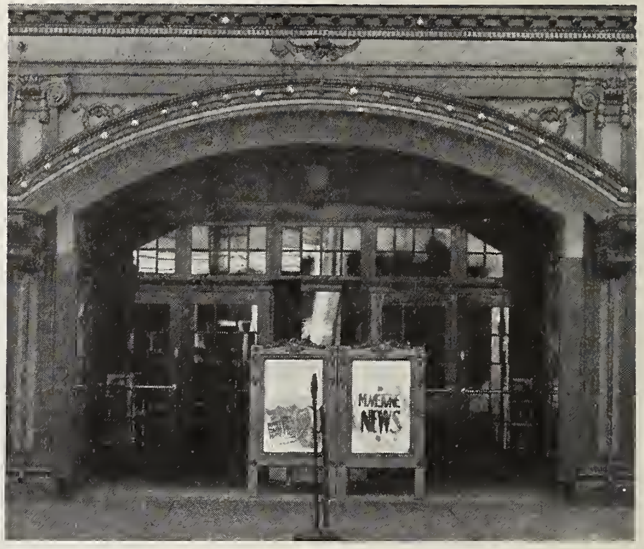
Varied Styles of Unit-Type Marquees Recently Installed



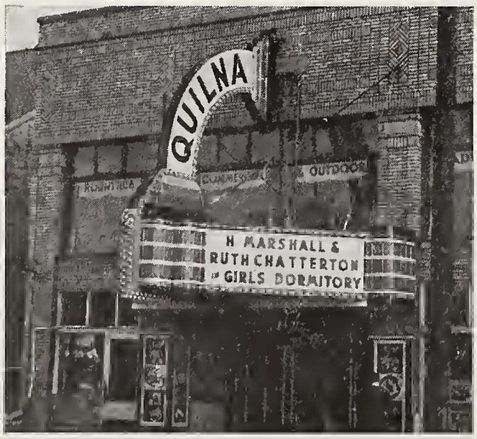
New marquee installation of the Lyric theatre, Lapeer, Mich.



The front of the Strand in Delaware, Ohio, after remodeling.



The Strand in Delaware before remodeling.



New Marquee of the Quilna theatre, Lima, Ohio.

MORE RECENT developments in the design and construction of prefabricated marquees and sign work, for unit installation, have extended this method of marquee manufacture and erection to a greater variety. Several types installed during the last few months by the Artkraft Sign Company of Lima, Ohio, are shown in the accompanying photographs.

Among the pictures are views of the Strand theatre in Delaware, Ohio, a Schine circuit house. This installation was part of a modernization job which included general revision of the front. This theatre is shown both before and after remodeling. The marquee in this case is of combination rectangular and triangular type, with V-shaped central portion. Attraction board and sign work are integral with the marquee and part of the unit installation.

A marquee not of the usual Artkraft V-shape type is that pictured on the Lyric theatre in Lapeer, Mich. This marquee was especially modified so as to have a rounded central element in accordance with the wishes of the theatre owner.

The installation on the Quilna theatre in Lima, Ohio, shows an interesting method of combining the theatre name sign with the marquee in a structure of relatively small dimensions.

Augmenting the Artkraft line of theater front elements are porcelain enamel units for architectural treatment of the entrance area, including extruded aluminum poster frames.

Reducing Theft And Liability Insurance Rates

cently in a Midwestern theatre. The porcelain handle of a water faucet was split. A woman patron took hold of it vigorously, pulled and cut her hand severely.

Exhibitors can reduce their individual premiums on public liability only as they improve the general experience by taking reasonable precautions. By not taking such precautions they have produced a state of affairs in which some theatres cannot even buy liability protection. Every precaution taken by the exhibitor eventually will result in a premium reduction.

CAUSES OF INJURIES

Although modern theatres require few recommendations, according to insurance engineers (except on maintenance conditions) the depression has caused individual theatre owners to make false economies. The most frequent causes of preventable theatre accidents which are legitimate and not staged, are (1) improper lighting, (2) torn and worn carpets, (3) slick-floored foyers, (4) waxed floors (they should never be waxed), (5) broken floors or steps, and (6) defective seats, especially the veneer sort which are allowed to get in bad condition. All these are problems of maintenance.

Good aisle lights prevent accidents. There is a general laxity among exhibitors in dimming lights too low; a person coming in to get a seat after the show starts slips and falls. In areaways and aisles, or at a set of steps, lights should be strong enough to enable the patron to see clearly.

Steps uneven in width are a source of falls. Insurance engineers regard the ramp as an ideal method of getting patrons up and down, if they are not too steep. It gets rid of crowds in half the time and is much safer. It is impossible to hurry patrons on steps safely.

Especially during the depression, exhibitors have allowed carpets to wear down to the last thread, laying the groundwork for bad accidents, or have neglected to repair a broken tile or corner of cement steps. These cases are hard to handle because they often result in big claims.

Veneer seats, which today are found to any extent only in smaller cities and towns, are a source of trouble. When in poor condition they frequently cause damage to clothing, a patron gets a splinter in a leg, a heavy person sitting down goes on to the floor and suffers an injury likely to lead to a claim. The latter is true of all seats the exhibitor allows to go unrepaired.

Theatres with inclines in the lobby, or even with level tile flooring, should be sure to place rubber mats in the winter. A patron with snow on her shoes comes in, slips on the tile, and gets a nasty fall.

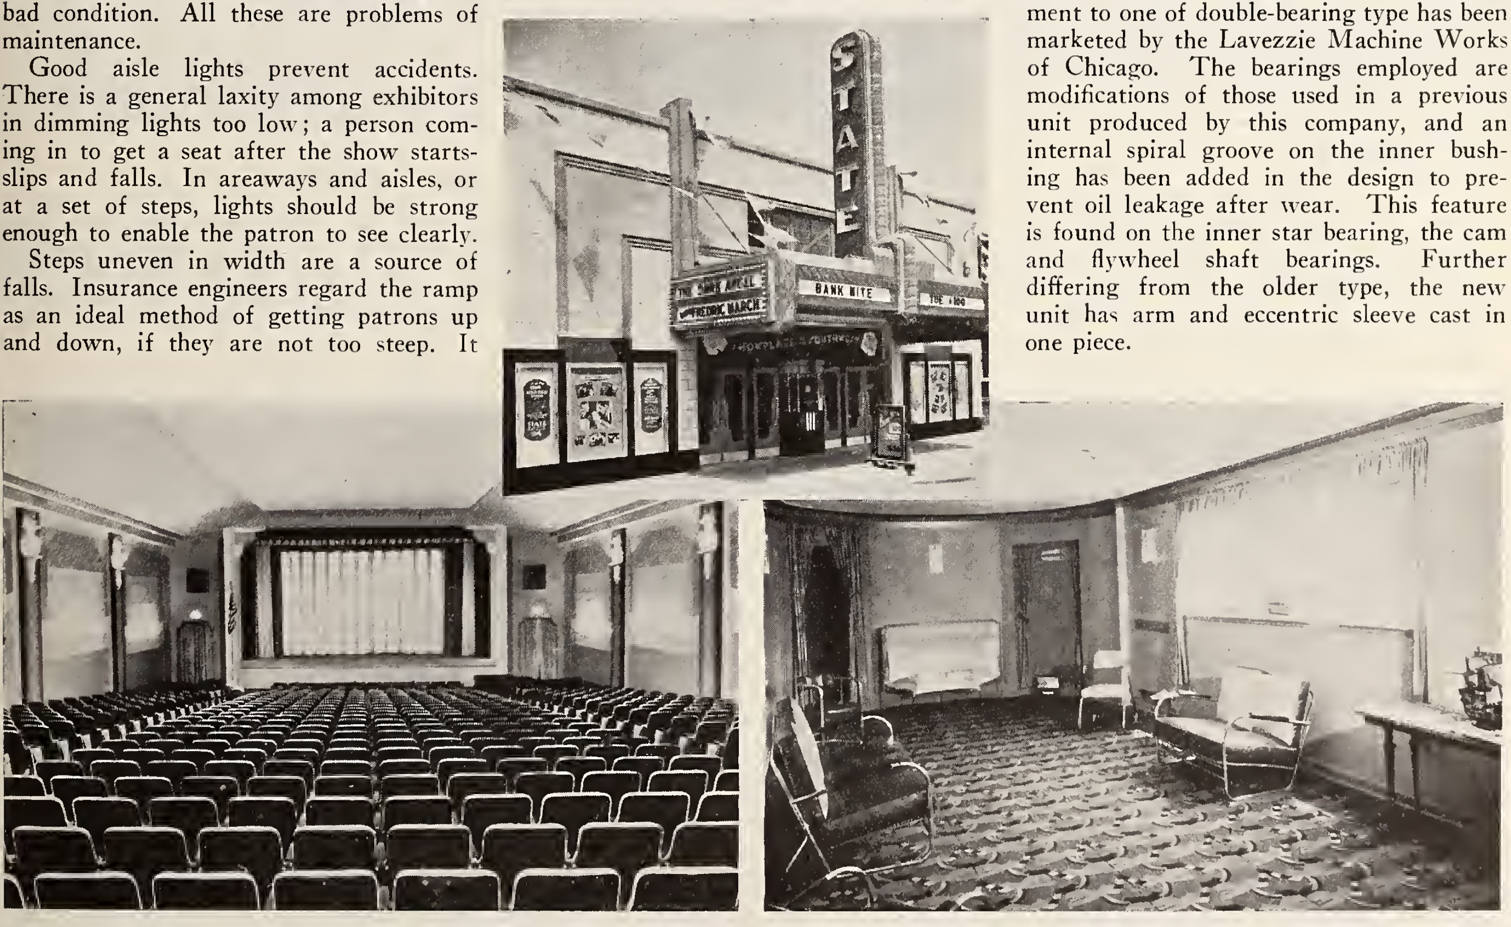
Fans located where patrons can be struck by them if the mechanism gives way, or where a child can reach up and touch it, are bad. Blade fans are not recommended if located where they can be reached.

The important thing is to have repairs made as soon as they are needed. A little of this kind of care can save a theatre hundreds of dollars, and may save thousands. If allowed to go, small things can cause large catastrophes. Within the past year or so two theatres in the Kansas City area narrowly escaped serious consequences. In both instances a leaky roof was not repaired. It rained, the plaster softened, and several days afterward the plaster fell. Fortunately, in both cases the plaster fell during a part of the day when there were no performances. In another instance the roof of a theatre fell in in the morning; the night before there had been 300 people in the house. Had these accidents occurred with patrons present, the exhibitor might easily have found himself ruined with damage claims.

[The author of the above article has been writing insurance on theatres and other film business properties for eighteen years. Because of his friendships among theatre folk, he has analyzed many policies written by others, which has broadened yet further his knowledge of theatre insurance problems. Mr. Jones, who resides in Kansas City, Mo., commenced his discussion in the September 19*th issue, dealing with conditions affecting fire insurance rates.* —THE EDITOR.]

New Bearing Conversion Unit For Intermittent

A NEW unit for converting the single-bearing intermittent movement to one of double-bearing type has been marketed by the Lavezzie Machine Works of Chicago. The bearings employed are modifications of those used in a previous unit produced by this company, and an internal spiral groove on the inner bushing has been added in the design to prevent oil leakage after wear. This feature is found on the inner star bearing, the cam and flywheel shaft bearings. Further differing from the older type, the new unit has arm and eccentric sleeve cast in one piece.



Views of the front, auditorium and lobby-foyer of the new State theatre in Worthington, Minn., owned by Henry Hower. Perry I. Crosier of Minneapolis, was the architect. The State was erected at a cost of $65,000. The auditorium walls and ceiling are finished in patterned Celotex. Walls are divided into panels, separated by plaster pilasters. The side cornices overhang a little, and near them, on each pilaster, is a chrome-nickel bracket light. Equipment and furnishings were supplied by the Western Theatre Supply Company of Omaha, including chairs by the American Seating Company, Mohawk carpeting, "Color-Glow" lighting fixtures, Brenkert Enarc lamps, Kaplan projectors and Baldor rectifiers. The sound system is Western Electric, while the air supply system is by the U. S. Air-Conditioning Corporation. The screen traveler is operated by Vallen curtain control.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE DEPARTMENT DEALING WITH ARCHITECTURAL DESIGN AND MATERIALS, DECORATION AND FURNISHINGS

ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES: One of the principal functions of this department is to answer inquiries pertaining to preliminary considerations in the planning of a new theatre or the remodeling of an existing one. All questions receive the personal attention of Peter M. Hulsken, A.I.A., contributing editor of this department and a practicing architect who long has specialized in theatre design. He will be glad to offer advice, suggestions and criticism. Working plans, however, cannot be supplied. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to Better Theatres, Rockefeller Center, New York. In publishing replies, only initials are used for identification.

THE QUESTION:

WE HAVE BEEN a steady subscriber of your magazine for several years and on several occasions have followed your suggestions on theatre improvement. Our theatre here burned to the ground recently, and before we start rebuilding we wish to get your advice as to seating arrangement in the new building.

The building is, or will be, 50x115 feet. With 23 feet cut off the back end for stage, and 18 feet off the front for lobby, a foyer and two small stores on either side, space for auditorium would be 74x50 feet. Also the balcony in the theatre was 50x35 feet.

What would be the best seating arrangement so as to seat 1,000 people in this theatre? The stage and foyer dimensions can be cut down if necessary, as both were destroyed.—G. R. L.

THE ANSWER:

THE BEST seating arrangement for an auditorium 50 feet wide is to plan for a center section of 14 seats across with aisle on each side, and two wall banks of five seats each across. This will give a total of 24 seats across the width of the auditorium. The depth of 74 feet for seating space will allow for 29 rows of seats, making the maximum seating capacity of the lower floor 696 seats.

The balcony seating space of 50x35 feet, provided it can be all used for seats and no deduction will have to be made for cross-aisle or stairs, allows for 13 rows; so, the maximum seating capacity in balcony will be 312, making the total seating capacity 1008 seats.

THE QUESTION:

I AM PLANNING to install a theatre in a building 40 feet by 90 feet with a 17-foot ceiling. This building has a full cement basement.

Would you kindly give me some idea as to the most practical arrangement of seats, box office, foyer, rest rooms, projection booth, screen and stage. Will one or two aisles be necessary? What is the standard floor pitch?

What State department would one write to for State fire laws? Especially about the installation of the projection booth. This information will be greatly appreciated.—K. D. H.

THE ANSWER:

THE TICKET office should be placed in the center of the building at sidewalk line with a double entrance door on each side. Place entrance doors back, flush with back of ticket office, so that they do not project beyond building line when open.

This will provide for a lobby 15 feet wide, and it should be at least 12 feet deep. On each side of lobby will be ample room for men's and women's retiring rooms, stairs to projection room, and a manager's office. The retiring rooms should be entered from foyer or cross-aisle, which should be at least 6 feet wide.

The seats should be arranged with a center bank of 14 chairs across the width of auditorium with aisle on each side, and two wall banks of two chairs across. It will be necessary to provide for two aisles as the building law requires that not more than six seats may be passed to reach aisles.

I doubt that the depth of your theatre is sufficient to allow for a stage, but you should plan for a platform about 10 feet wide.

The maximum seating capacity will be 360 seats.

The slope in the auditorium floor should not be less than 3 feet. The projection room should be located over lobby and there will be space left for storage rooms.

To obtain a building code covering theatre building, you may write to the Department of Labor, probably located in the State Office Building in the Capital of your State.

THE QUESTION:

I AM ENCLOSING a sketch of the first floor and balcony of a store building. The balcony is in the rear of the store. I am thinking of converting it into a theatre. However, I do not wish to go to the expense of slanting floor at the present time. I thought perhaps of using the rear entrance on the side street for the main entrance and utilizing the balcony for some seats and for erecting the projection booth, and also using the toilet of the adjoining store for the ladies room. The adjoining store at the present time is vacant also.

I also thought of making another doorway 4 feet wide next to the existing 4-foot door on the side of the building and putting in a sort of a curved wall as shown by the dotted lines in sketch. What do you think of the idea of a side entrance for a theatre, and a theatre without a slanting floor? About how many seats could I get in the main floor, and how many on the balcony?

I would like to have Nu-Wood panels in the auditorium. What size, and how many would you suggest for good sound? What would the approximate cost of the remodeling be? What would the approximate cost of slanting the floor be? Any suggestions about the arrangement will be appreciated.—W. L.

THE ANSWER:

TO BE FRANK with you, I certainly would not build a theatre without a sloping floor and with a side entrance, when your building is well adapted to a front entrance lobby.

You can plan for a stage where you intend to have the balcony. After allowing 10 feet for lobby, and 6 feet for cross-aisle or foyer, there will be space left for 22 rows of seats, giving a total seating capacity of 264 seats.

I think it is more important to cover the ceiling with Nu-Wood tiles than the side walls. The rear walls should also be covered; but the side could be treated at spaces between panels, and a 3-foot margin between panel top and ceiling.

Not being familiar with your local conditions, I advise you to consult a local contractor to obtain estimates of cost for this remodeling.

inches. Should anything be done to them? Also the walls are of brick and plastered. Should they be draped, and what should be used for draping? The walls are yellow. Should the drapes be contrasting?

The floor at present is level. The auditorium is 40 feet wide and 50 feet to the stage. We would like to have a 3-foot ramp. Is this about the right amount? We plan a seating capacity of 500.—H. G.

THE ANSWER:

THIS DEPARTMENT is not permitted to provide plans or sketches, but will gladly give you the information asked for in your inquiry.

Your sketch of the new plan, showing seating capacity, is very satisfactory and a great improvement over the old plan. It would be well to furr out the steel beams which now project below the ceiling, and to cover them with sound tiles.

Another good suggestion is to provide on each side wall, three drape panels. These panels should be about 8 feet wide. Lighting fixtures could be placed in the center of the spaces between the drape panels. The panels can be formed by a casing 5 inches wide. For draping materials I suggest a gold silk back, and a valance and side swabs of brocade or rusk.

A 3-foot slope should be all right.

According to your sketch the auditorium is only 50 feet deep. The seating capacity of the lower floor will be 400. I cannot see how you expect to get 500 seats in such a small area.

I do not notice on your sketches that any provision has been made for men's and women's retiring rooms. Why not place them on each side of lobby?

A ceiling height of 7 feet in the lobby is not high enough. It should be at least 8 feet, 6 inches. Hence, if the projection room is located above the lobby, it will have to be raised.

I also fail to notice what provision has been made to enter balconies. I assume they start from auditorium floor as in a stadium type theatre.

A good color scheme for the lobby would be blue walls with canary yellow ceiling, or tangerine walls with blue ceiling.

public spaces in palatial hotels or in the principal rooms of fine residences, on the walls of a theatre auditorium, would be an unwarranted extravagance. Effectiveness of pattern, coloring, texture and the appearance of richness are what count at the distance at which auditorium walls are seen, and an inexpensive fabric serves the purpose. The fabric used, however, must be so woven that it will not sag out of shape after it is on the walls. Some of the less expensive fabrics are entirely satisfactory in this respect, while some that cost considerably more are not. The fabrics for motion picture theatre auditorium walls are in a class by themselves, made for decorative effectiveness and for firmness of weave at low cost. Fabrics for this purpose should be bought from a reliable dealer who is familiar with the requirement of theatres, or they should be furnished by a contractor who is experienced in theatre work.

DECORATIVE SCHEMES

The walls of an auditorium covered with a decorative fabric may be divided into wide horizontal panels by bands of plaster ornament, say, from 9 inches to 12 inches wide. This forms directional lines that carry the eye towards the screen, which is desirable. This also tends to reduce the apparent height of the ceiling in a theatre auditorium that is high, as it is where there is a balcony.

But of course there are many other ways. In a recently modernized theatre that has a huge auditorium, an effect of relative intimacy has been achieved with fabrics. The proscenium has been draped and a canopy of drapery has been carried out on the ceiling. This treatment extends along the front part of the side walls well into the auditorium. The remainder of the side walls has been treated with fabrics also, panels of patterned fabric alternating with plain fabric hung in folds. The walls in the rear of the auditorium, too, are covered with fabric. This has transformed the theatre, giving it a friendly air and great richness of effect.

In almost any theatre auditorium, the wall treatment may well be divided into three sections, according to the difference in functions. The walls in the front part, near the screen, need to be in a dark rich color and relatively plain, so that they will absorb the light reflected upon them from the screen and will not distract attention from the picture by presenting a too-assertive pattern. The part of the walls extending from the front section just mentioned, back to the front line of the balcony, may have a more distinct pattern and may be of lighter color. This is the main part of the wall surface. As it is large, it should be rather quiet in design and coloring so that it will not be obtrusive.

The rear, from the front line of the balcony back to and including the rear wall of the auditorium, is the part that may be more lively in its wall treatment, both in pattern and coloring. This part welcomes the incoming patrons. It can be less dimly lighted without interfering with a satisfactory view of the picture, consequently the decorations can be seen better than in the rest of the auditorium.

If the main part of the side walls is patterned, the front section should be in a plain fabric, so that there will not be a clash of patterns. But if the side walls are in fabric showing horizontal stripes of graded tones or in some other simple geometrical design, the fabric in the front section may be patterned. In the rear section a large plaid, or something else that will not clash, is best if the side walls are patterned. A patterned fabric can well be used here if the side walls are plain or merely striped horizontally, or if they show only an indistinct, small, all-over pattern.

The size of the pattern used should correspond to the size of the auditorium. In the smaller theatres a pattern of moderate or small scale should be employed. In a narrow theatre a pattern of widely spaced, small figures may be used to advantage, sometimes for openness of effect.

A smart idea that is being used in some of the new motion picture theatres is to grade the coloring of a plain fabric on the auditorium walls from a dark, rich color near the picture screen through progressively lighter and brighter shades to a light, lively color at the rear. This is done by dyeing the fabric so that the gradation of color is smooth and continuous from front to rear. Putting on widths of different shades next to each other would not produce this effect, because there would be marked changes from one strip to the next at the seams. The fabric is colored especially for the particular theatre. In some cases a single color is used—for example, a wine-red near the screen, grading through lighter and less bluish shades of red along the walls to a soft red running into a lighter brownish yellow red at the rear.

A plain fabric of very bold texture, such as monk's cloth, is an excellent wall covering for the smaller auditorium. It comes in a good neutral gray. Plain pilasters in wood veneer of light color may be used to divide the walls into panels. In the front, a plain dark fabric may be used, preferably blue or wine color. In the rear the walls may be covered with a printed linen having a bold design in various bright colors on a natural linen color ground. The introduction of color at the front and rear will give the requisite liveliness and will be all the more effective in contrast with the plain neutral fabric on the main wall surfaces. Monk's cloth is of moderate price. The plain colored fabric at the front and the patterned fabric at the rear need not be expensive. Such a treatment carried out in good taste can make a theatre very attractive, especially if the auditorium is of the long narrow type with seating all on one floor.

In the lounge a bold pattern of moderate size and of lively but no gaudy coloring is usually best. It may be a damask, a printed linen, or a hand-loom textured fabric, depending upon the character of the wall covering in the auditorium. A plain or patterned grass cloth, or a texture fabric that can be applied like wall paper, is good.

Some Sound Problems of the Smaller Theatre

● Discussing some of the more significant conditions especially confronting the small theatre operator who wants as good sound as he can afford

By H. W. PARO

SOUND REQUIREMENTS of the small theatre differ greatly from those of the theatre that counts its seats in the upper hundreds and thousands, and are more accurately met by modern apparatus than by any previous equipments, many of which originated as large-theatre systems pared down as far as possible.

The peculiar and separate needs of the smaller theatre in apparatus as well as in cost are better met today than ever in the past. Portable tent and town hall motion picture shows also have their own specific requirements in sound apparatus, which are substantially, but not entirely, identical with those of the small theatre installation.

Seven primary needs of the smaller house, with reference to sound, are observed here, each with respect to cost, size, emergency provisions, maintenance factors, simplicity, sound quality and acoustics.

FACTOR OF COST

While low purchase price is essential to the very small theatre, low installation expense is equally vital. The practical method of meeting this second requirement is to arrange to have all wiring and interconnections made, so far as possible, in the factory under conditions of mass production, and as little as possible by the local electrical contractor. There are advantages as well as drawbacks to the sound system composed of units made by a number of manufacturers, each unit serving a different function, but the utmost in economy is achieved by the apparatus in which all operations are combined, so far as possible, within the mechanism of a single cabinet.

Where theatre connections remain to be made, as between amplifier and soundheads, and amplifier and screen speakers, special cables and connection blocks will simplify and facilitate even these small details of installation.

PHYSICAL SIZE

Small physical size, in spite of some drawbacks to be noted hereafter, is not only advantageous but often necessary. Small theatres do not commonly have large projection rooms, and in many cases projection room space is at a premium. Very often, also, space behind the screen is obtained only at the expense of revenue-producing seats, and small physical size is desirable in low speakers as well as in projection room apparatus.

Small physical size, however, is only very slightly related to reduced sound power. With beam power tubes, for example, and 18-inch dynamic speakers of a modern design, small systems can now deliver all the volume needed for small theatres (perhaps enough for quite reasonably large ones).

EMERGENCY PROVISIONS

Small theatres are usually located at a distance from sources of spare parts and engineering service, and are also more likely, as a group, to be subjected to excessive fluctuation of power line voltage than the larger theatres are. In spite of the pressing need for low cost, equipment for the smaller theatre must first of all things be sturdy, capable of standing up under unfavorable conditions of line voltage. Preferably, it should also be designed to use tubes and other replacement parts that are easily available.

MAINTENANCE FACTORS

Maintenance costs and difficulties are greatly reduced by the use of inexpensive component parts, less costly to replace than to patch and nurse along, by use of components readily available, and, again, by sturdiness of construction that in itself eliminates most maintenance questions. Another important maintenance aid is provision for easy testing and checking with common, inexpensive testing appurtenances.

SIMPLICITY OF EQUIPMENT

Original cost, installation cost and maintenance cost and trouble are all reduced by use of the simplest available procedures for producing the required results. Thus, for example, there are definite advantages in multiple speaker systems, in which different banks of speakers operating through filters reproduce different bands of sound frequencies. But the advantages of simplicity lie with the use of dynamic speakers, now readily purchased, that cover the entire band of frequencies photographed on the sound film. Again, better sound is possible with d.c. exciter lamp supply than can be obtained when the exciter lamps are powered with a.c., but the second method eliminates a complete rectifier and filter system, and still delivers sound quality that quite probably may be regarded as adequate under the circumstances.

FACTORS OF COST

In connection with sound quality, it should be remembered that the smaller, more intimate theatre possesses inherent advantages, for which the larger theatre compensates usually only at the cost and trouble of using highly refined apparatus. The smaller theatre, first of all, permits a greater sense of intimacy between the audience and the nearby screen.

The average small theatre has acoustic advantages of no little importance. Sound distribution is usually easy to obtain, even with flat baffles, except possibly in the extreme front corners. Not only the main body of sound, but also the difficult high

Projection-Theatre Groups In Tribute to F. H. Richardson

With the appointment of 22 committees representing the field of projection generally, even to the extent of a Canadian group, the American Projection Society's plans for the celebration of "Richardson Week," in honor of F. H. Richardson, call for an inaugural banquet and entertainment at midnight, October 24, and an exhibit of "pioneer" projection equipment to be conducted for six days thereafter.

During this period, other groups will gather at table in further recognition, on the occasion of his 70th birthday anniversary, of Mr. Richardson's three decades of service in the interests of "better projection." At noon Tuesday, October 27, the International Projector Corporation and National Theatre Supply Company will join in honoring Mr. Richardson at a luncheon. The following day there is to be an "old-timers' " luncheon, and on Wednesday Mr. Richardson will be the honor guest at a luncheon given by Quigley Publications.

All the social affairs and the exhibit will be held at the Pennsylvania Hotel in New York, where Mr. Richardson, who lives in suburban Scarsdale, will be domiciled during his "Week" as the guest of Quigley Publications.

The American Projection Society, through Wallace Byrne, its president, has invited all persons connected with the motion picture theatre who can attend, to that organization's testimonial banquet the night of October 24. The subscription price is $5 per person, and reservations are to be addressed to Anthony Rugino, treasurer. In a formal announcement, Mr. Byrne thus addresses those whom he would have the guests of the A. P. S. on that occasion:

"F. H. Richardson is to projection what Thomas A. Edison was to Science; C. Francis Jenkins to Television, and S. L. Rothafel to theatrical genius, and is, as were these distinguished gentlemen, an honorary member of our society.

"He, through his indomitable will and his everlasting quest for 'Perfection in Projection,' is responsible, more than any other single force, for the vast improvement in projection today over what it was when he entered the field, more than three decades ago.

"This, then, will be truly an occasion, so often commented upon and so seldom brought to realization, when we shall be presenting bouquets while the recipient is still capable of enjoying the fragrance."

The general chairman of "Richardson Week" is George Edwards, past-president of the A. P. S. Will C. Smith of the National Theatre Supply Company, is secretary. The various committees appointed are headed by the following:

Arrangements, Alfred R. T. Bishop, chairman; Frank McMahon, secretary; Anthony Rugino, treasurer.

Past-Presidents' committee, Joseph D. Basson, chairman.

Society of Motion Picture Engineers, Dr. A. N. Goldsmith, chairman.

Exhibitors committee, George Skouras, chairman.

frequencies, are much more easily delivered to each seat in correct proportions, and the need for elaborate speaker, and for speaker baffles systems, does not exist to nearly the same degree as in more elaborate auditoriums. Dead spots and loud spots are rarer, echo almost unknown.

One consideration of importance in connection with acoustics is the comparative ease and low cost with which necessary corrections can be made in the small and simple auditorium. Very often a reasonable quantity of drapes, strategically distributed, will yield wholly satisfactory results. Such treatment is out of place and impossible in the larger and more elaborate interior, which is often handicapped by architectural features requiring special and difficult treatment. In the small auditorium, in fact, addition of a reasonably good tone control will often (though of course not always) provide all the acoustic correction really needed.

The sound problems of the traveling picture show closely resemble those of the average small theatre, but there are some additional features of portable work and needs that call for special consideration. Simplicity and compactness, for easy setting up and easy demounting, acquire vital importance. Size and relatively light weight also become prime factors.

PORTABLE EQUIPMENT

Sturdiness of construction must be stressed, not only to enable the apparatus to survive the abuse of constant transportation, but to permit it to stand up under the widely varying power line conditions that must encounter night after night.

Requirements as to quality are easier to meet, since portable amplifiers and speakers are capable of delivering the same quality as the smaller fixed apparatus, and portable sound projectors, either 16-mm. or 35-mm., give very satisfactory results, with the advantage, of course, strongly in favor of 35-mm.

Acoustical conditions in tents present some difficulty, since the tent is likely to have too little reverberation for acceptable brilliance, but the show that travels from one town hall or school auditorium to another is, naturally, even more strongly handicapped so far as acoustic conditions go.

For acoustical correction portable sound apparatus should be equipped with thoroughly effective tone controls that will permit the utmost correction possible at the amplifier for the unfavorable surroundings in which it is obliged to operate.

F. H. RICHARDSON'S COMMENT

• • AND ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES •

F H Richardson

IS EMPHASIS ON SOUND OBSCURING THE PICTURE?

THE RESEARCH COUNCIL of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences announces that approximately every 60 days the sound department heads of many, if not all, major studios, together with their principal assistants, will meet in another series of periodical projections of selected reels from each studio to provide for each department head a basis for comparing the product of his own studio with that of other studios.

That appeals to me as an excellent, very practical idea; also, as one that should have results beneficial to the entire industry. But it brings to mind the fact that we seldom, if ever, hear of any such proceedings with regard to visual matters. Granting the high importance of excellence in sound, still it is no degree more important than similar excellence visually, concerning which there seems in these later days a tendency to neglect.

It is quite true that, by comparison with the picture, sound is a youngster. It perhaps deserves more care, attention and, upon occasion, spanking. Still that is no justification for neglect of its elder brother, the image.

Sound and image can only be judged by what theatre audiences hear and see from day to day. That is the "pay-off" on the whole business, and may I suggest that from the viewpoint of the ultimate buyer of the goods our industry has to sell, visual projection too often cries for improvement.

It would seem the Research Council might well expend some of its energy investigating the many visual sins tens of thousands of theatre patrons have spread before them every day. It and the Society of Motion Picture Engineers might, for example, establish a maximum viewing angle from the front theatre auditorium seats, and make some real effort to educate theatre owners concerning the evils of a too-large screen image at a too-short viewing distance.

Unless I am in error, some such maximum viewing angle recommendation does lie buried deep down in past proceedings of the SMPE; if so, a decent tombstone should be erected in its commemoration, since no effort has ever been made to make it effective.

As a matter of fact, sound equipment sales and servicing have so far topped visual equipment sales that sound equipment manufacturers and their service engineers have, very possibly without intent, shoved visual matters into the background.

Pushing, exploiting and improving sound is excellent—no criticism on it whatever. There still is plenty of room for improvement. However, let us not for one instant forget visual problems and their high importance. Excellence in sound and image walk hand in hand. There are just as many problems connected with one as with the other. And faults in either one works injury to the performance as a whole. Let's not forget that we are selling motion pictures.

THE PRESSURE OF COMMUTATOR BRUSHES

JOHN L. GRANGER of Prescott, Ariz., asks, "Will you be kind enough to advise as to what pressure commutator brushes should have and how it may be measured. Also please advise as to just what is the difference between the ordinary carbon, high-intensity and Suprex."

There seems to be considerable difference of opinion as to what correct brush pressure upon the commutator should be. It is of course considered in pressure per square inch. One authoritative text book places it at from 1.33 to 3 pounds per square inch, which seems excessive. A booklet of instructions on motors and generators places it at 1.5 to 2.5 per square inch.

In compiling the new Bluebook of Projection I accepted the dictum of the Hertner Electric Company, as expressed through its president, John Hertner. It was by that company placed at 1.25 to 1.5 pounds per square inch, which surely should be sufficient to effect good contact, assuming other things to be in good order, without such pressure as will not only generate unnecessary heat by friction, but also excessive wear. This of course is intended to apply to such motors and generators as are in use in theatre projection work.

As to methods of measurement of brush pressure, I refer you to your Bluebook of Projection for a lengthy discussion of this matter. However, one reasonable accurate method is to secure some sort of spring scale, made to measure light weights so that the scale graduation will not be too fine. By any suitable convenient means, attach it to the element that provides brush pressure, at the point of its contact with the brush and by means of it lift the said element just out of contact with the commutation. This will provide the value of pressure applied to the entire brush. It then is only necessary to calculate the full area contacting with the commutator, and perform a simple arithmetical calculation to ascertain the pressure per square inch. If, for example, the total pressure be one pound and the contact area 2 square inches, the pressure per square inch would of course be, one divided by two equals one half-pound per square inch.

As to your carbon inquiry, I must respectfully decline to answer. It is our wish to help, but your query involves many things, some of them trade secrets. This much I can say: Broadly the differences are in materials and chemicals contained in the carbon core. For further information I must of necessity refer you to the carbon manufacturers themselves.

A FUNNY CASE OF IMAGE JITTERS

FROM CALIFORNIA comes request for advice upon what seems to be a most unusual trouble. It seems there is a slight movement in the screen image as a whole, up and down at each revolution of the intermittent sprocket. It is in one of the projectors only and ordinarily would most certainly be due to either a bent sprocket shaft, an intermittent sprocket not properly fitted upon its shaft, or to dirt upon the face of the sprocket.

But all this is apparently blocked out by the fact that the movement complained of only shows up after the mechanism has warmed up. It is not present when it is cold. It starts at about the second reel. The trouble appeared about four months ago.

I'll admit I'm stumped on this one. Have asked the projector manufacturer to try his hand on it and now ask our readers to make any suggestion they may be able to. The projectionist has an idea the tension shoes have something to do with it, but I am unable to see how that could possibly be. What's your idea?

STUDY IS GOOD FOR ANY PROJECTIONIST

HOUSTON JONES, projectionist of Mancos, Col., writes, "Have examined the Bluebook pretty thoroughly now. Am satisfied it is the best investment I ever made in connection with projection. Its per-page cost is less than one cent, yet each page will be worth easily ten times that much through improved results induced by its use.

"A book such as it is of even greater value to projectionists holding positions such as mine than it is to city men, because we do not have the sources of information available to them. They are able to profit from the experiences of others. They have libraries to consult, and when trouble occurs engineers are available. But the men in smaller cities and towns (we are 300 miles from the nearest city) must depend upon their ingenuity and what can be learned from books and magazines. That is one reason why I appreciate the Bluebook so highly. In closing may I thank you for the help you have given me, other than through the Bluebook."

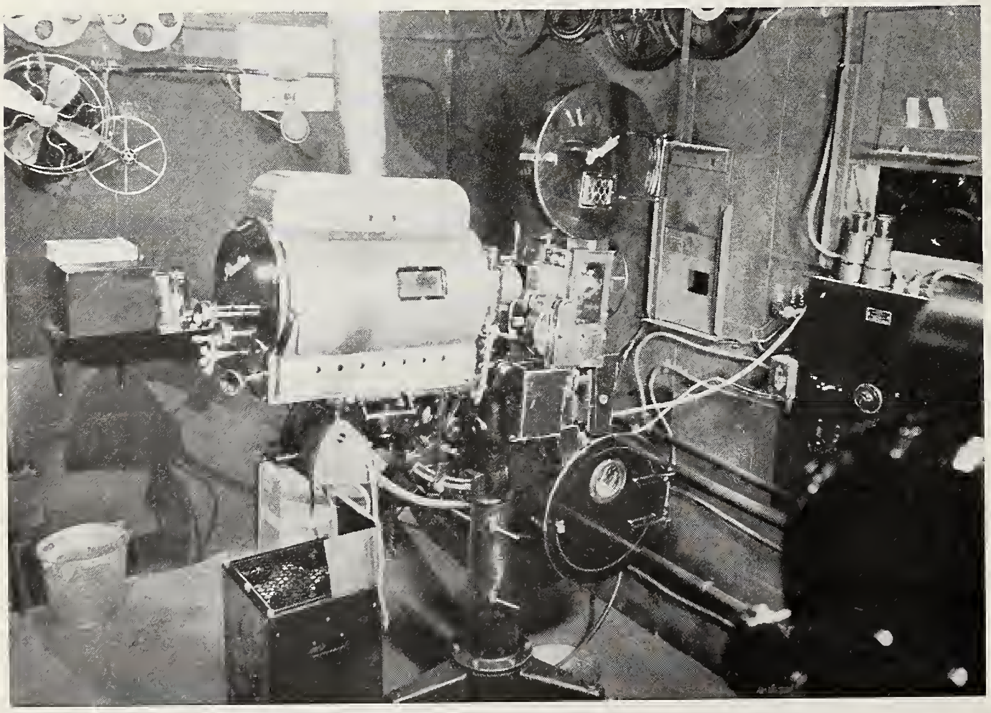
What Friend Jones says is quite true. But the fact remains that many large city projectionists would profit did they study more. Men may become very good projectionists, then drop back more or less for the simple reason that they don't see the necessity for further study.

AN OLD FRIEND IN A NEW THEATRE

FROM Joseph L. Thomas of the Queen's theatre in Hespeler, a small city about 60 miles west of Toronto, Ontario, comes this interesting letter:

"Good morning, Father! First, I will sincerely apologize for not having written sooner. From the stationery you may see we are pretty well hidden from the outside world. I was in the Empire theatre, Windsor, Ontario, where we installed the equipment and operated it until the house was finally turned over to a large theatre circuit organization at a price. This theatre had been dark since the coming of sound. The former manager of the Empire at Windsor, who is now my partner, had me come up and look it over. We opened March 6 and have been working on it ever since.

"This was the first time I had had free rein in rebuilding and refitting a theatre. Money was not exactly limited, but close buying was nevertheless necessary. We had the projector mechanisms rebuilt and brought up-to-date with rear shutters and a new pair of low-intensity lamps. Installed a new screen, smeared paint and decorations all over the place and—well, Dad, it has been no vacation, but we have something well worthwhile. There have been no paydays for either of us yet, but we'll have 'em just the same.



This projection room snapshot was sent in by James Dowdell, projectionist of the Lane theatre in CleElum, Wash. In a note accompanying the picture he writes, "My projection room is rather small and this photo is the best I could do. I want to call your attention to the book just below the fan on the wall. You're right—it's the sixth edition of the Bluebook of Projection. My projection equipment is two Simplex projectors, Masterphone sound, Peerless low-intensity lamps, Garver 30-ampere rectifiers. My main amplifier panel, rewind and work bench, film cabinet and non-sync equipment I had to leave out of the photo. The entire room is painted a flat black."

"The theatre has 500 seats, all veneer. Stage is 20 feet deep by 30 wide; square-cornered proscenium; grid 40x28. Drapes are burgundy plush. Projection distance is 93 feet. We use 40 amperes with a 16 and 8-mm. carbon combination. Have about 6.5 foot-candles with projector running without film. Projectors Simplex A, with the old type 3-point pedestals. General Electric motor-generator set, 80 amperes capacity. Sound is Cleveland 25-cycle, all a.c.

"The projection room is constructed of 3-inch tile, plastered in rough sand finish. Cream ceiling and walls to within 4 feet of the floor, pea green from there down, with a 2-inch dividing line of black between the two colors. Floor is gray. Lighting is, of course, indirect. Room is 12 feet square—as large as was possible—with a 7.5-foot ceiling. Ventilation is by a 22-inch fan set 48 inches above the ceiling line in a 27-inch square duct that connects with a 20-inch galvanized iron pipe leading to the open air. There also is an open-mouth head with a rudder top. This insures circulation of air without the fan, which is used only when necessary for comfort. The projector light sources are vented to the large pipe. There is a 6x12-foot rewind room opening right off the main room. Projection angle is about 4°.

"Gosh, Dad, looking all that over, I'm afraid you will think I am trying to sell you the place, but really I'm just alibi-ing myself for not having written before. We, of course, subscribe to the MOTION PICTURE HERALD and BETTER THEATRES. May I express high appreciation for all you have, through the HERALD and BETTER THEATRES, done for me in the past. In closing, may I wish for your continued success in all your endeavors, which goes double for the HERALD and BETTER THEATRES."

I am sure my readers enjoy descriptions of this kind. Incidentally I am advised that through the efforts of my old friend, Harry Dobson, chief inspector of theatres for Ontario, all projection rooms hereafter installed in Ontario must be air-conditioned, which is good. Certainly no place in a theatre needs air-conditioning more than the projection room.
